II. Whether, keeping before one's eyes the genuine idea of the Apostolic Office and St. Paul's undoubted fidelity to the teaching of the Master; likewise, the Catholic dogma regarding the inspiration and inerrancy of the Scriptures, whereby all that the sacred writer (hagiographus) asserts, enunciates, suggests must be held to be asserted, enunciated, suggested by the Holy Ghost; also, being weighed the texts of the Apostle's Epistles, considered in themselves, which are before all in harmony with the speech of the Lord Himself, it is meet to affirm that the Apostle Paul in his writings certainly said nothing which is not in perfect harmony with that ignorance of the time of the "Parousia" which Christ Himself proclaimed to be men's portion?

Reply. In the affirmative.

III. Whether, attention being paid to the Greek phrase ἡμεῖς οἱ ζῶντες οἱ περιπατοῦντες, also the explanation of the Fathers being weighed, especially that of St. John Chrysostom, who was highly versed both in his country's language and in the Pauline Epistles, it is lawful to reject as far fetched and destitute of solid foundation, the interpretation traditional in the Catholic schools (also retained by the reformers of the sixteenth century themselves), which explain the words of St. Paul in chapter IV of the 1 Epistle to the Thesalonians, vv. 15-17 without in anywise implying the affirmation of a "Parousia" so imminent that the Apostle added himself and his readers to those of the faithful who should survive to meet Christ?

Reply. In the negative.

Passau, DIOCESE OF (PASSAVIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-519b), in Bavaria, suffragan of Munich-Freising. The present administrator is Rt. Rev. Sigismund Felix de Ow-Felldorf, b. at Berchtesgaden, 13 October, 1855, ordained 25 July, 1884, elected auxiliary Bishop of Ratisbon 8 January, 1902, consecrated 24 February following, transferred 18 October, 1906, enthroned 6 March, 1907. The diocese is divided into a city deanery and 22 rural deaneries. In 1921 it contained 259 parishes, 72 benefices and exposituren, 550 churches, 632 priests of whom 259 are pastors, and 45 in diocesan educational institutions (these include those stationed at the cathedral), 86 regulars, 92 lay brothers, 1 diocesan seminary with 55 seminarians and a preparatory seminary at Passau. The schools and institutions are all supported by the government. The State institutions include: a technical school (hochschule) for men, 16 high schools (höhere schulen) with 11 teachers, 380 elementary schools, 2 mission-schools. Since 1911 the following orders of men have established themselves in the diocese: Salesians,

3 houses, at Passau; Freyung and Burghausen; Salvatorians, 1 house at Griesbach and the Benedictines at Niederaltach. The principal association among the clergy is the Association of Priests of the Diocese. Among the laity the following associations are formed: Catholic Women's League, Catholic Merchants' Association and Catholic Women Clerks' Association. The principal Catholic paper published in the diocese is the "Donauzeitung."

Pasto, DIOCESE OF (PASTENSIS, PASTOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI-537d), suffragan of Bogota, Colombia. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Antonio Maria Pueyo de Val, C. M. F., b. 1864, elected 1917. The Catholic population is 315,640, and there are 41,000 infidels, 68 parishes, 90 secular priests, 23 regular priests, 133 churches and chapels.

Pastor (cf. C. E., XI-537d) — All dioceses are now to be divided into parishes and where this has been done the pastors, technically rectors, have become parish priests. The rectors of parishes are permanent, yet all of them may be removed under certain conditions laid down in the sacred canons; the same degree of stability not being granted to all, some of the rectors are called removable and the other irremovable, which expressions are often used in speaking of the parish itself. While the parish may be declared irremovable by the bishop, once it has been done it cannot be rendered removable except by permission of the Holy See. Those who rule quasi-parishes and parochial vicars enjoying full parochial powers are included under the title parish priest in canon law and have the rights and duties of parish priests (except that the obligation of saying Mass for the parishioners is limited to eleven feasts, an exemption granted also to rectors of parishes subject to Propaganda. Occasionally a moral person, such as a cathedral chapter or a religious house becomes a parochus with leave of the Holy See, in which case the actual cure of souls is entrusted to a vicar. The parochial pastor must now be a priest; this abolishes a former practice by which a cleric could receive a benefice with cure of souls annexed, on condition of his receiving the priesthood within a year. A religious who is a parish priest is always removable at the will of the local ordinary or of his superior according to the constitutions of his order; each of these must give notice, but need not state his reasons, to the other; an appeal against the removal may be made to the Holy See with devolutive effect.

Parish priests are nominated and instituted by the local ordinary, except for parishes reserved to the Holy See; all customs contrary to this have been reprobated while respecting all lawful privileges of election or presentation. If the episcopal see is vacant or impeded and a rector dies the vicar capitular or other ruler of the diocese should appoint a parochial vicar but not a parish priest unless the see has been vacant a year. Quasi-parish priests are appointed by the local ordinary, with the advice of his council, from his own secular clergy. A vacant parish is to be filled within six months by the local ordinary, unless he decides that owing to special circumstances the time should be extended. He should appoint the priest who is best qualified for the position; to decide this point he is to consult the diocesan records, take note of the examinations of the priests in the years immediately following their course of studies, and with his synodal examiners is to hold another examination, from which, however, with the consent of the synodal examiners, he can exempt priests of known theological ability. If a parish priest is transferred at the suggestion of the bishop, a new examination is not required; if the change is made at his own request, it is optional for the bishop to order it; if the change is a forced removal no examination is held. Where the system of concursum is in vogue it is to be continued till the Holy See provides otherwise. A parish priest should have only one parish, except where parishes have been united æque principaliter; no parish may have more than one parish priest having cure of souls, all customs to the contrary being reprobated and all privileges to the contrary withdrawn. A parish priest obtains his cure of souls from the moment he takes canonical possession of his parish, before or at which time he must make the profession of faith prescribed by the sacred canons.

The following duties are reserved to parish priests, unless the law in certain instances has provided otherwise: to administer solemn baptism; to carry Holy Communion publicly to the sick in his parish; to bring the Viaticum publicly or privately to the sick and to administer extreme unction (except to bishops, to those resident in houses of clerical religious or of nuns with solemn vows, or of lay religious if exempted by the bishop); to announce ordinations or proclaim banns of marriage; to assist at marriages, and give the nuptial blessing; to hold funeral services; to bless houses according to the ritual on Easter Saturday or other days if customary; to bless the baptismal font on Easter Saturday, to lead public processions outside of the Church, and to give blessings with pomp and solemnity outside of the Church, except where a chapter performs these functions in connection with its church. A parish priest is entitled to the statutory or sanctioned customary fees for voluntary acts of jurisdiction or on the occasion of administering certain sacraments; if he exacts more he is bound to restitution; if any one performs such duties for him the parish priest is entitled to the fees, even to any surplus over the ordinary amount, unless it is certain that the donor intended the surplus for the actual minister; however, if a party is too poor to pay the parish priest is obliged to give his services. He has care ex officio of all those in his parish who are not exempt (a seminary is exempt), but the bishop for just and grave cause may withdraw from the jurisdiction religious houses and pious places not exempt by law. In virtue of this the bishop may give parochial rights to the chaplains of such places.

A parish priest is bound to reside in the parochial house near his own church; however, the local ordinary may, when there is a just cause, allow him to reside elsewhere, provided the house is not so far from the church as to interfere with the proper discharge of his parochial duties. He is entitled to two months' leave of absence each year as a maximum, whether continuous or interrupted, but the time of his annual retreat is not included in this; the ordinary may, however, for grave reasons prolong or curtail the period of vacation. When the parish priest is absent more than a week he must have the ordinary's written permission, and must provide a substitute approved by him (approval and leave of his superior would also be needed if the parish priest were a religious). If for grave cause the parish priest has been called away suddenly and cannot return within a week he must notify the ordinary as soon as possible, explaining the cause and suggesting a substitute and must hold himself ready to obey orders.

REMOVAL OF PASTORS.—If the bishop thinks that there is a canonical reason for changing an irremovable parish priest, he must first consult any two of the synodal examiners. He then invites the pastor either verbally or by writing to resign (the demand is unnecessary if the priest's mind is affected). The invitation, however, is invalid unless it mentions the cause and the arguments inducing the ordinary to make the request. The latter may allow the priest whatever extension of the time fixed for replying

he judges suitable, provided no spiritual detriment to the faithful results. If the ordinary finds unsatisfactory the reasons given by the priest for declining to resign he must tell him so. The priest has then ten days within which to request a stay in order to bring forward new reasons and the testimony of two or three witnesses which he had been unable to obtain on the previous occasion. The ordinary, taking advice with two parish priests as consultors, must examine these fresh reasons, if they have been presented within ten days from the time of the request for a stay. The final decision rests exclusively with the ordinary, not as formerly with the ordinary and the consultors. The ordinary should endeavor to provide the priest as soon as possible with other parish, office, or benefice, if he is fitted for such, or with a pension if circumstance allow. The priest should leave the parochial house as soon as he can, but if he is infirm and cannot conveniently move, he is to be allowed to remain there during his illness. A removable parish priest may be removed for the same reasons as one who is irremovable; the procedure is similar, except that he is not allowed a second hearing. At times it may seem advisable to an ordinary to transfer to another parish a parish priest who is perfectly satisfactory and exemplary. Special faculties would be necessary to remove an irremovable parish priest against his will, but this is not so if the pastor is removable and the new parish is not notably inferior. The removable priest may, however, set forth his objections in writing for the ordinary; if the latter is unmoved by the objections he must, to proceed validly, call in two parochial consultors and discuss with them the priest's objections, the conditions of the two parishes, and the reasons why he deems the change useful or necessary. If, after hearing the consultors, the ordinary still favors the change he is to advise the priest to yield; should the latter still refuse, the ordinary may notify him in writing that after the lapse of a certain time his present parish is to be vacated, and may declare it vacant when that period has elapsed.

Among the duties which a parish priest must be most careful to fulfil are saying Mass and administering the sacraments, visiting and comforting the sick and dying, preparing children and others for first confession, Holy Communion and confirmation, preaching on Sundays and feasts of precept, explaining the catechism to adults in Sunday sermons, and keeping the church clean and free from unbecoming proceedings, such as sales for pious purposes. If he is gravely careless in these matters the bishop should call his attention to his fault; if he does not amend the bishop is to admonish him and punish him, if after consulting two examiners and giving the priest an opportunity of defending himself he judges that the parochial duties have been seriously neglected without a just cause; if the admonition and punishment produce no amendment the bishop can at once deprive a removable parish priest of his office; an irremovable parish priest is to be punished by depriving him in part or in whole of the fruits of his benefice, which are to be given to the poor. Should the irremovable priest continue recalcitrant the ordinary, after establishing the fact as above, is to deprive him of his parish likewise.

Patagonia, Northern, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (PATAGONIA SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., XI—540c), in South America. The vicariate is confided to the Salesians but at present the see is vacant. The population is 123,100, of whom 115,000 are Catholics. There are: 50 priests, 30 churches, 9 chapels, 2 seminaries, 26 schools, 10 colleges, 97 Salesians, and 112 Daughters of Marie-Auxiliatrice.

Patagonia, SOUTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (PATAGONIA MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., XI—540d), in South America. This former prefecture apostolic was erected in 1883, comprising all the territory of Magallanes. On 4 October, 1916, that part of the prefecture belonging to Chile was erected into the Vicariate Apostolic of Magellan, and that part belonging to the Argentine was attached to the Diocese of Buenos Aires and divided into 4 deaneries, confided to the Salesians.

Patna, DIOCESE OF (PATNENSIS), in India, suffragan of Calcutta. The new see of Patna was created by a Decree of 10 September, 1919. The territory of the diocese includes the whole of the former Prefecture Apostolic of Bettiah and Nepal (q. v.) and the eastern part of the diocese of Allahabad (q. v.) lying to the south of the River Ganges. It is entrusted to the Fathers of the Society of Jesus of the Missouri Province and includes all the districts of north and south Bihar (except the two districts of Purneah and of the Santal Pargannah), the whole of Nepal and a strip of about 80 square miles in the Darjeeling District. It has an area of 126,000 square miles and a total population of 25,000,000. The total Catholic population is 5033. The first bishop is the Rt. Rev. Louis Van Hock, S.J., consecrated 6 March, 1921, at Ranchi, by the Most Rev. B. Meuleman, S.J., Archbishop of Calcutta. Born in Antwerp, 17 April, 1870, Bishop Van Hock entered the Jesuit novitiate in 1890, made his scholasticate in Calcutta, and was ordained in 1903. He had been rector of Manresa in Ranchi for eight years preceding his appointment as bishop. Mgr. Van Hock was decorated with the gold medal Kaisar-i-Hind. There are in the mission 15 churches, 7 chapels, 10 head stations, and 12 sub-stations four Fathers of the Society of Jesus, 1 Capuchin Father lent by the Diocese of Lahore, and 7 secular priests. Religious communities include the Irish Christian Brothers (10); Sisters of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary (18); the Sisters of the Holy Cross (Switzerland 10); the Sisters of St. Joseph (5); and the Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis (Indian Sisters 11). These Brothers and Sisters conduct 2 high schools with 372 pupils (214 boys and 113 girls); 1 middle English school with 55 boys; 1 convent day school with 76 girls, 2 industrial schools for Indian girls, 2 refuges for women, and many orphanages. Six public institutions admit the ministrations of priests and the schools are aided by the Government. The diocese has a printing press at Bettiah called "The Catholic Mission Press."

Patron and Patronage (cf. C. E., XI—560b).—No right of patronage can be validly created henceforth; local ordinaries, however, may concede to those who establish benefices or erect churches wholly or in part a right to certain prayers, temporarily or perpetually, according to the liberality of the donor, or they may allow the foundation of a benefice with the condition annexed that it is to be granted the first time to the clerical founder or to another cleric named by the founder. Ordinaries should endeavor to have the interested parties accept prayers, even perpetual, for themselves and their families in return for yielding up their rights of patronage or at least of presentation. Where popular elections and presentations are customary they may be tolerated only if the people select one of three clerics proposed by the local ordinary. The only honorary rights of a patron mentioned in the Code are, if authorized by lawful local custom: to have a genealogical record of their family erected in the church, precedence over other lay persons in processions and similar functions, and a more prominent seat in church, but this must not be placed within the sanctuary or under a canopy. Minors exercise their right through their parents or guardians, but it is suspended if the parents or guardians are non-Catholics. Where there is no just impediment the presentation must be made within four months (or less if custom or the laws of the foundation require it), after the person having the right of instituting notifies the patron of the vacancy and of the eligible priests if a concursus is necessary; if the presentation is not made within the proper time, the church or benefice may be freely collated on that occasion; if, however, a dispute arises which cannot be settled within the time fixed the ordinary should name a temporary oconomus for the church or benefice. If the right of patronage is exercised by a college the candidate to be presented must have obtained the absolute majority of votes; if no one is selected in the first two ballots, the person getting the greatest number of votes is to be chosen; if more than one received the highest figure all those who have received it are to be presented. Where there are individual patrons the candidate getting the relative majority of votes is chosen; in this case, too, more than one person may thus be presented. A patron has a vote for every title to his right, and he may present more than one candidate. The ordinary has the right to decide if the candidate is suitable and he should investigate carefully before deciding but he is not obliged and need not give his reasons. If the candidate is unsuitable the patron can propose a second, and, if he also is unfitted, the benefice may be freely collated for that occasion unless the patron or candidate appeals to the Holy See within ten days after being notified of the rejection; during the time of appeal an oconomus should be appointed by the ordinary if necessary. When one has been lawfully presented, found suited, and his presentation has been accepted, he has a right to canonical institution, the right of granting which is enjoyed by the local ordinary, but not by the vicar general without a special mandate. Canonical institution must be given within two months after presentation, unless there is a just excuse.

Patron Saints (cf. C. E., XI—562a).—The practice of choosing a special saint as patron of a nation, province, diocese or other locality, religious institute, confraternity or other group constituting a moral person is again highly approved in the Code. When a selection has been made, however, the saint does not become the patron officially until the Holy See gives its approval. The choice of a diocesan patron by a bishop requires the approval of the diocesan synod to become effective. A special apostolic indult is necessary where there is a desire to select as patron one who has only been beatified, for as a rule the Church allows as patrons only those whose heroic sanctity has been definitively placed beyond all question by canonization. By common ecclesiastical law the feast days of patron saints are not holy days of obligation; and a local ordinary may transfer the external celebration of the patronal feast to the following Sunday.

Patti, DIOCESE OF (PACTENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—567a), in Sicily, suffragan of Messina. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Ferdinando Fiandaca, b. 1857, elected Bishop of Nicosia 1903, transferred to Patti 1912, succeeding Bishop Traina, deceased. The Catholic population of the diocese is 200,000. There are: 49 parishes, 324 secular priests, 43 regular priests, 70 seminarians, 50 Sisters, 520 churches and chapels.

Paulists. See MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF SAINT PAUL THE APOSTLE; SAINT PAUL OF HUNGARY, HERMITS OF.

Pavia, DIOCESE OF (PAPIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—592b), suffragan of Milan, Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Francesco Ciceri, b. 1848, ordained 1870, elected bishop 1901, succeeding Bishop Riboldi, promoted, appointed assistant at the pontifical throne 1920. The bishop has the right of pallium. The Catholic population of the diocese is 110,300. There are: 82 parishes, 198 secular priests, 10 regular priests, 65 seminarians, 20 Brothers, 59 Sisters, 112 churches and chapels.

Paz y Figueroa, MARIA ANTONIA DE SAN JOSÉ DE, preacher and missionary, b. at Santiago del Estero in the Diocese of Salta, Argentina, in 1730; d. at Buenos Aires on 6 March, 1799. At the age of fifteen she dedicated herself to the service of God and formed among her companions a society, without any special rule, for the practice of Christian virtue and the observance of the Evangelical counsels. She acted under the spiritual guidance of the Jesuits and when they were exiled she determined to carry on their work and propagate their spirit as best she could. With the approval of the religious authorities and the cooperation of the Society of the Sisters of Pious Sermons, she began to preach penance and urge the laity to make the Spiritual Exercises, and between 1775 and 1779 evangelized large districts, especially round Tucumán, San Miguel, Rivin, and Córdoba. She then visited Buenos Aires where she stirred up the religious zeal of the clergy and laity, and in August, 1780, with the archbishop's approval, she established a house of retreats, in which over 70,000 persons made the Spiritual Exercises within the next eight years. She then preached in Rio de la Plata and Montevideo, where she remained three years. She was then recalled by the citizens of Buenos Aires, and on her return founded a Magdalen Asylum. She died in the odor of sanctity in her sixty-ninth year, and on 8 August, 1917, the cause of her canonization was introduced at Rome.

Pearse, PADRAIC H., Irish educator, poet and patriot, b. in Dublin in 1879, d. 3. May, 1916, the son of an English sculptor, James Pearse, and an Irish mother. He was educated in a private school in Dublin, then was an intermediate student of the Christian Brothers' school, at twelve he commenced the study of the Irish language, and later studied Canon O'Leary's "Seadna" under supervision of the author. When seventeen he founded the New Ireland Literary Society and his presidential addresses were published in book form in 1898 as "Three Essays on Gaelic Topics." Before he was twenty-four Pearse graduated from the Royal University and was appointed Irish lecturer in Catholic University College, where he gained his B.A. and B.L. Padraic Pearse became editor of the Gaelic League Official organ "An Claidheamh Soluis" (The Sword of Light), and he announced his intention of making it the organ of militant Gaeldom. He was the first of the young men to be spoken of in the Gaelic League and he had mastered the language and learned about Gaelic life by living for long spaces of time in a cottage he owned in West Connacht. And so he became a leader in the movement to prepare the Irish for freedom, to turn their hopes toward an Ireland that would be a resurgent Gaelic nationality. He wrote continually in Irish and English and was an intelligent advocate of bi-lingual schools, founding one such for boys (St. Enda's) in 1908 and later, as the idea developed and its success was assured, St. Ita's school for girls was also founded. In these schools he put into practice his ideas of national Irish education based on religion and patriotism and from henceforth his writings were connected with this school. Thomas McDonagh became a member of the staff of St. Enda's and later Joseph Mary Plunkett became a pupil of his. Pearse wrote a Passion Play in Irish in 1911 and produced it at Easter in the Abbey Theatre. A year later he published his single book of verse, "Suantraidhe agus Goltraidhe" (Songs of Slumber and Sorrow), written in the language of his Connacht parish. He began an anthology of poetry in the Irish language, making his own translations and putting much of his personality into them. In the spring of 1913 he made a visit to America to raise funds for his schools by lecturing on Irish literature and his own ideas of education.

In the winter of 1913 the Irish Volunteers were formed. Pearse, Plunkett and MacDonagh became members of a secret political society that had revolution as its object and they strove to bring about foreign intervention. In 1914 the European War broke out and the threat of conscription, actual over-taxation, danger of famine and exasperation caused by unfair and clumsy administration fanned the flames of their purpose and the Volunteer movement spread. Pearse and his companions saw in the War their great chance. On St. Patrick's Day, 1916, a vast body of Volunteers paraded in College Green, Dublin, and saluted Eoin MacNeill, their recognized leader. The personality of Pearse and James Connolly, a Socialist, was responsible for the Easter uprising. Roger Casement, landing in Kerry, failed to be met by those who were to take him to his destination and had been captured by police and taken to London, and at the same time a liner, the "Aud," which accompanied Casement's submarine disguised as a Norwegian timber ship, but carrying 20,000 rifles, millions of rounds of ammunition with machine guns and explosives had been stopped by a British patrol near Tralee where the arms were to be landed and the ship, flying the German flag, was scuttled by her own crew. A rising had been planned for Easter Sunday, but on learning of this loss a countermarching order was sent broadcast on Holy Saturday. On Easter Sunday the Volunteer council met to consider whether or not a blow should be struck for they knew that the British Government had learned from the sinking of the "Aud" how near insurrection had come to pass and that the decision was made to seize the Volunteer Executive and break up the organization. MacNeill opposed unaided insurrection. Sean MacDiarmada, Tom Clarke and Thomas MacDonagh were committed to the insurgent policy, Pearse is believed to have favored the moderate counsel, but Connolly declared that at any cost the Citizen Army should strike before it disbanded and so Pearse, having preached at all times the duty of Irishmen to vindicate their national faith, gave the vote for the insurrection which turned the course of Irish history (see IRELAND).

On Easter Monday (24 April, 1916), soon after noon the Irish Republic was proclaimed in Dublin (the stirring proclamation was signed by Clarke, MacDiarmada, Connolly, Eamonn Ceannt, Pearse, MacDonagh and Plunkett) and the insurgent tri-color waved from the flagstaff above the General Post Office in the heart of the Irish capital. There was little fighting on the first day. British reinforcements were hurried into the country while all over Ireland a few hundred youths, ill-armed, stood their ground against the might of Britain. A circle of fire and steel was contracting around the daring insurgents and even the best organized counties had not enough munitions for an hour's firing.

Pearse was Commander in Chief and President of the Provisional Government. The County Dublin Volunteers pierced into County Meath, taking the R. I. C. barracks and fighting a pitched battle with the constabulary at Ashburne. In County Galway a large body of insurgents, led by Liam Mellows, advanced on Galway City. In County Wexford Enniscorthy was seized on Thursday and the Republican flag hoisted on the Athenaeum, and on Friday encircling forces pressed close to the central scene of operations in Dublin. A terrific bombardment had set the center of Dublin City wholly ablaze. The loss of life was appalling, while banks, churches and business places were tottering and Pearse wrote his last manifesto, in which he said: "I am satisfied that we have saved Ireland's honor . . . we have acted for the best interests of Ireland. . . I am not afraid to face the judgment of God or the judgment of posterity." Connelly, wounded with a bullet through the thigh, still directed the defence. Commandant Daly had destroyed the Linen Hall Barracks, but was surrounded at Four Courts. Countess Markievicz, after being driven from the trenches in Stephen's Green, was defending the College of Surgeons. Commandant MacDonagh was surrounded in Jacob's factory, Commandant De Valera was holding Boland's Mills, while Commandant Ceannt held part of the South Dublin Union. On Saturday the General Post Office was set aflame and the Republican Government had to evacuate the headquarters there, which Pearse was the last to leave. From new headquarters he sent a message asking for terms. These were refused and at two o'clock Pearse surrendered unconditionally to Sir John Maxwell. He then sent out notices to commandants of the surviving Volunteer bodies, ordering arms to be laid down, "in order to prevent a further slaughter of unarmed people and in the hope of saving lives of our followers, now surrounded and hopelessly outnumbered."

And so the rising ended, the outstanding forces laying down their arms on Sunday. There followed a round-up of Irish Irelanders. To have been heard to speak Irish was cause enough for the breadwinner to be torn from his family. Hundreds of Irishmen were crowded into congested prisons and sent to internment camps and fifteen of the leaders, including Padraic Pearse and his brother William, Connelly, Eamonn Ceannt, Sean McDermott, Michael O'Hara, Con Colbert, Thomas Kent, Joseph Mary Plunkett, Edward Daly, Michael Mallon, Thomas MacDonagh, Tom Clarke and John MacBride were shot. Padraic Pearse was executed on 3 May, 1916, and William twenty-four hours later. The Easter Rising had been quickly quelled but the blood-sacrifice that had been made called into being a mighty desire for freedom that proved Pearse and the others had not died in vain, their Provisional Republic proclaimed on Easter Monday lived and these deaths united Irishmen to fight for an unfettered Ireland.

Pearse the patriot overshadowed Pearse the poet and his tireless activities in behalf of the Irish language, education and freedom limited his artistic production, but the very essence of the man was poetry—the rare poetry of perfect simplicity and intense sincerity lighted by a deep faith from which no interest in his life was separate. The single volume in which his works have been placed contains a slender lot of poetry (about one-tenth of the whole), but in these twenty-odd poems we have a most accurate picture of the poet, gentle but not soft, calm and eager, and at times of exaltation a flaming passionate mystic. We find also in the book some very fine prose, especially his stories of children which are perfect in natural dialogue, and a few plays, one of which, "The Singer," is autobiographical. Pearse was so sincere that his writings could but reveal himself and they even foretell with startling accuracy his future, for he had "dreamed a dream in his heart" and set his face to the road before him and the death he knew he should meet.

PECS (or Fünfkirchen), DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., VI—322b; QUINQUE ECCLESIENSIS), in Hungary, 37

in the ecclesiastical province of Esztergom (Gran). This diocese since 7 September, 1754, has enjoyed the perpetual right of the pallium. The present bishop is Count Jules Zichy, b. at Nagy-Land, diocese of Székes-Fehérvár, 7 November, 1871, brother of the head of the Catholic party, titular abbot of St. Martin de Buch, papal chamberlain to Popes Leo XIII and Pius X, elected 11 December, 1905, consecrated in the Sistine Chapel by Pius X, 21 December following and enthroned 14 January, 1906.

During the Servian occupation (1918-1921) the clergy fearlessly strove to bring about the expulsion of the invaders, and some priests were incarcerated and others were martyred. Among those put to death are: Stephen Vondöcsy, honorary canon and professor of theology; Victor Perr, editor of the weekly "Pecsi Est"; Aloysius Tschelstoger, pastor at Olaz; Ludovicus Lesfuyaz, O. S. Fr.; Canon Dionysius Mosowiy; Abel Bufessy, O. Cist., director of the archgymnasium in Pecs. At the time of the Communist uprising some of the clergy took an active part as leaders against the revolution.

The following clergy of note are recently deceased: Canon Julius Wajdis (d. 21 March, 1920), a man of great sanctity, called "the father of the poor"; Adalbert Horvath, translator of Hungarian poems into Croatian and of Slavonic poetry into Hungarian. A notable event for the diocese was the founding of a weekly, "Dunantul," which intrepidly upheld Catholic doctrine during the Communistic uprising and supported the Hungarian cause during the time of the Servian occupation.

There are 532,800 Catholics in the diocese, as compared with 18,200 Schismatics, 46,200 Lutherans, 85,500 Calvinists, and 18,700 Jews. There are 347 secular and 84 regular priests, assisted by 25 lay brothers; 181 parishes with 263 churches; 1 mission; 11 monasteries for men and 25 for women; 1 seminary; 1 university in charge of the Government with 88 professors and 1145 students; 5 colleges for boys with 14 teachers and 300 students; 6 colleges for girls with 30 teachers and 350 students; 2 academies with 18 teachers and 165 pupils; 7 training schools with 139 teachers and 2850 pupils; 3 orphanages; 1 hospital; 1 house of refuge; 73 day nurseries. The Government contributes to the support of the Catholic institutions and admits the ministry of priests in all public schools.

There are a mission society and a Eucharistic league organized among the clergy while among the laity many associations such as the League of the Sacred Heart, the Society for Perpetual Adoration, etc., exist. Two Catholic dailies, 1 weekly and 6 other periodicals are published.

PEGUY, CHARLES PIERRE, author, b. at Orléans on 7 January, 1873; d. at the Battle of the Marne, 1914. After his baccalaureate he taught in the normal school of his native city but abandoned pedagogy to study the question of Socialism. In 1907 he ran a work through the press under the pseudonym, of Pierre Deloire. He also composed a drama on Joan of Arc. Meantime he had organized a Socialist library and was among those who clamored for a revision of the Dreyfus trial. But Joan of Arc pursued him; he gave up his library and began to turn his thoughts higher. It was not hard for him to do so, for his Socialism was always of a mystical character and he had no regard for the material side of it or for compromises with politicians. In 1905 the attitude of Germany towards France aroused his patriotism and he wrote "Our Country," in which there are meditations on Joan of Arc and St. Genevieve, the liberators of Orléans. In 1910 appeared another book of meditations on the tragedy of Calvary, in 1912 a book about the Holy Innocents, one of them taking the Academy prize. When the war broke out he rushed to the front and when he died was cited on the order of the day.

Pelotas, DIOCESE OF (PELOTASENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—610a), in Brazil, suffragan of Porto Alegre. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Joachim Ferreira de Mello, b. 1875, elected 1921, succeeding Bishop de Campos Barreto, transferred. The area of the diocese is 16,026 square miles and the population is 307,000, of whom 280,000 are Catholics and 27,000 Protestants. There are: 24 parishes, 32 secular priests, 50 regular priests and 10 Brothers belonging to 5 religious congregations of men, 5 religious congregations of women, 2 colleges, several secondary and parochial schools and nearly 120 Sisters who have charge of all the hospitals in the diocese.

Pembroke, DIOCESE OF (PEMBROKENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—611a), in Canada, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Ottawa. On 3 May, 1912, Rt. Rev. Patrick T. Ryan, who had been vicar general of the diocese for two years, was appointed titular Bishop of Clazomenæ, consecrated 25 July, of the same year and made auxiliary to Bishop Lorrain, first bishop of Pembroke. Bishop Lorrain died 18 December, 1915, and his auxiliary was named successor, 7 August, 1916, taking possession of the see 21 December following.

During the World War numbers of the young men of this diocese enlisted for service, 140 going from the cathedral parish alone, 10 of whom were killed. Six of the clergy went to the front as chaplains and one of them, Rev. F. L. French, P. P., was in charge of the Canadian chaplain-service in France with the rank of lieutenant-colonel. He received the decoration of the Distinguished Service Order and two of the other chaplains received French military medals.

On 18 June, 1918, the Grey Nuns of the Cross celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their establishment in the Diocese of Pembroke, and on 24 July, 1921, the Sisters of St. Joseph of Peterborough were introduced into the diocese, with a mother-house at Pembroke.

Penedo, DIOCESE OF (PENEDENSIS), suffragan of Maceio, Brazil. The diocese was erected 3 April, 1916, by division of the Archdiocese of Alagoas (Maceio), the western part forming the new diocese. The western boundaries are those of the former Archdiocese of Alagoas and the eastern boundaries are the eastern borders of the parishes of Coruripe, Junqueiro, Zimolira, and Palmeira, belonging to the new diocese, which comprise a total of 16 parishes formerly belonging to Alagoas. A decree of 25 August, 1917, modified the diocesan boundaries. The episcopal residence is at Penedo, where the church of the Rosary was erected into a cathedral. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Jonas de Aranjó Batinga, b. 1865, vicar general of Maceio, elected 28 January, 1918, published 10 March, 1919.

Penne and Atri, DIOCESE OF (PENNENSIS ET ATRIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—638c), in the Province of Teramo, Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Carlo Pensa, O.S.C., b. 1869, elected 27 August, 1912, succeeding Bishop Piras, deceased. Penne has 163,800 Catholics, 91 parishes, 163 secular priests, 21 regular priests, 275 churches and chapels, 10 Brothers, and 6 Sisters. Atri has 20,600 Catholics, 8 parishes, 30 secular priests, 44 churches and chapels.

Pennsylvania (cf. C. E., XI—638d).—The area of the State of Pennsylvania is 45,126 square miles, of which 294 are covered with water. In 1920 the population was 8,720,017, a gain of 13.89 per cent since 1910. Of this 64.3 was urban; 35.7 was rural. The average number of inhabitants is 194.5 per square mile, as against 171 in 1910. There are 67 counties, 2544 primary divisions, 1567 townships, 39 cities, 933 incorporated boroughs and one incorporated town. The largest cities are: Philadelphia, with a population of 1,823,779; Pittsburgh 588,193; Scranton 137,783; Reading 107,784; Erie 93,372; Harrisburg 75,917; Wilkes-Barre 73,828; Allentown 73,502; Johnstown 67,327. Philadelphia still ranks as the third city in the United States but Pittsburgh has fallen to the ninth place. Pennsylvania sends 36 representatives to the United States Congress and has 38 votes in the electoral college. It is second of all the States in the Union in population.

MATERIAL RESOURCES.—In 1918 about 630,000 million feet of lumber was cut in Pennsylvania, about one-half as much as the State of Minnesota, at an average cost of $30.21 per million feet. This is a great decrease from 1900, when the cut was 2,313,267 million feet. It is estimated that the State has about 115,000,000,000 tons of coal. The total output of bituminous coal in 1918 was 178,550,741 tons; of anthracite coal, 98,826,084 tons. Thus the State contributed more than 33 per cent of the coal mined in the United States, and about half of the coke, the output being 26,723,645 tons. In the same year the petroleum output was 103,347,070 barrels, worth $231,136,205. The production of pig iron in 1918 was 15,423,262 long tons, valued at $460,677,474, just 39 per cent of the entire production of the United States.

In 1919 Pennsylvania had a capital of $6,277,268,000 invested in manufactures, employing 1,136,252 wage earners receiving $1,406,561,000 per annum, and producing $7,316,063,000 in value of finished goods, including, besides iron and steel, textiles of various kinds, etc. The manufacturing establishments numbered 27,975. Owing to the abundance of tanning substances Pennsylvania is the largest leather-producing State in the Union, 60 per cent of the glacié kid of the United States being made in Philadelphia. In 1916 the leather industry employed 13,592 workers, earning a total wage of $9,336,100, the total product being valued at $155,973,800. In the same year the cotton mills employed a total of 5826 workers, earning a total of $3,193,200.

AGRICULTURE.—In 1919 there were 202,256 farms with an area of 18,586,832 acres, of which 12,673,519 were improved. The value of the farm property was $1,253,274,862. The chief crops are: wheat 26,774,760 bushels; oats 44,858,325 bushels; tobacco 60,541,000 pounds; maize 66,457,800 bushels.

COMMUNICATIONS.—On 1, January 1919, Pennsylvania had 12,872 miles of railway, and 4870 miles of electric railway, an average of 26.05 miles of track for every square mile. The total assessment of steam railroads operating any portions of their lines within the State is $6,832,325,258. For the year ending December, 1916, the total earnings of railroads subject to taxation was $1,444,317,202. There were 391,412,797 passengers and 966,155,890 total tons of freight. The street railways showed a capitalization of $432,310,318. Philadelphia is an important port, the imports for the year ending 30 June, 1920, being: imports, $219,167,601; exports, $449,691,705. In 1919 just 1447 vessels from foreign ports arrived in Philadelphia; 2057 from coastwise ports. On 1 December, 1917, the outstanding bonds of the State amounted to $22,651,110, which were partially covered by a sinking fund of $2,151,110. On 1 November, 1920, the assessed value of real property was $6,836,165,155; taxable value of personal property, $1,907,34,355.

EDUCATION.—School attendance is compulsory for all between the ages of 8 and 14 for the full term; in less populated districts (less than 5000) it may be reduced to 70 per cent of the term for children under 12 years of age. The State Board of Education, created by the Act of 18 May, 1911, consists of six members, appointed by the Governor for six years. The Superintendent of Public Instruction, appointed by the Governor for four years, is president and chief executive officer of the State Board of Education. The Bureau of Vocational Education, created in 1915 to supersede the Vocational Educational Division, authorized in 1913, consists of two divisions, Agricultural and Industrial. The Bureau of Professional Education created in 1911 is under the State Department of Public Instruction. In 1911 was also created the Bureau of Medical Instruction and Licensure of the Department of Public Instruction. A State Council of Education was established in 1921. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: The register of all public, private, parochial, Sunday and other schools shall exhibit the names and residence of all children and persons excluded therefrom or readmitted thereto . . . ; and such register shall be open at all times to the inspection of city, borough, township authorities and the State Department of Health and their respective officers and agents. Every child between the ages of 8 and 16 is required to attend a day school in which the common English branches are taught in the English language. All teachers in public and private schools shall take the oath of allegiance. No appropriation shall be made to any charitable or educational institution not under the absolute control of the Commonwealth. Private schools must report regarding attendance. Attendance registers shall always be open to public authorities. No teacher, while teaching in a public school, shall wear a religious garb. In the year ending July, 1919, there were in the State 15,185 school-houses, 42,354 schools, 937 high schools, 58,073 boys and 72,197 girls in the high schools, also 43,972 teachers (6233 male and 37,139 female). The number of pupils was 1,583,187; the total educational expenditure $75,343,160. The average monthly salary of the male teacher is $91.82; of the female teachers $62.45. School districts are required to provide special education in special classes in the public schools for children who are mentally or physically handicapped. The schools are being consolidated as far as possible in remote districts to increase their educational efficiency. Bible reading is obligatory in the public schools. Among the recent additions to the State institutions are: the New Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania, founded in Centre County, in 1915, where all the electrocutions now take place; to this place, which is known as the Pennsylvania State Prison, the inmates of the Eastern and Western State Penitentiaries were transferred; the State Industrial Home for the care of criminal women between sixteen and thirty years of age was established at Muncy in 1913; the Western Hospital for the Insane at Blairsville in 1915; the State Village for Feeble-Minded Men near Glen Iron, Union County; State Hospital at Coaldale (originally a private hospital); and a State School for the Deaf in Scranton (originally a private institution).

RELIGION.—Of the entire population of Pennsylvania in 1916 (8,522,017) 4,114,527, or 45 per cent, were church members: 2,283,995 Protestants and 1,830,532 Catholics. The latest census of Catholics (1920) for the entire State was 1,755,194. The Protestant denominations for 1916 were divided as follows: Methodists 427,509; Lutherans 371,674; United Presbyterians 73,405; Reformed 209,256; Baptists 193,262; Presbyterians 332,088; Episcopalians 118,687; United Brethren 73,989; all others 483,125. The value of church property is $208,132,581, being 2 per cent of the value of all property in the State, which is $11,473,620,306. Of the entire population in 1916, 55 per cent professed no religion, as against 67.2 per cent in 1900. For Catholic statistics see PHILADELPHIA, ARCHDIOCESE OF, and its suffragans.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1913 a Public Utilities Act did away with the railway commission. State-wide primaries were introduced in the same year; electrocution was substituted for hanging; and a mothers' pension bill was enacted. Night work for children was prohibited in 1915. This had an important bearing on the industrial situation of Pennsylvania, as more children were employed in Pennsylvania than in any other state of the Union. A Workmen's Compensation Act was provided for and a Prison Labor Commission created. In 1917 a direct inheritance law was passed. In the last ten years much has been done to reform the laws of Pennsylvania. The election law has been changed but the ballot laws are yet far from perfect. The Federal Suffrage amendment was ratified on 24 June, 1919; the Prohibition Act on 25 February, 1919.

During the European War Pennsylvania furnished to the United States Army 297,891 men (7.93 per cent). The Pennsylvania members of the national guard were incorporated into the 28th Division at Camp Hancock, Georgia; those of the national army into the 79th Division at Camp Meade, Maryland or with the 80th Division at Camp Lee, Virginia. The summary of casualties of the Pennsylvania members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 291 officers, 7607 men; prisoners, 37 officers, 854 men; wounded, 810 officers, 25,442 men. An artillery camp was established at Tobyhanna, Pennsylvania; a tank cantonment at Gettysburg, and an ambulance camp at Allentown.

Pension, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., XI—645c).—A local ordinary when conferring a benefice may for a just cause, which is to be announced in the act of collation, subject a benefice to a temporary pension lasting during the lifetime of the beneficiary, who must, however, be left a suitable income. Parochial benefices may not be subjected to pensions, except in favor of the parish priest or vicar of the same parish on retiring from office: this pension must not exceed one-third of the parish revenues after deducting expenses and uncertain income. If a parish priest retires voluntarily at the request of the ordinary he should receive a larger pension than if he had to be removed. If an ecclesiastic is raised to the cardinalate he loses his pension ipso facto unless the Holy See provides otherwise in a special case.

Peoria, DIOCESE OF (PEORENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—661d), in the State of Illinois, comprises an area of 18,554 square miles, and has a Catholic population of 116,553, mostly American born. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. Edmund M. Dunne, D.D., who has filled the see since 1909, is assisted by an auxiliary bishop, Rt. Rev. Peter J. O'Reilly, D.D., titular Bishop of Lebedos. On 25 August, 1916, Rt. Rev. John Lancaster Spalding (q. v.), first Bishop of Peoria, died in that city. Bishop Spalding had been forced by illness to resign his see in 1908, but he continued his residence in Peoria as Archbishop of Seythopolis, to which title he was raised in 1909.

The present (1921) statistics of this diocese show 159 parishes, 238 churches, 80 missions, 20 mission stations, 5 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 1 abbey for men, 1 convent for women and 26 for men, 178 secular priests and 47 regular, 10 lay brothers, 1357 nuns and 20 seminarians. The various educational institutions include 2 colleges for men with 35 professors and 400 students, 8 high schools, 8 academies with an attendance of 1216. There are 3 Catholic homes and 13 hospitals maintained in the diocese and 4 of the public institutions admit the priests to minister in them. The Eucharistic League is organized among the clergy and the Knights of Columbus, Holy Name and Altar Societies among the laity. "The Bee Hive," a Catholic periodical, is published in Pekin, Illinois.

Perigueux DIOCESE OF (PETROCORICENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—668a), comprises the department of Dordogne, France, and is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Bordeaux. On 1 January, 1915, Bishop Henri-Louis-Prosper Bougouin died, after filling this see from 1906, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Marie-Louis-Maurice Rivière. Bishop Rivière was promoted to the Archdiocese of Aix 9 July, 1920, and the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Christophe-Louis Legasse, came to the see, 13 August, 1920. Born at Bassussary, diocese of Bayonne, in 1859, Bishop Legasse was made a prelate of the Holy See in 1890, Prefect Apostolic of St. Pierre and Miquelon the same year, and Bishop of Oran 6 December, 1915. During the World War this diocese contributed large numbers of priests and laymen to the service; 15 priests and 14 seminarians were killed, 20 priests and 6 seminarians were wounded and numerous citations and medals of honor were conferred upon those who served.

The diocese has a Catholic population (1920) of 437,432 and by 1921 statistics it comprises 738 parishes, 637 churches, 2 monasteries for men and 26 for women, 555 secular priests, 6 regulars, 2 seminaries, 100 seminarians, 2 secondary schools for boys with 40 teachers and 500 pupils, 60 elementary schools with 174 teachers, 1 mission centre, 1 home, 4 asylums, 20 hospitals, 1 refuge and 1 nursery. The Defense sacerdotale and a fund for the assistance of priests are organized among the laity. The "Semaine religieuse" and "La Croix du Périgord," are published.

Perjury (cf. C. E., XI—696d).—If anyone testifying in an ecclesiastical court commits perjury he is to be punished by a personal interdict if he belongs to the laity, or by suspension if he is a cleric.

Perpetual Adoration, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XI—698b).—This congregation has its mother-house at Quimper, Finistère, France, and has another foundation at Brest, from 130 to 140 poor orphans being cared for in each. The number of children educated by the Sisters from the foundation of the institute to the present is about 2600. The difficulties of the last twenty years have made impossible the extension of the work of the congregation. The establishment of a new foundation requires a rather important centre in view of the twofold end of the institute: the perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament and the education of children. On 27 March, 1874, the congregation received a decree of approbation from Rome. In 1895, an important annex was constructed to accommodate lady boarders. Mother St. Barthelemy, elected superior in 1901, actively and firmly resisted during her administration the measures of the Government which wished to recognize the Sisters as a teaching congregation and in 1908 secularized the school attached to the orphanage. She was succeeded in 1916 by Mother Marie of the Precious Blood, the tenth and present superior general. On 20 September, 1921, the Sisters celebrated the centenary of the foundation of the orphanage. According to the prescriptions of the new Code of Canon Law, perpetual vows are taken at the end of three or six years, instead of ten as formerly. There are at present (1921) 64 professed choir religious, 40 professed lay sisters, and 11 novices. The number of deceased religious is 118. Among the notables recently deceased are: Mother St. Ange (Adèle Cohane), d. 1900 during her term as superior general; Sister Theresa of Jesus (Emilie Corbel), assistant and mistress of novices, d. 1911; Sister Marie Bernard (Jenny Pellan), economist and assistant, d. 1916; Sister St. Arsène (Marie Desirée Salaun), superior at Brest, d. 1919; Sister Marie St. Louis (Sophie Guitard), former assistant, local superior, and mistress of novices, d. 1921; Mother St. Jean Baptiste (Amélie Lefort), former superior general, diamond jubilarian in 1920, d. 1921.

Perpetual Help, SISTERS OF OUR LADY (cf. C. E., XI—699a).—The rules and constitutions of the congregation were approved by diocesan authority, 2 July, 1915. On 15 June of that year the founder, Abbé Brousseau, was made honorary canon of the metropolitan church of Quebec by Cardinal Taschereau. He died 18 April, 1920. The foundress, Mother St. Bernard, died 30 April, 1918. The present superior general is Sister St. Helen, elected 21 July, 1919, to succeed Sister St. Isidore. A house-keeping school was built in 1913, and a new house was founded at Hearst, Ontario, in August, 1920. In 1921, the personnel of the institute was 190 professed religious, 22 novices, and 7 postulants.

Perpignan, DIOCESE OF (PERPINIANUM; cf. C. E., XI—700b), suffragan of Albi, France. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Jules-Marie-Louis de Carsalade du Pont, b. 1847, ordained 1871, consecrated bishop 1900, succeeding Bishop Gaussail, deceased. He celebrated his sacerdotal golden jubilee in 1921, in the Basilica of St. Jean, in the presence of 4000 faithful and 200 priests. The Catholic population of the diocese is 212,986, of whom 39,510 are in Perpignan. There are 26 curacies, 197 succursals and 43 vicariates.

Persia (cf. C. E., XI—712b), has an area of about 628,000 square miles and a population of about 8 to 10 millions. Of the three million nomads, there are about 260,000 Arabs, 720,000 Turks, 675,000 Kurds and Leks, 20,700 Baluchis and Gypsies, 234,000 Lurs. The Europeans number about 1200. The principal cities are Teheran, with over 220,000 inhabitants, Tabriz, with 200,000; Ispahan and Kermansha with 80,000 each.

RECENT HISTORY.—Under the Anglo-Russian Treaty of 1907 the whole of northern Persia was declared to be within the Russian sphere of influence; the British controlled the southeastern corner, while the rest of the Central and Southern parts were declared to be neutral. After the fall of Mohammed Ali in 1909, a regency was appointed and the Mejlis assembled. The state of affairs was so bad that in 1911 Mr. W. Morgan Shuster, an American financial adviser selected by President Taft, was invited to take charge of the finances of Persia. He refused to recognize the Anglo-Russian agreement, and thereby antagonized Russia who planned series of interventions in the administration, and forced the dismissal of Shuster after eight months, by an ultimatum, which was approved by Great Britain. After his departure Persia relapsed into anarchy.

Though Persia remained neutral during the Great European War, her territory was invaded near Mount Ararat by the Russians and Turks in 1914. Indecisive fighting occurred intermittently for many months between the Russians under Baratoff based upon Tabriz and the Turks based upon Bagdad. At the end of 1916 the Turks held Hamadar which however, they lost to Russia in 1917. At the withdrawal of the Russian forces the Turks entered Persia, occupied Baku, but at the end of the war the British occupied the southeast and west portions of Persia. By the terms of the armistice imposed on Turkey by the western powers, Persia was to be evacuated by the Turkish troops. On 19 September, 1919, the secret treaty between Great Britain and Persia, concluded on 9 August, was made public. By its terms Great Britain made a 20 year loan of £2,000,000 at 7 per cent which was to have precedence over all other debts of Persia except a former British loan of £1,250,000 made in 1911. As a guarantee Persia pledged her custom receipts. Great Britain also agreed to supply at Persian expense, expert advisers, military officers, munitions, and all necessary military equipment, and to make no charge to Persia for troops sent to the aid of Persia during the war. Persia, on the other hand, agreed not to demand indemnity for damage caused by them. This treaty was objected to by the United States, as it violated the principles of the League of Nations. The agreement was denounced on 27 February, 1921, by the Prime Minister, Seyed-Ziaed-Din.

Perth, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PERTHENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—781c), in Western Australia, erected into a metropolitan see 28 August, 1913. The first and present archbishop is Most Rev. Patrick Joseph Clune, C. S. S. R., b. at Killaloe, Ireland, 6 Jan., 1864, consecrated in Perth 17 March, 1911, succeeding Bishop Gibney, resigned, became archbishop 28 August, 1913. The Catholic population is 39,500, composed to a large degree of Irish, English, and Maltese immigrants. The religious orders established in the diocese are: Oblates of Mary Immaculate, 2 houses, 11 members; Redemptorists, 1 monastery, 8 members; Irish Christian Brothers, 4 houses, 22 members; Sisters of Mercy, 15 houses, 193 nuns; Sisters of St. Joseph of the Apparition, 7 houses, 77 nuns; Sisters of St. John of God, 4 houses, 68 nuns; Presentation Sisters, 3 houses, 25 nuns; Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart, 4 houses, 24 nuns; Loreto Nuns, 2 houses, 34 nuns. There are 2 monasteries of men, 3 convents of men, 38 convents for women, 52 secular priests, 9 regular priests, 4 lay brothers, 471 Sisters. Educational institutions include: 3 colleges for men, with 30 teachers, and 850 students; 2 colleges for women, with an attendance of 164; 6 high schools; 53 primary schools, with an attendance of 7968; 4 industrial schools with 24 teachers, and 621 pupils; a total of 53 primary schools, 25 superior schools, 9764 children in Catholic schools, 325 professed religious, 64 novices, and 80 lay teachers. Charitable institutions total 9, containing 497 inmates under the care of 94 professed religious and 7 lay teachers; they include 2 homes, 1 Magdalene Asylum, and 2 hospitals. None of these institutions receive support from the government. The diocese comprises 32 parishes and 103 churches. An official diocesan weekly called the "Western Australia Record" is published. The Pioneer Total Abstinence Society is organized among the clergy, and lay associations include the C. Y. M. S., K. S. C., Hibernians, and Foresters. During the World War Rev. John Fahey, D. S. O., saw four years service in Gallipoli, Egypt and France, where Rev. Peter Hayes served for three years and Rev. Dean Brennan served for five years. Rev. Patrick McBride was on home service.

Peru; (cf. C. E., XI—732d), republic, in South America, has an area of 722,461 square miles, and a population of about 5,000,000. The largest cities are Lima, with a population estimated in 1919 at 140,884; Callao, 34,846 (1915); Arequipa, 40,000; Cuzco, 15,000.

RELIGION.—The constitution guarantees religious liberty, although the Catholic religion is the religion of the state. In 1919 £22,158 were voted for public worship, and £660 for missions. For religious statistics see LIMA, ARCHDIOCESE OF, and its suffragans: Cajamarca, Chacapoyas, Cuzco, Ayacucho, Huánuco, Huaraz, Puno, Trujillo.

EDUCATION.—Although education is by law compulsory, the law is not enforced. In 1919 there were 3036 primary schools with 4351 teachers and 181,211 pupils. In 1918 there were 27 government schools with 6231 pupils and 364 teachers. The pupils pay a moderate fee in high schools maintained by the government. There are universities at Lima (Universidad de San Marcos, founded in 1551) at Arequipa, Cuzco, and Trujillo.

ECONOMICS.—The cotton area in 1918 was 140,000 acres and the crop 45,200,000 pounds. Rice is grown on 70,000 acres, and the exports of this product in 1918 was valued at $813,301. The total mineral output of the country was in 1919 valued at $40,100,000. Hides to the value of $3,038,803 were exported in 1919. The foreign trade of Peru in 1919 was worth $190,041,853; exports, $130,731,191; imports, $59,310,662. The railway mileage in 1918 was 1893 miles. Of these, 1300 miles were operated by the Peruvian Corporation; the rest being owned by the government.

FINANCE.—The revenue of the republic in 1919 was £6,154,171; the expenditure £5,799,981. The total debt of Peru on 30 June, 1920, amounted to £6,088,740, of which the internal debt amounted to £3,969,216.

DEFENCE.—Military service in Peru is compulsory and universal. The peace establishment of the army is 11,000; the 176 state-aided Rifle Clubs muster about 16,000 marksmen; the Civil Guard in 1918 included 2771 officers and men. The Peruvian navy consists of six ships.

RECENT HISTORY.—The long-standing dispute over Arica and Tacna has disturbed the peace of the republic in recent years. On 25 November, 1918, Chile and Peru severed relations and for a time there was grave danger of war, but the United States counselled a peaceful adjustment and war was averted. The matter was submitted to the League of Nations, but the League felt that it was not within their jurisdiction. In May, 1922, the delegates of the three countries most concerned in the dispute—Chile, Bolivia, and Peru—assembled in Washington, U. S. A., to settle the quarrel. In December, 1919, Peru adopted a new constitution, superseding that of 1860. The principal innovations in the document are: Religious toleration, compulsory education, graduated income tax, guarantees of personal security, compulsory arbitration of labor disputes, municipal autonomy, and the establishment of three regional legislatures to deal with local matters.

Perugia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PERUSINENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—736a), in Central Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present archbishop is Most. Rev. Giovanni Beda Cardinale, O. S. B., b. 1869 Abbot of Praglia, consecrated Bishop of Civitavecchia and Corneto 1907, promoted titular Archbishop of Laodicea and apostolic delegate of Perugia 3 Feb., 1910, transferred to Perugia 8 Nov., 1910, published 30 Nov., 1911, succeeding Archbishop Mattei Gentili, resigned. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 100,900. There are: 199 parishes, 218 secular priests, 40 regular priests, 90 seminarians, 150 Sisters, 371 churches and chapels.

Pesaro, DIOCESE OF (PERAURENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—738d), suffragan of Urbino. Central Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Bonaventura Porta, Angelo Simonetti, b. 1861, elected 1907, consecrated 1908, succeeding Bishop Serafini, resigned. The Catholic population is 70,504. There are: 38 parishes, 125 secular priests, 34 regular priests, 19 seminarians, 9 Brothers, 135 Sisters, 66 churches and chapels.

Pescina, DIOCESE OF. See MARSI.

Pesqueira, DIOCESE OF (PESQUEIRIENSIS; cf. C. E., XVI—35d), in Brazil, suffragan of Olinda, erected 5 December, 1910, under the name of Floresta, transferred in 1918, comprises 27 parishes lying beyond the Archdiocese of Olinda, the Diocese of Garanhuns and the Diocese of Nazareth. Mgr. José Antonio de Oliveira Lopes, b. at Recife, 21 November, 1868, ordained 16 April, 1892; made honorary chamberlain, 1899, prelate of the Holy See 1903, and Prothonotary Apostolic in 1919 and appointed to the see on 26 June, 1915, is the second bishop. There are in the diocese (1921) 40 churches, 1 convent of men, 2 of women, 45 secular priests, 5 regular priests, 22 Brothers, 15 Sisters, 25 seminarians in the seminary of Olinda, 2 colleges for boys with 10 teachers and 100 students, secondary school for girls with 9 teachers and 69 students, 4 elementary schools with 4 teachers and 200 pupils. One school receives aid from the Government. There is one Catholic newspaper.

Peterborough, DIOCESE OF (PETERBOROUGHENSIS, cf. C. E., XI—756b), in the Province of Ontario, Canada, suffragan of Kingston. Rt. Rev. Richard A. O'Connor, Bishop of Peterborough, died 23 January, 1913, having been bishop of that diocese for almost twenty-four years. He was succeeded by the Rt. Rev. Michael Joseph O'Brien as fourth Bishop of Peterborough. He was born in the city of Peterborough 29 July, 1874, and after his classical course in St. Michael's College, Toronto, and his philosophical and theological courses in the upper seminary, Montreal, was ordained priest 6 July, 1897. He spent the next two years in Rome, receiving his doctorate in theology in June, 1899. On his return he exercised the sacred ministry in the city of Peterborough until he was appointed bishop on 20 June, 1913. The diocese outside the city of Peterborough is well equipped with Catholic schools and institutions and contains 22 parishes, 50 churches, 33 secular and 1 regular priest, 2 hospitals, and a Catholic population of 27,000. The city of Peterborough has a population of about 25,000, more than a fourth of which is Catholic. It has three churches, four schools and a Catholic high school, a large hospital, a house of Providence and an orphanage, all of which are in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph.

Petrograd, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See MOHILEFF.

Petropolis, DIOCESE OF (PETROPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—782c), suffragan of Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The see was erected at Nictheroy, 1893, transferred to Petropolis 1895, with change of name, and retransferred to Nictheroy, 1908. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Agostino Francesco Bennassi, b. 1868, elected 1908, succeeding Bishop Braga, transferred. There are: 123 parishes, 89 secular priests, 35 regular priests, 100 filial churches and chapels, 3 colleges, and 1 technical school.

Philadelphia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PHILADELPHIENSIS; cf. C. E., XI—793b), in the State of Pennsylvania, comprises a total population of 3,176,549 according to the United States census of 1920, of which number 1,823,779 belong to the city of Philadelphia. On May 27, 1911, the official news was received from Rome that the auxiliary bishop, Most Rev. Edmond F. Prendergast, D.D., had been elevated to the rank of Archbishop of Philadelphia, receiving the sacred pallium on 31 January, 1912. Rt. Rev. John J. McCort, D.D., V.G. (now Bishop of Altoona), was consecrated on 17 September, 1912, as Titular Bishop of Azotus and auxiliary bishop of the diocese.

During the seven years in which Archbishop Prendergast presided over the destinies of the Philadelphia archdiocese, the foundation of many important institutions of education and charity were securely laid. Among these should be included the great Misericordia Hospital, the Archbishop Ryan Memorial Institute for Deaf and Dumb, the new St. Vincent's Home, St. Edmond's Home for the Crippled Children, and the Catholic Boys' High School of West Philadelphia. In 1915 the work of renovating the interior of the Cathedral was completed; and here, on 17 November of the same year, took place the dedication of the original structure, now one of the most imposing in the United States, together with the celebration of the golden jubilee of the metropolitan.

On August 28, 1917, the diocese lost one of its most distinguished members through the death of the Most Rev. Thomas F. Kennedy, D.D., Rector of the North American College in Rome.

The charity and generosity of the Philadelphia Catholics was manifested towards the afflicted peoples in diverse ways during the years of the European conflict. Before America entered the war, besides special aid given to the International Red Cross Society and similar societies, a diocesan appeal was twice issued in behalf of the Belgians, and nearly $25,000.00 were realized. After the pledge of loyalty given to the President of the United States by the bishops assembled in Washington in 1917, a special letter, breathing a spirit of sincerest patriotism and loyal support of the Government was sent by Archbishop Prendergast to the clergy and laity of the diocese. Generous response was given to this appeal of the metropolitan. There was scarcely a parish or institution in the diocese that did not form committees to promote and invest large sums in the various Liberty Loans. In the fourth Loan for example, exclusive of the Knights of Columbus, approximately twelve million dollars was subscribed.

Among the numerous institutions established by the Catholics of Philadelphia to give creature comfort to the soldiers and sailors, perhaps the most remarkable was the Benedict Service Club, managed by the Diocesan Alliance of Catholic Women. Here, during eleven months were entertained 223,225 soldier and sailor guests, of which number 55,613 were lodged over night and 131,318 were provided with meals. Fifty-nine Philadelphia priests volunteered their services as chaplains in the army and navy, of whom thirty-eight were selected for service.

On 26 February, 1918, Archbishop Prendergast died, lamented by priests and people as a shepherd, clear of vision, firm of purpose, gentle of manner, and full of a deep faith that was child-like in its simplicity. Two months later, the announcement was made of the selection of the Bishop of Buffalo, the Rt. Rev. Dennis J. Dougherty, D.D., as Archbishop of Philadelphia. On 10 July, 1918, the new metropolitan was solemnly enthroned as the fourth archbishop and sixth bishop of the See. A native son of the diocese, having been born near Ashland, Schuylkill County, 16 August, 1865, Archbishop Dougherty, after two years at St. Mary's College, Montreal, spent three years as a student in the diocesan Seminary at Overbrook, where he was selected to complete his training at the American College in Rome. On 31 May, 1890, he was ordained to the priesthood by His Eminence Cardinal Satolli. Later, he was transferred to the diocese of Jaro, P. I. After thirteen years of self-sacrifice and Apostolic labor in the Philippines, during which time he reconstructed two dioceses, the young American Bishop was recalled to his native land and made head of the diocese of Buffalo, in 1916.

The new archbishop had hardly taken up his pastoral labors when, in the autumn of 1918, the dreadful scourge of influenza, then sweeping the country, fell upon the city with appalling severity. Archbishop Dougherty sent a letter to the pastors of the diocese permitting them to utilize the parish halls and parochial schools as hospitals, and allowing the unclerical Sisters to act as nurses in the hospitals and private homes. Two thousand Sisters responded to the call; and two hundred and fifty seminarians likewise left their studies and worked until late at night in the cemeteries burying the dead. A special tribute of thanks was formally extended to the Archbishop by the Mayor and the City Council of Philadelphia for this noble assistance in the hour of need.

On 11 February, 1921, press dispatches from Rome brought the news that the Metropolitan of Philadelphia was to be elevated to the Sacred College of Cardinals at the Secret Consistory of 7 March. The ceremonies of investiture with the Sacred Purple took place in Rome during the week of 7 to 10 March, when the new American Prince of the Church also took possession of his titular church of SS. Nereus and Achilleus. A reception unparalleled in the history of the city of Philadelphia greeted him on his return home, and at a public reception in the Academy of Music, the Governor of the State, and Mayor of the City, joined in the universal testimony of esteem and affection for Philadelphia's first Cardinal.

On 19 September, 1921, Rt. Rev. Michael J. Crane, D.D., V.G., rector of the Church of St. Francis de Sales, was consecrated by Cardinal Dougherty as Titular Bishop of Curium and Auxiliary Bishop of Philadelphia. The ceremony took place in the Cathedral of SS. Peter and Paul, and was attended by a vast concourse of the laity and members of the clergy, among whom were three archbishops and thirteen bishops.

Philadelphia is also the residence of the Ruthenian Greek Catholic Bishop for the United States. The Rt. Rev. Soter Stephen Ortynski, the first Ruthenian Bishop, consecrated in 1907, died 24 March, 1916, since which time the see has been vacant. Within the limits of the diocese of Philadelphia, the Ruthenians Greeks possess twenty-nine churches, chapels and stations, two orphanages, and four schools. "The Missionary" a religious magazine, is issued every month in the Ruthenian (Ukrainian) language.

STATISTICS.—There is probably no diocese in the world better provided with institutions of religion, education and charity than Philadelphia. There are 188 parochial schools, teaching 95,008 children. There are four high schools with 83 teachers and an attendance of 2399. Fifteen academies are devoted to the instruction of 2877 pupils; and three industrial schools have a staff of 64 instructors, with 439 students.

The diocesan seminary in the yearly collection of 1921, received the sum of $195,584.86, perhaps the largest amount ever contributed in one year for a similar purpose by any diocese in the Catholic world. The number of seminarians studying for the diocese is 299, and there is never a lack of vocations.

There are in the diocese thirteen religious communities of men: Augustinian Fathers, Christian Brothers, Congregation of the Holy Ghost, Jesuit Fathers, Redemptorist Fathers, Society of Mary, Dominicans, Salesians, Marists, Missionary Fathers of the Sacred Heart, Holy Trinity Fathers, Basilians and Vincentians.

The number of women religious is 3650, distributed among twenty-nine communities. There are in the diocese: the Sisters of the Assumption, Bernardine Sisters, O. S. F. (Polish), Discalced Carmelites, Felician Sisters, Religious of the Sacred Heart, Little Sisters of the Poor, Missionary Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis, Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Christian Charity, Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus, Salesian Sisters of the Holy Eucharist, Sisters of the Holy Family, Sisters of St. Dominic, Sisters of the Most Blessed Trinity, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Mission Workers of the Sacred Heart, Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of Mercy, Sisters of Notre Dame, Sisters Servants of the Immaculate Heart, Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis, Poor Clares, Sisters Servants of the Holy Ghost of Perpetual Adoration, Sisters of Bon Secours, Sisters of St. Casimir, and Sisters of St. Dorothy.

The Catholic population of Philadelphia diocese was estimated in 1921 at 713,412, whose spiritual needs are supplied by 807 priests, regular and secular, ministering in 479 churches, chapels and stations.

Philbin, EUGENE AMBROSE, jurist, b. at New York on 24 July, 1857; d. there on 14 March, 1920; son of Stephen and Eliza (McGoldrick) Philbin. He was educated at the College of St. Francis Xavier, New York; Seton Hall, New Jersey; and graduated from Columbia University Law School in 1885, being admitted to the bar in the following year. In 1913 he was appointed a justice of the Supreme Court in New York, an office he held till his death. Judge Philbin was deeply interested in the public welfare and was appointed commissioner of the New York State Board of Charities (1900), a regent of the University of the State of New York (1904), and trustee of the Catholic University of America, a trustee of St. Patrick's Cathedral. He was one of the promoters and a director of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, to which he contributed the article on Libel. In recognition of his service to the Church he was created a Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory the Great in 1908.

Philippine Islands; (cf. C. E., XII—10a), a group of 7083 islands, with a total area of 114,400 square miles and a total population, according to the Philippine Census of 1918, of 10,350,730, composed chiefly of the Malay race, 91.5 per cent of whom are Christians, and only 886,999 or 8.5 per cent are Moros and pagans. The capital, Manila, has a population of 283,613, of whom 257,356 are Filipinos, 17,856 are Chinese, 1611 Japanese, 3124 Americans, 1955 Spaniards, 635 English, 236 Germans, 160 French, 95 Swiss. The largest islands with their respective areas are: Mindanao, 36,906 square miles; Samar 5124 square miles; Negros 4093 square miles, Palawan 4500 square miles, Panay 4448 square miles, Mindoro 3794 square miles; Leyte 2799 square miles, Cebu 1695 square miles; Bohol 1534 square miles, and Masbate 1255 square miles.

EDUCATION.—In 1920 there were 925,678 pupils with 316 American teachers and 20,691 Filipino teachers. The public owned 4063 and rented 1163 school buildings. The total expenditures for 1920 for administration and instruction were about $6,869,654. The Filipino University had, in 1920, an enrollment of 4130, and a teaching force of 379 professors and assistants. The cost of operation was $755,926.57. The amount spent for each pupil per year is $9.50. The Vice-Governor, who is appointed by the President of the United States, is also Secretary of Public Instruction. He and two other members form the provincial board, which constitutes the legislative branch of the provincial Government. All three officials are elected by the people.

HISTORY (1907-22).—In the period between 1907 and 1913 one-half of the legislative power was turned over to a body of Filipinos, known as the Philippine Assembly. The policy of utilizing the Filipinos in the Government made it possible to have a proportion of 72 per cent Filipinos as against 28 per cent in 1913. In 1916 the Jones Act was passed permitting the people to elect a House and Senate. In 1921, the percentage of Americans in the Filipino Service was only 4 per cent. The haste with which the Filipinos were put in office, regardless of their efficiency, had had a deteriorating effect on the service. In 1920 President Wilson called for the granting of independence to the Filipinos. In March, 1921, President Harding sent General Leonard Wood to the Philippines to make a study of the situation and to report on the existing conditions. Their final judgment was that "it would be a betrayal of the Philippine people, a misfortune to the American people, a distinct step backward in the path of progress, and a discreditable neglect of duty were we to withdraw from the islands."

ECONOMICS.—The total area planted to the crops in 1919-20 was 7,513,305 acres, the largest crop being rice (3,453,347 acres). The value of the imports in 1919 was $107,774,000; of exports $113,118,000. The railway mileage in 1920 was 778, owned by the government.

GOVERNMENT.—The Governor-General, as the chief executive, represents the sovereign power of the United States, and is appointed by the President of the United States with the advice and consent of the Senate. Under him are secretaries of six executive departments. With the exception of the Vice-Governor, all the secretaries are Filipinos. The Philippine Legislature is composed of 24 senators and 91 representatives. A Council of State, created by executive order subsequent to the enactment of the present Organic Act, commonly known as the Jones Law, forms the connecting link between the executive and legislative branches of the Government and represents the people's counsel in the administration. It is composed of the Governor-General, the presidents of both houses, and the secretaries. The provincial and municipal Governments are supervised by the Department of the Interior through the executive bureau and the bureau of non-Christian types. The chief executive of each of the 24 provinces is a provincial governor.

Piacenza, DIOCESE OF (PLACENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—69d), in Emilia, Central Italy, dependent directly on the Holy Sec. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Ersilio Menzani, b. 1872, elected 1920, consecrated 1921, succeeding Bishop Pellizzari; deceased. The Catholic population of the diocese is 326,000. There are: 351 parishes, 529 secular priests, 75 regular priests, 160 seminarians, 1200 churches and chapels.

Piauhy, DIOCESE OF (PIAUNENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—72b), in Brazil, suffragan of Belem do Pará. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Octavio Pereira de Albuquerque, b. 1866, elected 1914. The population of the diocese is 374,000. There are: 32 parishes, 57 secular priests, 30 regular priests, and several Sisters.

Piazza Armerina, DIOCESE OF (PLATIENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—72c), in the province of Caltanissetta, Italy, suffragan of Syracuse. Bishop Starzo is still the incumbent of the see, which has a Catholic population of 240,000. There are 31 parishes, 162 churches, 205 secular priests, 35 regular priests, 50 seminarians, 1 college for men with 8 professors and 70 students, 7 secondary schools with 60 teachers and an attendance of 500 boys and 900 girls, 1 normal school with 20 teachers and 500 pupils, 1 training school with 8 teachers and 80 pupils, 160 elementary schools with 160 teachers and 10,000 pupils. Charitable institutions include 5 almshouses, 7 day nurseries, 7 hospitals and 6 orphanages for girls. Fourteen societies are organized among the laity. During the war the clergy took the lead in all relief work.

Pignatelli, GIUSEPPE MARIA, VENERABLE (cf. C. E., XI—82d).—The cause of his beatification, introduced under Gregory XVI, was resumed 25 February, 1917.

Pinar del Rio, DIOCESE OF (PINERTENSIS AD FLUMEN; cf. C. E., XII—101b), suffragan of Santiago de Cuba, Cuba. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Manuel Ruiz y Rodríguez, b. 1874, ordained 1897, elected 18 April, 1907, consecrated 11 June following. The population of the diocese is 173,064. There are 19 secular priests, 8 Sisters, 4 convents, and 25 churches.

Pinerlo, DIOCESE OF (PINEROLIENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—102a), in the province of Turin, Piedmont, Northern Italy, is a suffragan of Turin. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Giovanni Battista Rossi, b. at Cavallermaggiore, 1838, came to this see 18 May, 1894. During the World War the bishop provided bread for all poor families of soldiers and twenty-two of the priests served in the army, all winning praise and various decorations for their services. During recent years the diocese lost a prominent member from the ranks of its clergy, by the death of Rt. Rev. Canon Pietro Caffaro, a well known writer. By 1921 statistics the diocese comprises 61 parishes, 92 churches, 68 mission stations, 2 monasteries for women, 1 convent for women, 169 secular priests, 1 higher and 1 lower seminary, 68 seminarians, 4 secondary schools for boys and 1 for girls.

There are a number of schools, a gymnasium, lyceum, technical institute and normal schools under the government. The charitable institutions include 1 missionary center, 4 homes in the city and 3 more throughout the diocese, 17 asylums, 2 hospitals and 2 clinics. One society is formed among the clergy and the "Popular Union" (Unione Popolare) and other societies among the laity. There are about 60,000 Catholics and 20,000 Waldensians in the diocese.

Pious Schools, CLERKS REGULAR OF THE (cf. C. E., XIII—588a).—The congregation is divided into 12 provinces: Rome; Liguria; Naples; Tuscany; Bohemia, Moravia and Silesia; Poland; Hungary; Austria; Catalonia; Aragon; the Castiles; and Valencia. There are also 3 vice-provinces: Cuba; Argentina-Chile; and Roumania. The congregation has a total of 136 houses, distributed as follows: Spain, 55; Italy, 28; Czechoslovakia, 19, including Moravia and Bohemia; Roumania, 3; Austria, 4; Hungary, 12; Poland, 2; Germany (Silesia), 1; Argentina, 2; Chile, 4; Cuba, 5; Mexico, 1. The present prepositus general is Very Rev. Thomas Vinas, elected 1912. Among noted members of the order are: Paulino Chelucci, latin orator; Remigio Maschat, celebrated canonist; Gelasio Dobner, distinguished historiographer; Eduardo Corsini, polygrapher; Giovanni Beccaria, physicist, friend of Franklin; Ubaldo Giraldi, writer on canon law; Mauro Ricci, writer; Eduardo Zlanas, controversialist. The cause of peatification of Pietro Casani was introduced in March, 1922.

Pious Unions. See ASSOCIATIONS, PIOUS.

Pisa, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PISANENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—110b), in Tuscany, Central Italy. The present administrator is Cardinal Archbishop Pietro Maffi, b. 12 October, 1858, ordained 1881, consecrated titular Bishop of Caesarea Mauretanae and auxiliary to Cardinal Archbishop Riboldi of Ravenna, 9 June, 1902, promoted to the Archdiocese of Pisa, 22 June, 1903, created cardinal priest 15 April, 1907. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 190,000. There are: 138 parishes, 330 secular priests, 110 regular priests, 750 churches and chapels, 79 Brothers, 200 Sisters.

Pistoia and Prato, DIOCESE OF (PISTORIENSIS ET PRATENSIS; cf. C. E., XXII—117b) in the province of Florence, Italy, suffragan of Florence. The bishop is Rt. Rev. Gabriele Vettore, b. at Fabbiano, 1869, elected to the see of Tivoli, 15 April, 1910, consecrated 9 May, transferred at the consistory of 16 Dec., 1915, succeeding Bishop Sarti (b. 1849, elected 1909, d. 1915).

Within the city of Pistoia there are 12 parishes, 35 churches, 2 convents for men, 3 monasteries for women, 6 convents for women, a seminary with 70 students, a civil hospital in charge of Sisters, an almshouse, likewise under the direction of Sisters, 2 orphanages (1 for boys and 1 for girls), 2 refuges for fallen women, a hospice for women with elementary, secondary and normal schools, one for men under the direction of priests, a public governmental lyceum-gymnasium, a public industrial school, one of arts and crafts, a technical school, and an orphanage. In Prato there are 48 parishes, 70 churches, 4 convents of men and 3 of women, 82 secular and 35 regular priests, 1 semiary with 20 seminarians, 1 college for men with 25 professors and 80 students, 3 for women with 20 teachers and 200 students, 1 normal school with 10 teachers. Charitable institutions include 2 homes, 1 asylum, 1 hospital, 1 day nursery. The population of the united dioceses was 200,100 in 1920.

Pitigliano, DIOCESE OF. See SAVONA AND PITIGLIANO.

Pittsburg, DIOCESE OF (PITTSBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—121a), suffragan of Philadelphia in the United States, comprises 7056 square miles in the State of Pennsylvania. The development of the diocese in recent years is largely due to the wisdom and leadership of Rt. Rev. J. F. Regis Canevin who filled this see from 1904–1920. Pennsylvania, ranking first among the States of the Union in the value of its mineral products and the development of the iron, steel, coal and coke industries, and being one of the largest sources of labor supply in the country, has drawn great masses of foreign-speaking Catholics, attracted by the industrial activity. Missions have grown, developing into large and well established parishes, and the Pittsburgh Apostolate, which from its inception (1905) under the admirable direction of Very Rev. Edward P. Griffin, LL. D., has reclaimed so many souls in the thinly settled regions of the diocese, joined in this pioneer work. Its zealous priests went out among the immigrants of the wide scattered settlements and mining towns, preaching and administering the sacraments. During Bishop Canevin's administration 33 English, 19 German, 19 Polish, 13 Italian, 16 Slavish, 1 Lithuanian, 3 Croatian, 2 Slovak, 3 Hungarian, 1 Kreiner, 1 Syrian and 30 mixed churches were built. The building of schools was urged and encouraged, and a parish school system evolved, with a diocesan board in control which legislates for the schools of the diocese, inspects them, and passes upon the ability of the teachers. Parish high schools were rarely heard of in the diocese before Bishop Canevin's time; now there are forty-six, and their number is increasing steadily. Higher education was encouraged and in 1914 St. Vincent Seminary, which is under the care of the Benedictines of St. Vincent Archabbey, was empowered by the Holy See to grant the ecclesiastical degrees of doctorate, licentiate, and baccalaureate, in both philosophy and theology; Duquesne College was successful in securing the charter which elevated it to the rank of University. (See DUQUESNE UNIVERSITY.)

The Diocesan Confraternity of Christian Doctrine, organized 1908, has grown to be a lay apostolate; a band of young men and women journey every Sunday to mining towns and rural districts and give their time where Catholic children are in need of catechetical instruction; the confraternity is now preparing 17,179 children for the worthy reception of the sacraments. Fourteen branches throughout the whole diocese have 700 catechists who conduct 193 classes, visit the scattered families, bring to baptism the unbaptized, reclaim for their own schools children who attend non-Catholic Sunday-schools, instruct the Catholic inmates of two tuberculosis sanitoriums, the Institute for the Blind, and the Home for Crippled Children, and organize Catholic centers which develop in time into regular missions and parishes; fifteen such parishes have been formed since the founding of the confraternity.

The Conference of Catholic Charities, whose activities were broadened during the Catholic Charities Campaign of October, 1919, has as its purpose the co-ordinating of the work of all Catholic charitable activities of the diocese, whether individual, organizational or institutional, to avoid duplicating, to increase the efficiency of these agencies, and to plan and promote new diocesan charities. This program has been executed with marked success; three temporary homes have been established which give day and night shelter to children in emergency cases; three day nurseries have been provided; the thoroughly organized Catholic Children's Bureau is a clearing house for all matters relating to the care of neglected, dependent and delinquent children; over 1728 cases were attended during the period of twelve months. The department of family welfare handles all family problems of insufficient support and supplies families with food, clothing, fuel, rent, medical aid. More than 7900 cases were attended. An immigrant and employment bureau has been opened; a home for homeless children has been established; a school of sociology, under the auspices of Duquesne University; the Catholic Child and Youth Saving Union has been organized, with units established in each parish to co-operate with pastors and parish organizations to keep as many children as possible out of the courts and institutions by handling their difficulties privately, and by securing Catholic representatives to look after their interests when brought to the courts. The Travelers Aid Society co-operates with the National Travelers Aid Society; in addition to these charitable organizations many new institutions were founded during Bishop Canevin's incumbency: 4 asylums, a second home of the Good Shepherd, 1 industrial training school, 1 institute industrial training school, 1 institute for deaf mutes, 1 home for infants and 6 hospitals.

When years of intense activity had impaired Archbishop Canevin's health in the Spring of 1920, he offered his resignation to the Holy Father, who finally yielded to his wishes and on 26 November 1920, appointed him administrator of the diocese until his successor should be appointed and take possession. In recognition of the success of his administration the Holy Father on 9 January 1921, appointed him archbishop of the titular See of Pelusium.

Upon the resignation of the bishop the priests of the diocese forwarded a petition to the Holy See begging that a diocesan priest be appointed to the vacant see and in response Rev. Hugh C. Boyle, P. R. of St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Homestead, Pa., was appointed and consecrated by Bishop Canevin 28 June 1921. He was born in Cambria County, Pa., 8 October 1873, educated at St. Vincent's College and the seminary at Beatty, Pa., and ordained priest 2 July 1898, superintendent of the parochial schools of the diocese (19 March, 1909), and appointed irremovable pastor of St. Mary Magdalene's Church, Homestead, Pa. 26 November, 1916.

The religious communities of the diocese number as follows: Redemptorists, 9 members; Benedictines, 67; Passionist Fathers, 16; Brothers of Mary (Dayton, Ohio), 10; Capuchin Fathers, 33; Holy Ghost Fathers, 30; Carmelite Fathers, 8; Italian Franciscan Fathers, 6. Total: 179 members. The religious communities of women number: Sisters of Mercy, 394 members; Sisters of Notre Dame (mother-house, Baltimore) 50; Franciscan Sisters, 250; Sisters of St. Joseph, 266; Benedictine Nuns, 92; Ursuline Nuns, 24; Sisters of Charity, 331; Little Sisters of the Poor, 35; Sisters of the Good Shepherd, 50; Sisters of Divine Providence, 264; Sisters of Nazareth (mother-house, Chicago), 82; Third Order of St. Francis, 35; Sisters of the Incarnate Word, 10; Felician Sisters (mother-house, Detroit), 70; Sisters of St. Agnes (mother-house, Fond-du-Lac, Wisconsin); Passionist Nuns, 25; Immaculate Heart Nuns (mother-house, Scranton), 46; Bernardine Sisters, 20; Sisters of Sts. Cyril and Methodius, 7; Sisters of the Divine Redeemer, 4; Holy Ghost Nuns, 22; Sisters of the Blessed Trinity, 4; Sisters of the Precious Blood, 4; Vincentian Sisters, 67; Dominican Sisters, 39; Sisters of St. Francis of the Immaculate Conception, 14; Sisters of St. Francis of Kungunda, 5; Total: 2216.

By 1921 statistics there are: bishop, 1; archbishop, 1; archabbot, 1; diocesan priests, 454; regular, 169; churches with resident priests, 329; missions, 55; chapels, 80; stations, 7; parochial schools, 208, with 1371 teachers and 71,769 pupils; seminaries of religious orders 3; diocesan seminarians, 99; diocesan ecclesiastical students, 96; university, 1; with 81 professors and 1362 students; colleges for women, 1; with 18 teachers and 100 students; parochial high schools, 35; private high schools, 11; total: 46 with an attendance of 2102; religious normal training schools, 9 with 335 students; industrial school, 1 with 46 pupils; day nurseries, 3; orphan asylums, 5; foundling asylums, 2; protectory for boys, 1; school for deaf mutes, 1; homes for aged poor, 3; homes of Good Shepherd, 2; homes for working girls, 2; temporary homes for children, 3; temporary home for women, 1; hospitals 8; Catholic population about 665,000.

Pius X (cf. C. E., XII—137 for the earlier part of his pontificate).—On 1 November, 1911, Pius X issued a decree which made the new Breviary obligatory after 23 October, 1917. All the bishops and religious orders were ordered to modify their proper Offices so as to bring them as much as possible in touch with the Breviary of the Universal Church. In the same year he gave a new impulse to the study of Holy Scripture, in keeping with the purpose of Leo XIII, by reorganizing the Biblical Commission. He ordered severe and solemn examinations for clerics who were seeking for degrees, and set apart a special establishment for the members of the Commission. On 24 May, 1911, he directed the Portuguese clergy not to accept pensions from the Government, and when the revolution with its attendant persecution broke out he replied to the challenge by making the Patriarch of Lisbon a cardinal. His Encyclical "Lamentabili" of 1912 denounced the oppression of the Indians of Peru by the rubber merchants of that country and after a special agent had been sent to investigate, he established a mission for the Indians which he put in the hands of the Friars Minor. His abolition of the numberless inefficient seminaries in Italy by establishing regional centres had been carried out with extreme vigor from the beginning of his pontificate even to the extent of deposing unwilling bishops. By the year 1913 the great work was in large part achieved. His political action in Italy was such that in the early part of his reign he had induced 228 deputies to refrain from legislation hostile to the Church and especially to vote down the divorce bill. In 1914 he forbade the transference of cardinals from one see to another, reformed the financial methods of the various Congregations, sent back to their dioceses a large number of clerics who were spending an idle existence in Rome, and restricted all the parishes of the city. Pius X was stricken with serious illness the early part of 1913, but he rallied. In the following year he began to show signs of fatigue. He had an attack of bronchitis on 19 August, 1914, which was alarming; and on the following day he breathed his last.

Pius XI, POPE (ACHILLE RATTI), b. May 30, 1857, at Desio, a town of about 8000 inhabitants northwest of Milan. He was the son of a silk weaver and the third of a family of six. He was taught as a child by a devoted old priest named Volonteri, who taught class in his own house for forty-three years. To Achille he gave intensive training and sent him well equipped to the Milan Seminary, where he spent three years, going thence to the Gregorian University in Rome. In 1882 he was teaching theology and sacred eloquence at Milan, and in 1888 was chosen as one of the College of Doctors of the Ambrosian Library. There he spent twenty years of his life. In 1907 he was made Chief Librarian, and in 1910 was called to Rome as assistant of Father Ehrle, S. J., in the Library of the Vatican, and was appointed Librarian when Father Ehrle resigned that office, in 1914, without, however, breaking his connection with the Library at Milan. His position in both places was very difficult, for racial hatred was acute at that time between Germans and Italians and the anti-clerical fury was intense, but his admirable tact smoothed away every obstacle. In 1918 he was sent as Apostolic Visitor to Poland, although he had no previous experience in diplomacy, except what he had gathered during school visits to Vienna in 1891 and to Paris in 1893 with Mgr. Radini Tedeschi. His Polish assignment coincided with the composition of the Brest-Litovsk Treaty by the Germans, who were in occupation of Poland at that time, and had placed Warsaw under the control of a council of regents whom the Poles regarded as instruments of German domination. He was in Poland practically throughout the period of its political resurrection, and his duties brought him into relation with the former Russian provinces along the eastern Polish frontier. He had to establish new dioceses where German bishops in Poland had resigned, and others in those parts which had formerly belonged to Russia. Immediately after the Armistice of 1918 he had to deal with the question of the status of church properties in both sections. To solve it he created a commission of bishops which was recognized by the Polish Government, and at the same time he succeeded in obtaining from the Polish Constituent Assembly a resolution that no law would be enacted about the properties without consulting the Holy See. On 6 June, 1919, since Poland had become an independent nation, Mgr. Ratti was made Papal Nuncio.

His work in these trying circumstances brought into evidence his firmness, courage and evenness of temper. His courage was especially shown at the time of the Bolshevik invasion in July, 1920. Most of the officials fled; he remained at his post. Later he was appointed High Ecclesiastical Commissioner for the plebiscite in Upper Silesia; an appointment which met with the approval of the Polish, German and Interallied Commissioners. While serving on the Commission he was active in securing the liberation of the prisoners detained in their homes by the Bolsheviks, and also in releasing such distinguished personages as the Archbishop of Mohileff and the Bishop of Minsk. He was distributing food meantime among the Russian and Polish children, being provided with money for this purpose by the Pope.

His success at this post was rewarded by his promotion to the Archbishopric of Lepanto and he was consecrated on 28 October, 1919, in the Cathedral of Warsaw, in the presence of the officials of the Polish Government, the members of the Constituent Assembly and the episcopacy of Poland. On 13 June, 1921, he was made Archbishop of Milan and created cardinal. Even the anti-clericals and Socialists of Milan were jubilant over his appointment, notwithstanding that it was he who had changed Musioli Facismo from an extreme Socialist into a patriot and supporter of the House of Savoy. He was elected Pope on 6 February, 1922, and his accession hailed with an almost universal acclaim.

Plasencia, DIOCESE OF (PLACENTINA; cf. C. E., XII—157d), in the Province of Caceres, Spain, suffragan of Toledo. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Angelo Regueras y Lopez, b. 1870, elected 26 March, 1915, consecrated 14 September following. The area of the diocese is 4110 square miles and the Catholic population is 300,000. There are 174 parishes divided into 15 archipresbyterates, 322 priests, 175 churches, 147 chapels, 37 convents with 49 members of religious orders of men and 355 Sisters.

Plater, CHARLES DOMINIC, author, b. at Mootlake, England, in 1875; d. at Malta on 21 January, 1921. After finishing his studies at Stonyhurst, he became a Jesuit 7 Sept., 1894, and during his scholasticate went to Oxford where he received a degree of M.A. in 1907, giving much of his time at this period of his life to the study of industrial economics. After his ordination he was made professor of Psychology at St. Mary's Hall, and in 1916, he was sent as rector to the Jesuit House at Oxford, Campion Hall. There he set to work again at his economics, but his health gave way and he was sent to Ireland and then to Malta to recuperate. In the latter place he began to give lectures on his favorite topic, but overtaxed his strength and died there.

Plenary Councils.—Under the Code a plenary council is convoked and presided over by the papal legate under the Pope's orders. It is to be attended by the archbishops, residential bishops, who, however, may send their coadjutors or auxiliaries to represent them, by Apostolic administrators of dioceses, abbots or prelates nullius, vicars Apostolic, prefects Apostolic and vicars capitular, all of whom have a deliberative vote; titular bishops residing within the territory may be called by the papal legate, in accordance with his instructions, and are to have a deliberative vote, unless the contrary was expressly provided when they were summoned to attend. Those having a deliberative vote must, if they are prevented from attending, send a deputy who, as such, has only a consultative vote.

Plock or PLOTSK, DIOCESE OF, PLOCENSIS (cf. C. E., XII—166d), in Poland, dependent of Warsaw. Rt. Rev. Anthony Nowowiejski, b. at Lubien, diocese of Sandomierz, 11 February, 1858, ordained 10 July, 1881, was elected bishop of Plock 12 June, 1908, and consecrated at Petrograd 6 December following by Bishop Wnukoski, his predecessor, who was promoted. Rt. Rev. Adolph Peter Szelazek, b. at Stoczek, diocese of Podlachie, 1 July, 1865, ordained in 1888, was elected titular bishop of Barca and auxiliary to Plock 29 July, 1918.

From 1915 to 1918 the diocese was occupied by the German army, and in 1920 it was laid waste by the invading Bolsheviks; four priests were butchered and many suffered great indignities and even torture. Twelve priests served as chaplains in the Polish army during this fighting. The laymen of the diocese serving in the army fought with great valor, especially in opposing the Bolsheviks. Charitable organizations were formed for the care of the sick and wounded, the destitute and the orphaned. The two-hundredth anniversary of the founding of the diocesan seminary was celebrated in 1910 and with apostolic concurrence the graduate alumni were awarded the academic degree of Doctor of Theology with certain reservations. Among the recently deceased of note are: Rev. Alexander Zarcmba, cathedral canon, domestic prelate, professor of Holy Scripture in the diocesan seminary, editor of the periodical "Encyklopedia Koscielna," died in 1907, aged 50 years; Rev. Casimir Welonski, cathedral prelate, rector of the diocesan seminary, afterwards became Fr. Justinus, prior-general of the order of Piarists in Czesochowa, died in 1915, aged 82 years; Rev. Brenislau Marjanski, canon professor at the seminary, contributor to and editor of the weekly "Mazur," died in 1912, aged 49 years; Rev. Anthony Brylusynski, domestic prelate, professor at the seminary, pastor, popular author, died in 1912, aged 70 years; Rev. Adam Maciejowski, professor at the seminary, gifted orator and author, died in 1919, aged 45.

The diocese is divided into 12 deaneries and has a Catholic population of 824,331 Poles attended by 375 secular and 3 regular priests and 1 lay brother. There are 252 parishes and churches with 54 dependent churches; 1 monastery for men and 1 for women; 1 convent for men and 8 for women; 1 seminary, and 1 lyceum erected in 1915 for students of philosophy and theology with a combined total of 18 professors and 118 students; 27 normal schools with 280 teachers and 10,000 students; 5 elementary schools with 35 teachers and 600 pupils; 5 industrial schools with 25 teachers and 700 students; 5 homes; 6 asylums; 8 orphanages; 6 hospitals; 3 refuges; 10 settlement houses; 25 day nurseries. The Government contributes as best it can to the support of the normal schools conducted in the Polish language, which have been recently opened in various cities and towns of the diocese. The clergy have an association for spiritual welfare called "Unio Apostolica," and one for intellectual advancement, "Unitas Plocka." In almost every parish there are one or more religious associations for the laity. One Catholic daily called "Kurjer Plocki," 1 weekly, and 3 periodicals are published.

Plunket, Oliver, Blessed. See OLIVER PLUNKET, BLESSED.

Plunkett, JOSEPH MARY, Irish poet and patriot, b. in Dublin, 1887; d. there 1916, the son of Count and Countess Plunkett, belonging to a Catholic branch of the family whose name was in Irish history for six hundred years. He was educated at the Catholic University School, Belvidere College, and spent two years studying philosophy at Stonyhurst. He kept up Scholastic Philosophy and was much influenced by the study of mystical contemplation. On account of ill health he was forced to lead a life of inactivity and spent his winters abroad. He studied Irish under Thomas MacDonagh and with him took over the "Irish Review." He was the friend of MacDonagh, Pearse and Casement and a partner in the foundation of an Irish theatre in 1914. In spite of his ill health, he had remarkable power of will and was a Spartan type, contemptuous of sentimentality. His first published work was "The Circle and the Sword," a book of verse. Plunkett was a militant mystic. His poems were few, yet they are of purest beauty and lovely simplicity and like the name of his first book his symbols were the eternal circle and the destroying sword. The intensity of his love of God and man and Ireland shone from the man himself, and the works he has left us, although few, are immortal. At the age of twenty-nine he died, as he had said to the priest who gave him the last rites of the Church, "for the glory of God and the honor of Ireland." For the history of the Easter Rebellion in which Plunkett died, see PEARSE.

SAMUEL FOWLE TELFAIR, JR.

Plymouth, DIOCESE OF (PLYMTHENSIS, PLYMUTHE; cf. C. E., XII—171b), in England, forms part of the Province of Birmingham. At the present time (1921) the diocese is under the administration of the Rt. Rev. John Keily, D.D., who was appointed to this See upon the resignation of Bishop Graham, due to the infirmity of age in 1910. Bishop Keily was born in Limerick, Ireland, on 23 June, 1854, and was ordained priest in Plymouth in 1877, after which he was made chancellor of the cathedral. He received his appointment as bishop on 21 April, 1911, and was consecrated on 13 June, by Cardinal Bourne, assisted by Bishop Barton of Clifton, and Bishop Keating of Northampton, now Archbishop of Liverpool.

The National Catholic Congress of 1913 was held in Plymouth and with the exception of two members, was attended by all the hierarchy, the town representatives and the headquarters staff of the army and navy. During the World War heavy responsibilities were thrown upon the clergy of this diocese by the number and size of the hospitals and the influx of the wounded of all nationalities. Since the ending of the war, in spite of financial difficulties and heavy taxation, much has been done in the way of reconstruction in the diocese. The advance of religion has been noticeable among the Catholics and the public street preaching by the Catholic Evidence Guild (q. v.) has had a marked effect in conversions. A monthly periodical "The Diocesan Record," is now published.

By the census of 1921 the diocese has a Catholic population of 16,898 and includes: 96 churches, chapels and mission stations; 76 secular priests and 48 regular (Benedictines, Canons Regular of Lateran, Cistercians and Marists); 42 convents; 23 public elementary schools receiving Government grants and 11 which do not receive grants; 2 other schools for boys and 17 for girls; the total number of children in these schools is 3586. Among the charitable institutions are: 1 hospital, 5 residential institutions for poor children, orphanages, poor law, industrial or reformatory schools, and 1 refuge. In 1919, there were 238 conversions of Protestants.

Plymouth Brethren (cf. C. E., XII—172a).—This denomination is split in the United States into six sects which for convenience will be designated by numbers, since it is impossible to find a distinctive name for each.

I. This sect claims to follow more closely the teachings of the founders and hence is sometimes referred to as the "Exclusives." Membership (1916), 3896.

II. This sect comprises those who are known as the "Open Brethren." It split from the parent body in 1848. Membership (1916) 5928.

III. This branch "represents the extreme high-church principle of Brethrenism . . . that absolute power of a judicial kind has been delegated by Christ to the Christian assembly" (Religious Bodies, 1916, pt. II, p. 173). Membership (1916), 476.

IV. This branch broke away from the others in 1890, owing to a controversy in regard to the subject of eternal life. They are more numerous in the British Empire than in the United States. Membership (United States, 1916), 1389.

V. This branch split from No. III on a question of discipline. It first appears in the United States religious bodies reports in 1916. Membership, 1820.

VI. In 1906 a disagreement on questions of church order in branch No. IV. in England, caused a split in the United States also. Membership (United States, 1916), 208.

In 1921, all branches reported 470 churches and 13,717 members in the United States.

Podlasie, DIOCESE OF (JANOW, PODLACHIENSIS; cf. C. E., IX—403, s. v. LUBLIN), in the palatinate or województwo of Lublin, in Poland, suffragan of Warsaw, restored by Benedict XV in 1918. The diocese of Podlasie was erected on 2 July, 1818, by the separation of 118 parishes from the dioceses of Poznań, Płock, Kraków, Łuck, and Chełm, the city of Janów on the river Krzywula in the województwo of Brzesz being the episcopal see. In 1428 Witold the Great Duke of Lithuania (Lithuania) erected a villa at Porchów which he donated later with its parish church to the cathedral of Łuck. Bishop Józefowicz in 1465 developed the villa into a town changing its name to Janów. In 1657 Janów was destroyed by the Swedes. Subsequently Paul Algemutowicz, Duke of Orsza and Bishop of Łuck, rebuilt the ruined church which in 1741 was made a collegiate church and in 1818 became a cathedral. Pius IX enriched it with the relics of St. Victor martyr, which were solemnly deposited there on 11 June, 1859. The first bishop of this diocese, Felix Lucas de Lewino Lewinski, ruled from 1819 till his death on 5 April, 1825. He was succeeded by Joannes Marcellus de Gutkowo Gutkowski, who ruled from 1826 till his deportation by the Russians in 1846 to the province of Witebsk, the diocese being administered during his absence by Bartholomaeus Radziszewski, a canon of Janów, as vicar-general. Bishop Gutkowski died in exile in Lwów in 1855. The third bishop, Benjaminus Petrus Paulus Szymanski, previously Commissary of the Warsaw province of the Capuchins was preconized in 1856, and took possession of the cathedral in 1857, ruling the church of Podlasie until 22 May, 1867, when the diocese was suppressed by the Russians to facilitate the spread of their Schismatic church, and united to Lublin, the bishop being deported to Loniza, where he died on 15 January following. From that date until 1918 the diocese has been ruled by the Bishop of Lublin as administrator Apostolic. When the Russian schismatics were thus for over forty years endeavoring to crush out Catholicism, they confiscated many Catholic churches, suppressed parishes, and forbade the building of new or the repairing of old churches. For instance, in the civil district of Biala, between 1874 and 1900, out of eleven parishes, churches, ten were suppressed and one was allowed to be built in Jucna, where the Schismatics had confiscated the magnificent church of Our Lady of Kodén. In 1905, when the persecution was relaxed, almost 200,000 of the Greek Schismatics returned to the true fold, some new churches being built and a few of the suppressed parishes revived.

When Russia fell in the European War, the Schismatics took to flight, and on the restoration of Poland, hope sprang up again in the hearts of the faithful. The diocese was restored and Mgr. Henry Przezdziecki, formerly vicar general of Warsaw, was elected bishop of Podlasie 24 September, 1918, succeeding Bishop Szymanski, who had died in 1868. He was born on 17 February, 1873; ordained on 22 December, 1895, preconized on 24 September, 1918, and consecrated at Warsaw on 17 November, 1918. At present he resides at Siedlce, where the diocesan curia is located. The ecclesiastical court, however, is being held at Luków, until proper quarters have been prepared at Siedlce. The diocesan seminary of Benedict XV in Janów was restored on 8 October, 1919, and has 7 professors and 50 seminarians, of whom 19 are studying theology and 31 philosophy; in addition 2 seminarians are studying at the Warsaw University and 3 at the University of Lublin. The cathedral chapter comprises 4 prelates or dignities and 8 canons. At present the first dignity or dean is Mgr. Ceslaus Sokotowski, coadjutor to Mgr. Przezdziecki, and titular Bishop of Pentacomia. He was born at Warsaw on 9 July, 1877, and nominated to his titular see on 4 October, 1919. He is also rector of the seminary and vicar general of the diocese. The progress of the Church during the last three years may be seen in the increase of the number of parish churches to 174, with 291 churches and chapels. There is a shortage of priests, however, for though there are 225 they are insufficient to cope with all the work of the diocese with its 644,318 Catholics. They are assisted by 3 Pauline Fathers, 1 priest of the Immaculate Conception, 3 Salesians (2 priests) and 3 Resurrectionists. There are 19 Sisters of the Immaculate Conception with 1 house, 8 Franciscan Sisters of the Family of Mary, 2 houses; 3 Felician Sisters (Franciscan Tertiaries of St. Felix), 1 house; 6 Little Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, 1 orphanage and 1 hospital, 19 Vincentian Sisters of Charity, 4 hospitals, 1 orphanage; in all there are in the diocese 3 homes for the aged and destitute; 5 orphanages; 5 day nurseries; and 7 infirmaries. The diocese has clerical co-operative associations called "Unitis Viribus" in Siedlce; and a diocesan bulletin or review, "Wiadomość Diecezjalne Podlaskie."

Poggio Mirteto, DIOCESE OF (MANDELENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—178c), in Central Italy, dependent directly on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Luigi Ferretti, b. 1862, elected 1917, consecrated 1918, succeeding Bishop Nirra, deceased. The Catholic population is 35,000. There are: 36 parishes, 45 secular priests, 8 regular priests, 12 seminarians, 5 Brothers, 40 Sisters, 113 churches and chapels.

Pohle, JOSEPH, theologian, b. at Niederspaw, near Coblenz, Germany, on 19 March, 1852; d. at Breslau, on 21 February, 1911. He studied at Trier, graduating in 1871 and the following year proceeded to the Gregorian University at Rome, where he won doctorates in philosophy and theology, and studied astronomy under Father Secchi, whose life he wrote in later days. He was ordained in 1887, and subsequently taught theology at Baar in Switzerland, and Leeds, England; and philosophy at Fulda, 1886-89, in which year he was called to the chair of apologetics in the Catholic University of America, which he filled with distinction for five years, when he resigned and returning to Germany occupied the chair of dogmatic theology in Münster, Westphalia. Three years later he was called to the same post in the University of Breslau, where in 1915-1916 he served as rector magnificus. In 1913 he had been made a domestic prelate of the Pope. Pohle's writings are highly esteemed for their depth of thought and accuracy of doctrines. His chef d'œuvre is a "Lehrbuch der Dogmatik," the fruit of his lectures on dogmatic theology, which was translated into English (12 Vols.) by Dr. Arthur Preuss of St. Louis, editor of the "Catholic Fortnightly Review" (St. Louis). Among his other works are a biography of Angelo Secchi (2nd ed., 1904); two theological monographs: "De providentia divino" and "De conceptu creationis divinus"; a popular introduction to astronomy, "Die Stemenwelten und ihre Bewohner" (6th ed., 1910). In addition he was for several years editor of the "Philosophisches Jahrbuch" of the Görres Society, and contributed numerous articles to the "Kirchenlexikon," the "Kirchliches Handlexikon," the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, the "Historich politischer Blätter," and other reviews.

Poitiers, DIOCESE OF (PICTAVENSIS; cf. C. E. XII—178d), in the department of Vienne, France, suffragan of Bordeaux. In 1918 Mgr. Humbrecht, Bishop of Poitiers, was promoted to the Archdiocese of Besançon, and was succeeded in Poitiers by Mgr. de Durfort, actual bishop. Born at Montfermeil, diocese of Versailles, 12 July, 1863, he was ordained in 1887, made prelate of the Holy See in 1899, and Prothonotary Apostolic five years later. In February, 1911, he was appointed Bishop of Langres and consecrated the following May, remaining there until he was transferred to his present see. Mgr. Humbrecht became Bishop of Poitiers in 1911, succeeding Mgr. Pelge who died 31 May of that year. On 1 March, 1912, the Cathedral of Poitiers was made a basilica. An important event in the diocese was the centenary celebration of the birth of Cardinal Pie, 1915. During the World War 280 priests and 130 seminarians from the diocese of Poitiers were mobilized, 13 of the former and 34 of the latter died, two received the Médaille Militaire, 73 the Croix de Guerre, and 2 were proposed for the Legion of Honor.

The diocese comprises the departments of Vienne, in which there were 332,376 Catholics in 1920 (Poitiers, 41,292), and Deux-Sèvres, in which there were 337,627. In the same year the diocese counted 69 parishes, 574 succursals and 97 vicarages formerly supported by the State.

Poland (cf. C. E., XII—181c), REPUBLIC OF, an independent state since 9 November, 1918. In 1914 at the beginning of the World War, the Poles were promised independence by the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas, Commander-in-Chief of the Russian armies. Similar promises were made several times during the course of the war by the Central Powers, the rulers of which even went so far, in 1916, as to sign a decree to that effect, and to notify the Holy

See that their intention was to form the Polish provinces occupied by them into an independent State. The Poles placed no confidence in their promises, and Polish soldiers found themselves fighting in enemy camps with one aim, the reconstruction of the dismembered kingdom. General Pilsudski, with his "Polish legions," crossed the border of Russian Poland 5 August, 1914, in an effort to loosen Russia's grip on that territory. The following year the central Powers succeeded in driving out the Russians and on 5 August, 1915, the German army entered the City of Warsaw under the command of Prince Leopold of Bavaria. The German occupation lasted for three years, during which time they carried away from Warsaw and the provinces many valuable objects from public and private buildings, requisitioning not only the copper roofs and church bells, but even the door handles, emptying the city of all the supplies left by the Russians, and devastating the forests of the country. The Germans at first established the Citizens' Central Committee for the government of Poland, then the so-called Temporary Council of State (1917), and finally the Regency Council composed of Prince Lubomirski, M. Ostrowski and Archbishop Kapowski of Warsaw. It was aided by a Council of State and a Council of Ministers, but had very little legislative or administrative power. The Polish Legions which refused the oath of fidelity to the Kaiser as commander-in-chief of the armies of the Central Powers, were disbanded and interned and General Pilsudski was arrested 22 July, 1917, and transferred to Madgeburg. The Polish Secret Military Organization covering all Poland with its network was formed at this time.

The Treaty of Brest-Litovsk (15 December, 1917-3 March, 1918), between Germany and the Bolsheviks, by the terms of which Poland found herself despoiled of her former territories for the recovery of which she had been fighting side by side with the Central Powers, brought about a clash. Influenced also by the Russian revolution (March, 1917), the entrance of the United States into the World War (April, 1917), and the proposal of a free, united and independent Poland with access to the sea made by President Wilson, and his famous fourteen points, Poland joined the Allies. The most powerful factor in this decision was Ignace Paderewski, who demanded the repudiation of Germany and Austria and whose reputation and personality won for the cause of Poland the sympathy of America and the allied countries. Under his influence a Polish army was formed in France and the United States and the National Polish Committee in Paris was recognized, 18 October, 1917, as the only legitimate government of Poland. In General Foch's great offensive many Polish soldiers fought with heroism. The Armistice signed by Germany, 11 November, 1918, opened a new era for Poland, an independent republic was proclaimed and a government formed under the control of the Moderate Socialists. General Pilsudski, freed by German revolutionists, returned to Warsaw and was given supreme military authority. The German General Beseler fled, and the German troops in Poland were disarmed and expelled by the Polish Secret Military Organization. The Polish Republic was proclaimed and a temporary government elected 14 November, with Pilsudski as first President, until a Diet should establish a regular Government. Paderewski was sent to Warsaw where he was enthusiastically greeted by the people and 15 January, 1919, he formed a new Cabinet in which he was Prime Minister. The following message was sent to Paderewski from Paris at the direction of President Wilson: "The President of the United States directs me to extend to you as Prime Minister and Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Provisional Polish Government, his sincere wishes for your success in the high office which you have assumed, and his earnest hope that the government of which you are a part will bring prosperity to the Republic of Poland. It is my privilege to extend to you at this time my personal greetings and officially assure you that it will be a source of gratification to enter into official relations with you at the earliest opportunity, and to render to your country such aid as is possible at this time, as it enters upon a new cycle of independent life, which will be in due accord with that spirit of friendliness which has in the past animated the American people in their relations with your countrymen."

Paderewski's cabinet resigned 13 December, 1919, and he was sent to France as diplomatic representative from Poland to the League of Nations. In January, 1921, he resigned and returned to the United States, having earned the undying gratitude of his countrymen and given signal proof of his love for Poland. During his term of office the Polish Constitutional Diet was formed, which unanimously confirmed General Pilsudski as president (20 February, 1919), and reaffirmed Poland's alliance with the Allied Powers. By the treaty of Versailles, signed by Dmowski and Paderewski, the Polish National Committee in Paris was dissolved and the independence of Poland formally recognized by the Allies. On 31 July the treaty was ratified by the Polish Diet. A new constitution was drawn up by the Diet and solemnly adopted 17 March, 1921, when a solemn Te Deum was chanted in the cathedral of Warsaw. All the legislative power in the republic is vested in the National Assembly, which is composed of the Diet (Sejm) and the Senate. The executive power is exercised by a President and a Cabinet of Ministers, the former elected every seven years. The Diet dissolves by its own vote. Religious freedom is granted to all loyal citizens, and the Catholic Church as the church of the majority, takes first place in the State among the other creeds equal before the law. The relations between Church and State are to be regulated by a special concordat to be ratified by the Diet. The more important political parties in the Constitutional Diet are: the Polish People's Party (84 members), the National People's Union of Diet (79 members), the National People's Union (42 members), the Polish Socialist Party (33 members), the Christian National Worker's Club (28 members), the National People's Christian Party (22 members), the National Worker's Circle (25 members). The total number of members in the Diet is 412; at present (1922) the liberal and moderate Socialist element is stronger than the Catholic element.

Poland was invaded in 1920 by the Russian Bolsheviks, who, after initial victories that seemed to threaten the fall of Warsaw, were finally defeated, with a loss of 30,000 prisoners and 90,000 casualties; the Poles were the first of their enemies to be victorious over Soviet Russia. A preliminary peace treaty was signed at Riga, 12 October, 1920, and ratified 18 March, 1921.

RELIGION.—As a national consequence of the religious freedom granted by Poland in 1919 many religious communities expelled from Russian Poland have returned and several new congregations have made foundations there. There are now in the country, Communities of Men: (1) Capuchin Fathers, Warsaw, Nowe Miasto, 18; (2) Redemptorist Fathers, Warsaw, 8; (3) Marian Fathers, Bielany, Warsaw, 18; (4) Jesuit Fathers, Warsaw, 7; (5) Vincentian Fathers, Warsaw, 15; (6) Franciscan Fathers (Conventuals), 5; (7) Salesian Fathers, Warsaw, Praga, 13; (8) Resurrectionist Fathers, Warsaw, etc., 9; (9) Brother Albert's Brothers, Warsaw, Praga, 6. Communities of Women: (1) Sisters of Perpetual Adoration, Sakramentki; (2) Sisters of St.

Mary of Visitation, Wizytka; (3) Sisters of Holy Family of Nazareth, Nazaretanki; (4) Sisters of St. Felix a Cantalicio, Felicyanki; (5) Sisters of Resurrection, Tmartwychstanvki; (6) Sisters of Immaculate Conception, Niepokalanvki; (7) Sisters of St. Mary's Servants (Scovulae), Sluzsieniczvis; (8) Sisters of St. Mary's Family, Rodzina Maryi; (9) Sisters of St. Mary a Misericordia, Serafitki; (10) Sisters of Brother Albert, Albertynki. In general: regular priests, 56; nuns, 30; religious sisters, 28, and many Sisters of Charity especially of St. Vincent de Paul. Hospitals, asylums and other humanitarian institutions number 38; 15 of which are under the care of Sisters of Charity. There are also several hidden Congregations of Men and Women, with their rules approved by Rome; they were especially needed when Poland was under Russian government and similar religious institutions were by law either prohibited, persecuted or totally suppressed. They dress like the seculars, and are working in the city, in provinces and villages, exercising their beneficial influence and apostleship. Several hidden missionaries, especially Jesuit Fathers, worked among the Uniates.

The general meetings of the Polish episcopate are productive of much good for the Church. Through them unity of action, the organization of the new and restored dioceses and a general strengthening of the Catholic movement are effected. They are always held under the guidance of the Papal Nuncio. The first was held in Warsaw, 11 March, 1917, because of the hundred years' jubilee of the Archdiocese, Poland being yet under German occupation. The second in Warsaw, 10 December, 1918, and the third, 20 January, 1919, before the elections to the Constitutional Diet, when a general episcopal letter to the nation and Polish people was issued. The fourth in Warsaw, because of different social, ecclesiastical and educational questions, 13 March, 1919. The fifth in Gniezno, 27 August, 1919, at the tomb of St. Wojciech, Archbishop and Martyr, in thanksgiving to God for the restitution of a united and independent Poland, and asking the benediction of the Almighty that it may prosper as it did at the time of St. Wojciech. The sixth was held at Warsaw at the consecration of Mgr. Ratti. The seventh on 10 January, 1920, on the occasion of the return of the newly-created Cardinals to Poland and the bringing of the symbolical St. Josaphat's Candle. The eighth was held at Oksienetochowa, at the shrine of Our Lady and Queen of Poland, in the very heart of Catholic Poland. The national vows were renewed, their fulfillment promised and Holy Virgin again proclaimed as Queen of Poland, and asked to save Poland from the Bolsheviks, as she has saved the nation in similar danger in 1655. The meeting in Oracow, 28 May-3 June, 1921, at the tomb of St. Stanislaw, Bishop and Martyr, ended with the solemn and public consecration of the whole Polish nation to the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, read in public procession by Mgr. Dalbor, Primate of Poland.

After the resurrection of Poland two new dioceses were erected as suffragans to the Metropolitan See of Warsaw, one in Podlachia with its episcopal residence at Siedlce, which was formerly suppressed by the Russian Government, the second formed from the Archdiocese of Warsaw and comprising the industrial districts of Poland. Its episcopal residence is in Lodz. The proposed erection of a theological faculty at the University of Warsaw will have an immense influence on the education of the clergy of the archdiocese.

In fulfillment of a promise made 3 May, 1791, just before the partition of Poland and in thanksgiving for the restoration of liberty and unity, the Diet voted to erect a church in Warsaw in honor of Divine Providence. In December, 1921, the first Polish Missionary Congress of Clergy was held in Warsaw, and a Missionary Union of Clergy formed to increase the missionary spirit in Poland. In April, 1918, Mgr. Ratti, since elevated to the papacy, was sent by Pope Benedict XV as Apostolic Visitor to Poland, which was then nominally free but under German occupation. After the republic was proclaimed, an Apostolic Nunciature of the second class was erected in Poland, with Mgr. Ratti as Nuncio. He was appointed titular archbishop of Lepanto 3 July, 1919, and was consecrated in the cathedral of Warsaw the following October in the presence of the Primate and many of the bishops of Poland, President Pilsudski, Premier Paderewski and other civil representatives. In 1921 Mgr. Ratti was made Archbishop of Milan and was succeeded as Nuncio by Mgr. Laurenti Lauri, titular archbishop of Ephesus, who was formerly nuncio to Peru. M. Wladislas Skrzynski is the Minister Plenipotentiary and Envoy Extraordinary of Poland to the Holy See, having presented his letters of credit 15 October, 1921. The newly-created Polish cardinals Card. Dalbor, Primate of Poland and Card. Kakowski, Archbishop of Warsaw, created 15 December, 1919, brought with them from Rome the symbolical candle of St. Josaphat. On the day of the canonization of St. Josaphat, 27 June, 1867, Pius IX returned to the alumni of the Polish College in Rome, the beeswax candle given him in accordance with a long-established custom, telling them to preserve it in the college until they could light it in a free and independent Poland. At the public allocution to the new Cardinals, Benedict XV expressed his conviction that the time had now come for the fulfillment of the will of his predecessor, and the candle was solemnly given to the Cardinals by the rector of the Polish College. With great ceremony it was placed in the cathedral of Warsaw and during the Pontifical Mass, President Pilsudski was invested to light it. The sermon on this occasion was preached by Mgr. Pelczar, who had witnessed the ceremony on the canonization of St. Josaphat.

Religious freedom also brought to Poland many non-Catholic creeds and sects. There are now in Warsaw Methodists, Quakers, Baptists, Bible Students and various societies from North America; notably the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., which at first under humanitarian pretenses and then openly spread their heretical doctrines. They meet with temporary success owing to the high purchasing power of foreign money, and are helped by the native Protestants and Jews. There are some native independent churches, such as the Marianites, but they have few adherents.

Amongst the Polish religious and clergy recently deceased was Brother Albert (Adam Chnnwelowski), former artist, who devoted his life to work amongst the most wretched and destitute. He founded a congregation known as Brother Albert's Brothers and Sisters, and died a holy death in Cracow, 25 December, 1915. Rev. I. Radziszewski, d. 22 February, 1922, was founder and rector of the Catholic University at Lublin, which is under the care of the Polish episcopate and of great benefit to Catholic youth. During the Bolshevik invasion Father Skorupka, twenty-seven years old, chaplain of the Eighth Division of Infantry, was killed as he rallied his regiment under terrific machine gun-fire, to attack the enemy, in the decisive battle of the invasion. His heroism was officially recognized by the General Staff.

Policastro, DIOCESE OF (POLICASTRENSIS; cf., C. E., XII—212b), in the Province of Catanzaro, Southern Italy, suffragan of Salerno. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Giovanni Vescia, b. 1848, elected 1899. The Catholic population of the diocese is 64,000. There are: 38 parishes, 195 secular priests, 9 regular priests, 234 churches and chapels.

Polsi, SANTA MARIA DI, an abbey in the Diocese of Gerace, Italy, erected into an abbey nullius 8 April, 1920.

Pondicherry, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PONDICHERIANA or PUDICHERIANA; cf. C. E., XII—228d), in India, has a total Catholic population of 143,450, of whom, 1000 are Europeans, 1200 Anglo-French Indians and 142,000 Indians; 25,760 of these Catholics are in the French territory of the diocese. The present archbishop, Most Rev. Elias Jean Joseph Morel, has filled the See since 1909. He was born at Bellefontaine, diocese of St. Claude in 1862, and entered the Seminary of the Foreign Missions in 1884. After his ordination he was sent to Pondicherry, where he became rector of the college of Cuddalore and in 1904, vicar general. He was appointed bishop 11 May, 1909, and consecrated 21 September of the same year. Within recent years the diocese has lost three most zealous workers by the deaths of Rev. Father Darras (1916), the apostle of the North Arcot district, where he had baptized about 2500 heathens, Rev. Father Mette (1917), author of several catechisms and founder of a training school for catechists, and Rev. Father Drouhin (1918), a great promoter of primary education and religious doctrine in the diocese and the editor of two monthly periodicals. The cyclone which occurred in 1916 in this section, destroyed many buildings throughout the diocese. During the World War twelve of the missionaries went into the service and some of these were made prisoners, but none were seriously wounded and all eventually returned to their missionary labors.

The present (1921) statistics show 58 parishes and missions, 66 churches and 229 chapels, 3 convents for men and 37 for women, 93 secular priests, 65 European and 28 Indian, 21 Brothers of St. Gabriel, 69 European and 268 Indian Sisters and 1 seminary with 22 seminarians, 10 of whom belong to the diocese. The educational institutions include in addition to this seminary, a lower seminary-college at Pondicherry with 998 pupils; a branch school at Tirupapuliyur with 1380 pupils; Montfort European boys' high school at Yerand with 50 pupils; Sacred Heart girls' high school with 48 pupils; a training school for teachers at Findicanam under the Brothers of St. Gabriel; St. Joseph's orphanage and industrial school with 60 pupils; a Government training industrial school and a training school for catechist at Villupuram. In addition to these there are throughout the diocese 113 elementary schools for boys, boarding and day schools for girls under the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, various industrial schools, and schools under the Indian Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, which was established in 1844 under the rule of the Third Order of St. Francis. The Indian Congregation of St. Louis of Gonzaga which was founded about the middle of the eighteenth century for bringing up non-caste children, has 46 Sisters in charge of 2 orphanages and 6 schools.

The charitable institutions include 21 orphanages for boys and girls with 550 orphans, besides 18 who have been placed in the care of Christian families, 1 refuge for Eurasian women, and 2 homes for the aged, 1 at Pondicherry and 1 at Karikal.

Pontremoli, DIOCESE OF (APUANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—234b), suffragan of Pisa, Italy. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Angelo Antonio Fiorini, O. M. Cap., b. 1861, elected 1899. The Catholic population of the diocese is 63,157. There are: 126 parishes, 204 secular priests, 9 regular priests, 75 seminarians, 6 Brothers, 30 Sisters, 361 churches and chapels.

Poona, DIOCESE OF (PUNENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—235d), in India, is a suffragan of Bombay. The second bishop of the diocese, Rt. Rev. Henry Doering, S. J., who had filled the see from 1907, resigned in 1921, and the affairs of the diocese are now administered by an apostolic administrator, at present the Rev. A. Bruder, S. J. The Catholic population is numbered at 20,801 and there are 22 churches and 20 chapels served by 13 Fathers of the Society of Jesus and 22 secular priests, assisted by the Nuns of Jesus and Mary and the Daughters of the Cross. The Ahmednagar mission now has 9068 Christians. Among the educational institutions are: St. Vincent's High School, Poona, with 330 pupils; St. Joseph's convent school, Poona, with 350 pupils under eleven nuns of Jesus and Mary who also conduct the European Orphanage and St. Ann's School with 16 boarders and 36 day scholars; convent school at Igatpuri with 76 pupils and a poor school with 47 children; also a convent school at Panchgani with 142 pupils, both under the Daughters of the Cross; English teaching schools at Bhusaval, Igatpuri, Lanowli, Sholapur, Ahmednagar, Dharwar and Hubli, with a total of 735 pupils. In the Ahmednagar Mission districts there are 86 village schools attended by 1456 children and in the Gadag Mission districts 5 elementary schools with about 300 children.

Poor, LITTLE SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XII—248b).—The mother-house of this congregation is at La Tour St. Joseph, St. Pern, Ille-et-Vilaine, France; there are also novitiates in Italy, Spain, Belgium, the United States, Australia and China. The total number of foundations (1920) is 312, distributed as follows: France and Alsacia, 111; of which 8 are in Paris; Belgium, 14; England and Jersey, 27; Spain and Portugal, 54; Italy, Sicily, and Switzerland, 22; Turkey and Hungary, 2; Asia, 8; Africa, 5; South America, 9; Oceania, 8; United States, 52. The order numbers 6227 members and cares for 45,297 old people.

Poor Brothers of St. Francis Seraphicus (cf. C. E., XII—248d).—The present general superior is Brother Athanasius Wietmann, who was elected in 1901, and during whose term of office the rules of the congregation have been approved by the Holy See (1910). In 1904 the congregation was affiliated to the order of St. Francis. In 1910 St. Josephaus, the juvenile home at Aachen, was moved into a new house. In 1919 a home for mechanic apprentices, who work in the city, was established at Cologne. In 1921 branch houses were opened at Essen, where the Brothers conduct a hostel for boys; and at Aix-la-Chapelle, where they care for abandoned young people. An educational institution, called the Piusheim, was opened by the Brothers at Glonn, Bavaria, in 1921. In the same year the Brothers of Cincinnati, Ohio, founded a protector for boys at Armstrong Springs, Little Rock, Arkansas. The American houses were erected into a province in 1913. In consequence of the war the educational institution at Marienbrunn, Province of Posen (now Poland), founded in 1909, and the asylum for homeless children, founded at Herbesthal, Province of Eupen (now Belgium), in 1910, were given up in 1919. At the present time (1921) there are 16 institutions under the care of the Brothers: 12 educational houses, 1 workingman's colony, 1 apprentice home, 2 asylums for the homeless and abandoned. In Europe there are 202 members of the congregation and 59 in America. Sixteen promising members lost their lives during the war.

Poor Child Jesus, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XI—251).—The first superior general of the congregation was Mother Clara Fey, born 11 April, 1815, at Aix-la-Chapelle. She started her work 2 February, 1844, in her native town and remained at the head of the congregation till her death, 8 May, 1894. She was followed in office by Mother Innocentia (Elizabeth Brown), b. 13 August, 1840, at Landstuhl, Rheinpfalz, entered the congregation on 12 June, 1855, was elected superior general on 2 July, 1894, died 25 February, 1900. The third superior general is Mother Franziska Chantal (Antonie Happ), b. 12 June, 1854, at Solingen. She entered the congregation 20 December, 1880, was elected superior general 8 May, 1900, and re-elected 2 July, 1906, and 2 July, 1912; the election due 2 July, 1918, was, with special permission of the Holy See, postponed to the same date, 1920. A decree of the Holy See which, according to the new Code of Canon Law, would have rendered a further re-election impossible or invalid, had not yet reached Bishop Schrijnen of Roermond who, according to the rule, presided at the act. The unanimous re-election of Mother Franziska Chantal was thereupon declared valid by the Roman authorities.

A new foundation was made at North Finchley near London in 1908. It now has flourishing day and boarding schools. Further foundations took place in 1912 at Cologne where the Catholic orphanage of the city was confided to the sisters' care; in 1914, at Flagharen, Holland, where a Catholic girls' school was opened. In 1917 a house was founded at Schleiden (Eifel), with a small high school, which is also to serve as a convalescent home for the members of the congregation. Two foundations were added to the three already existing at Cologne: in 1917 a house for lady students and girls in business was opened and in 1918 the Sisters took charge of the orphanage at Cologne-Ehrenfeld, which had been established in a separate house from their own during the Kulturkampf.

At the present time the number of houses is 44. Owing to the extraordinary mortality during the war and the following years (the average number of deaths before the war was 24, from 1915 to 1920 inclusive it increased to 55), the total number of Sisters was 1730 on 1 August, 1921. A considerable number of candidates had to be refused admission on account of over delicate or ill health. Besides the provincial novitiates at Maastricht and Vienna there were two more erected at Southam near Rugby (1916) for English, and at Borsbeek near Antwerp (1920), for Belgian and French candidates. Training colleges for teachers are at Maastricht, Dusseldorf, and Vienna, colleges preparing for University examinations at Neu-Dusseldorf and North Finchley. There are high schools at Cologne, Ehrenfeld, Cologne-Kalk, Dusseldorf, Neuss, Godesberg, Bitburg, and Schleiden in Germany; at Maastricht, Roermond-Land, and Swalmen in Holland; at Vienna, Retz, Stadlan in Austria; at Brussels, Antwerp, Borsbeek, and Gemmenich in Belgium. There are under the Sisters' care more than 20,000 babies, children, young girls of all classes and students preparing for the University.

The following were the co-foundresses of Mother Clara: Mother Theresia Startz, vicarress (d. 2 September, 1895); Mother Dominica (d. 20 December, 1893); Mother Magdalena, superioress of Southam (d. 2 June, 1902); Sister Aloysius (d. 9 April, 1889); Sister Franziska, directress of the church embroidery work (d. 19 February, 1901). A book by Mother Clara Fey, "Advents-und Weihnachts-betrachtungen," was published at Freiburg in 1921.

Poor Clares (cf. C. E., XII—251c).—The German community of Poor Clares in the United States has convents in Cleveland, Chicago, Rockford, Ill., and Oakland, Cal. The Italian community in the United States has foundations at Omaha, Neb.,

New Orleans, La.; Evansville, Ind.; Boston, Mass.; Bordentown, N. J.; Philadelphia, Pa.; New York, N. Y.; Philips, Wis.; and Victoria, B. C. According to the census of the Poor Clares, taken in 1921, the following is the present status of the order: Italy, houses 132, members 2022; Corsica, h. 1, m. 27; Palestine, h. 3, m. 54; Prussia, h. 19, m. 237; Bavaria, h. 3, m. 104; Holland, h. 4, m. 75; Belgium, h. 39, m. 1040; Ireland, h. 9, m. 168; England, h. 14, m. 327; France, h. 28, m. 747; Spain, h. 238, m. 4489; Peru, h. 11, m. 198; Columbia, h. 10, m. 150; Ecuador, h. 5, m. 124; Bolivia, h. 3, m. 65; Argentina, h. 1, m. 20; Brazil, h. 5, m. 106; Mexico, h. 1, m. 46; Canada, h. 1, m. 34; United States, h. 12, m. 231; total, h. 581, m. 10945.

Poor Handmaids of Jesus Christ (cf. C. E., XII—254c).—Since 1911, many notable improvements have been made in various institutions conducted by the order. Foremost among these is that of the large addition built to the St. Joseph Hospital in Fort Wayne, Ind. This hospital, the cornerstone of which was laid in 1912, is modern in every detail and is one of the ten standardized institutions of its kind in the State of Indiana. In 1913, at Bishop Aldering's expressed desire, the Mercy Hospital at Gary, Ind. was taken over by the order, and later another hospital was built in New Ulm, Minn. The beautiful property adjoining Lake Gilbraith in Indiana was purchased 18 March, 1917, to serve as the location of the new mother-house, the erection of which is expected to be completed in May, 1922. The second Mother General, Mother M. Amalia, died 24 February, 1916, and was succeeded by the present Mother General, Mother M. Firmata. The Order has 3600 members, of whom 620 are in charge of 44 institutions in the United States. The institutions under the care of the Sisters are hospitals, homes for the aged, orphanages, high schools, parochial schools, and kindergartens. In Gary, Ind., at the request of Fr. DeVille, the Sisters give instructions in religion to children of all nationalities, who are Catholic, but who attend the public schools. Over 1300 pupils, divided into classes according to a systematic plan, attend these instructions. The community is represented in the dioceses of Fort Wayne, Alton, Belleville, Superior, and in the Archdioceses of Chicago and St. Paul.

Popayán, ARCHDIOCESE OF (POPAYANENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—258c), in Colombia. According to statistics for 1921, there are in the archdiocese 39 parishes, 114 churches, 2 missions in charge of the Redemptorists and Lazarists respectively, 57 secular and 24 regular priests, 2 convents of men, Redemptorists and Carmelites; 4 convents of women, Franciscans of Bethlehem; 13 houses of the Brothers of Charity; 4 houses of Marist Brothers with 80 Brothers, 1 seminary, which gives higher and preparatory courses and has 118 seminarians; 1 university, 5 colleges for boys and five for girls, 1 high school, 1 normal school for boys with 30 students, 1 for girls with 36 students; 327 elementary schools with 274 teachers and 22,500 pupils and 15 industrial schools; 6 hospitals and 3 asylums. All Catholic schools are under supervision of the ecclesiastical authorities; a few are aided by the civil Government. Recent events of importance in the diocese were the celebration of the golden jubilee of the restoration of the seminary by the Lazarists and the separation of part of the territory of the diocese, which was erected into the Prefecture Apostolic of Tierradentra, 13 May, 1921.

Popular Action (ACTION POPULAIRE).—Among the many organizations dedicated to the purpose of Catholic social action, one of the most interesting and most significant is l'Action Populaire, founded in France in 1903, by Abbé Leroy, a French priest who had previously been engaged in work among the poor. His aim was to create a central information bureau, library and publishing agency for French Catholics who interested themselves in social questions. The enterprise was launched modestly, very modestly indeed, because adequate financial support had not yet been secured. A kitchen and a shed, remodelled as offices, served to house the handful of secretaries and editors whom Abbé Leroy had brought together at Reims. Soon, however, the organization expanded. An entire building, the Institut Maintenon, 5 Rue des Trois-Raisinetts, Reims, in the shadow of the noble Reims cathedral, was taken over as headquarters. By 1912, the central office had a staff of sixteen editors—ten priests and six laymen—and twenty-seven secretaries, besides a staff of travelling representatives and several hundred collaborators in France and abroad. In ten years, 1903-1912, the Action Populaire distributed about 1,000,000 pamphlets, 150,000 leaflets, and 60,000 volumes of Catholic literature on social problems. It regularly published several series of year-books, manuals and periodicals. Moreover, it rendered valuable service as an information bureau. In its library was a remarkable collection of social and economic treatises and official documents, besides files of some four hundred periodicals. Every year the central office at Reims received thousands of inquiries, and returned thousands of replies dealing with such diverse but useful matters as how to found a mutual aid society, how to start a Catholic trade union, how to organize a co-operative store, where to find authoritative information on the question of social insurance, what kind of a job a young peasant girl should try to obtain when she went to Paris, what books a Catholic should consult on the principles of sociology, what Catholic lecturer could be called upon for a speech on the labor problem, etc. Often the office would send out an expert to help organize a social service institution. As time elapsed the A. P. broadened its activities still further by organizing study courses and conferences, by sending out representatives as itinerant lecturers, and by holding social conventions, sometimes primarily for the clergy, sometimes for workingmen, sometimes for lay social workers. The German invasion of France during the Great War of 1914-1918 made it necessary for the Action Populaire to suspend its activities and to seek new quarters in Paris. At the close of the war, however, the organization resumed its activity and established its offices at 188 Rue de Breinut, Noisy-le-Sec, near Paris.

The Action Populaire is part and parcel of what may be called the Catholic Social Movement. Beginning toward the middle of the nineteenth century with the isolated, almost sporadic, efforts of men like Ozanam, Villeneuve-Bargemont, and Von Ketteler, growing powerfully under the patronage of Leo XIII, spreading rapidly throughout Europe and into the other continents, the Catholic Social Movement has not only awakened in millions of Catholics an active interest in social welfare, but has become so potent a factor in contemporary social questions as to attract the interest of non-Catholics, even of persons bitterly hostile to the Church. It is in the light of this general Catholic awakening to the vital importance of social justice that the true significance of the Action Populaire most clearly appears. When Abbé Leroy put his hand to the plough in 1903, he found the ground already broken by Count Albert de Mun, Henri Lorin, Marquis de la Tour du Pin, and many another courageous pioneers. Already there had sprung up Catholic Workingmen's Clubs, Catholic labor unions, employers' unions, Catholic social study groups, a Young Men's Catholic Association, and other organizations devoted to social reform and welfare work. On these the Action Populaire could draw for support and sympathy; for these it could act as a central bureau and publishing house; to these it could give new inspiration and solidarity. The attitude of the Action Populaire toward social and economic questions was explained by Abbé Desbuquois, the director of the institution, in a series of articles written in 1912. The fundamental principles of Catholic social action, he declared, were to be found in Leo XIII's historic Encyclical "On the Condition of the Working Classes" (Rerum Novarum) and other papal letters. It was the duty of Christians, he believed, not merely to give bread to the hungry, homes to the homeless, care to the sick, and alms to the penniless, but also to work for the reform of industry and society on a basis acceptable to Christian morality, and to strive for the prevention, as well as the palliation, of social injustice. The aim should be to create employment bureaus which would minimize the evils of involuntary idleness, to build airy and sanitary dwellings in which the dread plague of tuberculosis would not find easy lodging, to organize industry so that injustice and avarice would not prevail, to Christianize manners and morals, to combat irreligion, intemperance, and vice. This program would require both spiritual influence and temporal reforms, such as the organization of industrial unions or guilds, the enactment of labor laws, and the establishment of welfare institutions. In all such matters, Catholics must remain loyal to the Christian conception of liberty, of human rights and duties, of justice and charity, if the perilous errors of economic laissez-faire, Marxism, and Syndicalism are to be avoided.

The value and scope of the services rendered by the Action Populaire as a center for the stimulation of Catholic social work and for the dissemination of Catholic principles as well as of economic and sociological information may best be indicated by a description of its publications. At the outset, the Action Populaire began to publish three thirty-page pamphlets or brochures every month, at the popular price of five cents. Each pamphlet was a handy treatise on some such question as old-age pensions, labor unions, strikes, co-operation, housing problems, employment service, vocational training, child-labor, accident compensation, Socialism, factory inspection and income taxes. Though they were published at a nominal price and written in popular style, these little yellow-covered pamphlets were not, as one might be inclined to suppose, the haphazard results of hasty journalism; they were prepared by eminent economists and sociologists, French and foreign, Catholic and non-Catholic. They attained a surprisingly large circulation and their influence was very wide. Other series were inaugurated from time to time as the need appeared. For example, the growth of Catholic social study clubs led the Action Populaire to issue a series of Plans et Documents, comprising documentary and doctrinal material for the use of such clubs. Again, when complaints were heard that the great papal encyclicals and the texts of important social laws were not easily available except for special students, the Action Populaire issued five-cent reprints of such documents, in a series called Actes Sociaux. In addition, there were Feuilles Sociales, or brief summaries in question-and-answer form, and Tracts Populaires, mere leaflets for popular propaganda.

In 1908 the Action Populaire took a further step forward; it began to publish regular periodicals devoted to social questions. The first was "La Revue de l'Action Populaire," a diminutive green-covered magazine, published on the tenth of each month and the twentieth of alternate months. Though unpretentious in form, this little review was exceedingly valuable for its studies of social legislation and its detailed articles on practical social work. A younger magazine, "La Vie Syndicale," was created for the purpose of encouraging Catholic trade-unionism. But the most important of the periodicals was "Le Mouvement Social," a continuation of "L'Association Catholique," which had been founded by Count Albert de Mun's Association of Catholic Workingmen's Clubs in 1876; and had won an international reputation as one of the most informing and best-documented reviews dealing with the labor question. This review was taken over by the Action Populaire in 1909 and edited by Abbé G. Desbuquois and M. Joseph Zamanski. With scholarly leading articles on economic and legislative problems, with bibliographical notes on French and foreign books, with brief summaries of important articles published by French and foreign periodicals, and with news items covering all sorts of social and economic events, "Le Mouvement Social" was invaluable to any serious student of social welfare. Even anticlerical Socialists quoted it.

Only a few words may be said about the annuals and other books published by the Action Populaire. One of the most interesting, as well as the earliest, of these was the "Guide Social," published yearly, beginning in 1904, a volume of several hundred pages giving the latest information, statistics, and bibliography on the various aspects of the social problem—housing, hygiene, trade-unionism, co-operation, labor legislation, etc. This year-book proved so useful that beginning in 1911 a much more pretentious thousand-page annual, "L'Année Sociale Internationale," was issued. This was a truly monumental reference work, a veritable annual encyclopedia for social workers and sociologists. But enough has been said, for this brief article, of the Action Populaire's publications, although many other useful manuals and books have not been mentioned.

The Action Populaire has been fortunate in obtaining not merely the passive approval, but the enthusiastic support, of the higher clergy in France and of the Holy See. Up to 1916, the institution had received commendations from the pope, the papal secretary of state, six cardinals, and seventy-six French bishops and archbishops. In 1912, His Holiness Pius X said, "non solum laudo sed approbo." In 1909, Cardinal Merry del Val, then papal secretary of state, wrote: "What especially pleases the Sovereign Pontiff is to observe by what principles the Action Populaire is inspired. Its frankly Catholic spirit, superior to all party struggles, its entire fidelity to the teachings of the Church, . . . finally, its generous aim of working for the true welfare of the laboring class, which is so worthy of interest, are pledges that it will produce precious and enduring fruits. . . . Cardinal Luçon, Archbishop of Reims, wrote in 1911: "The orthodoxy of your principles, your Catholic spirit, your scrupulous attention to conformity with the directions of the Holy See, as well as the talent and science of your collaborators, make the Action Populaire, in my opinion, a trustworthy school of social studies, and make its publications the classics, so to speak, of Catholic work."

A more extended bibliography is given in the last-mentioned book.

PARKER THOMAS MOON.

Population (cf. C. E., XII—276c).—Fresh interest has been developed the past ten years in the Malthus Theories on over-population and the consequent necessity of controlling or limiting the number of births, not by continence or the practice of self-restraint, as he came to counsel in his later works, but by various preventives, physical or chemical, for the use rather of the woman than of the man. Neo-malthusianism is the name given to a movement to propagate by books, periodicals and newspaper advertisements, a knowledge of these preventives or contra-conceptives, as they are styled. Discussions on over-population as the cause of poverty, of vice and of war led many at first to take this movement seriously, but its unnatural and immoral principles, the apparent quest of lucre on the part of its promoters, disillusioned the public, and it is now regarded for what it is, a gospel of unrestrained lust sure to result in grave physical and moral disorders, such as sterility when pregnancy is really desired, fibroid tumors and other bodily derangements for the woman, and various forms of neurasthenia for both man and woman, causing unhappiness, melancholy, distrust, as when children appear despite the use of preventives, remorse, loss of mutual respect, infidelity, separation, divorce. To the woman the practice is particularly hurtful and degrading, as it falls to her lot, according to the advocates of the practice, to use the artificial preventives, thus taking the more direct harm from them, and to accept the conditions of prostitute for those of married life proper.

The theories of the Neo-malthusians are based on several errors, for it is not true, as they claim, that there is such a thing as over-population, nor is it true that population increases by multiplication while food and other supplies increase only by addition, nor finally is it true that over-population is a cause of crime, war or high death rate. Over-population means too many human beings to feed, clothe and shelter. When thirty years ago scientists estimated that the population of the earth was 1500 millions, they also estimated that it could support only four times that number and that it would be over populated in 200 years. As supplies of food and other necessities increase with the hands to produce them, it is estimated that the earth could be made to supply not merely 6000 millions but four times that number, although in point of fact population has been increasing for centuries, they manage to find sufficient living supplies except where floods, wars, or misgovernment result in famine conditions. The exigencies of the late war have taught the nations how to overcome, if not to prevent, the ordinary causes of famine. Improved methods of producing, conserving and transporting food, clothing and housing materials make it possible to provide for any normal growth in population. With supplies increasing in proportion to population, there is no such thing as over-population. Besides, with all the skill in organizing relief in time of famine, volcano, earthquake and with all the advance of medical science, catastrophes will occur to kill off population, and diseases, new entirely in form, will occur to decimate population, so that nature thus sets a limit to excess. What nature may not do, human beings themselves will do, as did Greece two hundred years before Christ, anticipating as they did the counsels of Malthus, living in luxury, controlling, that is to say, avoiding, pregnancy, and decaying as a consequence, as did their conquerors, the Romans, who in turn imitated their vices, and since then notably the Mohammedan and other peoples who, to indulge in lust have ignored the command to increase and multiply.

Increase in population may be made a cause of greater production and wealth, under proper political and economic conditions, rather than of poverty. Crime is never so common nor so heinous among the poor as among the rich. The very evils which birth control encourages lead necessarily to moral disorder and decadence, which bring on the scarcity, the vice, and the misery which birth control is designed to prevent.

The small family is not the most happy one for the parents or for the one or two children to whom it is limited, even should such children live. Third, fourth and fifth children are often more favored in their heredity than their predecessors and they supplement one another's defects. Selfishness is often characteristic of the only or of the few children than of the houseful. As a rule the healthier and more attractive married woman is the mother of several children. The evil moral and economic consequences of this movement are so plain that governments are taking cognizance of it. It is unlawful in France to publish books or periodicals recommending it. In the United States such publications are denied the privilege of the mails.

Port Augusta, DIOCESE OF (PORTAUGUSTANA; cf. C. E., XII—283d) is suffragan of the Archdiocese of Adelaide, South Australia. By the census of 1911, it had a Catholic population of 12,653, mostly of Irish origin, with a few Poles. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. John Henry Norton, has filled the see since 1906. He has been very active in recent years in building new churches, presbyteries, schools and convents in the diocese as well as in reducing the debt. In October, 1919, the diocese received a visit from the apostolic delegate, Rev. D. B. Cattaneo. The diocese includes 12 parishes, 36 churches, two religious orders of women, the Sisters of St. Joseph numbering 49, and the Sisters of the Good Samaritan, numbering 9; 12 convents, 21 secular priests, 1 high school with 2 teachers and attendance of 41, and 13 elementary schools with 47 teachers and 1226 pupils. The Priests' Eucharistic League is organized as well as the Australian Catholic Federation. Children of Mary, Sacred Heart Society, and Hibernian Australian Catholic Benefit Society among the laity. The "Southern Cross," a periodical published in Adelaide, is circulated in this diocese.

Port Louis, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS LUDOVICI; cf. C. E., XII—289a), comprises the Island of Mauritius, dependent directly on the Holy See. The diocese was confided to the Holy Ghost Fathers in 1916. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. John Murphy, C. S. SP., b. in County Kerry 1854, provincial of Ireland, elected bishop 1916, consecrated at Dublin, enthroned 28 Jan., 1917, succeeding Bishop Bilsborrow promoted to the Archdiocese of Cardiff. The area of the diocese is 739 square miles and the population is 276,233, of whom the Catholics number 120,000. There are: 27 parish churches, 40 chapels, 53 priests, of whom 26 are Holy Ghost Fathers, 7 Jesuits, and 2 Benedictines. One of the first missionaries to evangelize Mauritius was Fr. James Laval in 1842. At his death 40,000 blacks followed his venerated remains to the tomb, which has become a place of pilgrimage not only for Catholics but for Mussulmen and pagans.

Port de Paix, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS PACIS), in Haiti, dependent on Port au Prince.—This diocese was erected 3 October, 1861, but has never had a bishop and Mgr. Kersuzan, Bishop of Cap-Haïtien, is the Administrator Apostolic of the diocese, which he has entrusted to the care of 12 Fathers of the Company of Mary (Blessed Louis de Montfort). There are 100,000 Catholics; 5 lay brothers assisting the 12 priests above mentioned; 5 parishes; 7 churches; 12 missions; 5 convents for men, and 4 for women.

Port-au-Prince, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PORTUS PRINCIPIS, cf., C. E., XII—284c), comprises the western part of the Republic of Haiti and has a Catholic population of 736,920. The present (1921) incumbent, the Most Rev. Julian Conan, has filled this see since 1903, and is also Apostolic Administrator of the diocese of Gonaïves. He was born at Guern in the diocese of Vannes on 16 June, 1860, preconized 22 October, 1903, and consecrated bishop at Port-au-Prince on 13 December of the same year. Since 1911 the archdiocese has been making rapid progress. A new cathedral constructed by the Haitian government was dedicated the 22 December, 1914; on 4 August, 1914, the Government signed an agreement with the archbishop authorizing the clergy to found a number of rural primary schools to be supported by the State and subject to government inspection. The archbishop established an Apostolic School in 1920 for the preparation of young Haitians who wish to study for the priesthood and in 1921 there were 9 students enrolled. During the World War 31 of the secular clergy were mobilized and of these 2 were killed, 15 received the croix de guerre and in all 24 citations were won among them. Of the regular clergy 9 Fathers of the Congregation of the Holy Ghost and 3 Brothers entered the army and of these 5 won the croix de guerre, and of the 24 Christian Brothers who also served, 1 was decorated with the Legion of Honor and 8 with the croix de guerre. The total number of secular and regular clergy of the diocese has diminished since 1911, owing to the general mobilization during the War, which not only took many priests away, but greatly lessened the number of students for the priesthood.

At the present time there are 28 parishes, 53 secular priests, 3 congregations of religious men and 3 of women. The Fathers of the Holy Ghost conduct a secondary school and the Seminary College of St. Martial, with 475 pupils, at Port-au-Prince. There are 18 Fathers and 5 Brothers among the professors, and 2 other Fathers of the Congregation administer the parish of Pétion-Ville. Under the Christian Brothers there is a secondary school, the Institute of St. Louis of Gonzaga, with 675 pupils at Port-au-Prince, as well as 4 government primary schools throughout the diocese. There are also 3 Fathers of the Society of Mary, 2 of whom administer the parish of Carrefour, while the third acts as chaplain to the Brothers. Among the religious orders of women there are: 95 sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, who conduct a secondary school at Port-au-Prince and 1 orphanage, 1 hospital and 7 government schools in different parts of the diocese; the Daughters of Wisdom (105 in all) who conduct a secondary school at Port-au-Prince and 3 hospitals and 4 Government schools in other parts of the diocese; the Daughters of Mary (10 in all), who conduct a professional school, normal school and industrial school at Port-au-Prince.

Port of Spain, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PORTUS HISPANICÆ; cf. C. E., XII—291a), in the Antilles. According to statistics for 1921, the archdiocese has 46 parishes, 59 churches, 10 missions, 56 stations, 13 secular and 78 regular priests, 10 lay brothers, 159 nuns in 7 convents, and 1 monastery for men. There are 2 colleges for boys with 25 teachers and an attendance of 460; 4 secondary schools for girls with 40 teachers and 664 pupils, 2 training schools with 8 teachers and 20 students; 176 elementary schools with 704 teachers and an attendance of 27,136 and 2 industrial schools with 15 teachers and 300 pupils. Charitable institutions include 2 homes for the aged, 1 home for poor girls and 1 orphanage. The hospitals, asylums, refuges and day nurseries are all under the control of the colonial Government or town boards; of these 12 hospitals, 4 asylums, 1 tuberculosis hospital, and 1 leper asylum admit the ministrations of priests.

Most of the elementary schools are aided by the Government and in some places building grants-in-aid are given. There are various guilds, benefit societies and confraternities organized amongst the laity, and a weekly, "The Catholic News," is published. The Catholic population, white, black and colored, numbers 195,000, of whom about 5000 are East Indians.

In 1912 the Knights of St. John from the United States were introduced into the diocese; in 1919 the active Tertiary Dominican Sisters came, and three years later the De La Salle Brothers made a foundation there. On 18 March, 1915, the church in San José, the ancient capital of Trinidad, was consecrated. In 1921 hostels for poor girls were built.

The archdiocese lost two of its most zealous workers in 1920, in the persons of Father Louis Tapon, F.M.I., missionary from France, who had labored in Santa Lucia for forty-two years as parish priest, church builder and vicar general, and Canon J. M. Aquart, who had worked in the Grenadines without a break for twenty-five years and had built there four chapels, a school and presbytery. During the World War Father Henri Nouais, C.S.N., was killed while trying to find shelter for civilians. He had acted as Infermieri and later as interpreter to the Portuguese Expeditionary Force. Six other priests from Port of Spain served as chaplains.

Port Victoria, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS VICTORIÆ SEYCHELLARIUM; cf. C. E., XII—312c), comprises the Seychelles Islands in the Indian Ocean. The total population of the diocese (census of 1921) is 24,523, of whom 21,588 are Catholics. There are: 23,649 British, 585 Africans, 134 French, and 103 Chinese in the diocese. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Louis Gumy, O. M. Cap., b. 1866, elected 1921, succeeding Bishop Lachavanne, O. M. Cap., b. 1849, d. 1920. Bishop Clark, O. M. Cap., had died 29 Sept., 1915. Lady Brooks, recently deceased, was a benefactress of the mission, converted from the Greek Church. During the World War 2 Marist Brothers and 15 of the former pupils of the college were killed in Europe, 250 Catholics died in Africa, chiefly natives used as porters, and 18 of the clergy and laity were decorated. There are in the diocese: 14 parishes, 19 churches or chapels, 18 regular priests, 15 Marist Brothers, 58 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 1 college for men with 10 teachers and 180 pupils, 1 college for women with 12 teachers and 175 pupils, 20 elementary schools with 46 teachers and 1500 pupils. There are 18 grant-in-aid schools. The secondary department of the government school was suppressed. Three asylums, 2 hospitals, and 1 maternity house admit the ministry of priests. Each parish has 5 guilds. A Catholic periodical is published, called the "Reveil Seychellais."

Port Victoria, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF. See NORTHERN TERRITORY.

Portland, DIOCESE OF (PORTLANDENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—287b), comprises the entire State of Maine, a district of some 29,895 sq. miles and has a Catholic population of approximately 154,189. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Louis Sebastian Walsh, D.D., has filled the see since 1906 and under his able administration the diocese has made rapid progress. The principal events of interest in recent years have been the celebration of the tercentenary of the establishment of the Catholic Church in Maine in August, 1913; the tenth anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Walsh on 18 October, 1916; the celebration of the golden jubilee of the cathedral in September, 1919. During the World War this diocese gave 3 chaplains to the Army, 1 to the Navy and 1 for special duty in France. About 800 Catholic men of the diocese entered the various branches of the service, thus forming one-third of the total number of men enlisted from the State, whereas the entire Catholic population is only one-sixth of the total population of the State. The present statistics of this diocese show 88 parishes with resident priests, 71 missions with churches, 34 chapels, 159 churches, 80 mission stations, 1 convent for men and 37 for women, 137 secular and 33 regular priests, 4 lay brothers, 28 seminarians, 643 nuns. The various educational institutions under Catholic direction include: 1 college for men with 13 teachers and 190 students, 1 college for women, 12 academies and 50 elementary schools with 412 teachers and 18,000 pupils. Several of these schools as well as some of the charitable institutions receive aid from the State in their support. The charitable institutions include 1 home for old ladies, 7 orphan asylums and 6 hospitals; all the public institutions permit the priests of the diocese to administer to the Catholic inmates.

Porto, DIOCESE OF. See OPORTO.

Porto Alegre, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PORTALEGRENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—289b), comprises the State of Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil. The present archbishop is Most Rev. John Becker, b. 1870, ordained 1896, elected Bishop of Florianopolis 3 May, 1908, consecrated 13 September following, promoted to the Archdiocese of Porto Alegre 1 August, 1912, published 2 December, enthroned 8 December following, succeeding Archbishop Ponce de Leao, transferred. The population of the archdiocese is 675,000, of whom 580,000 are Catholics. There are: 85 parish, 95 secular priests, 150 regular priests, 100 Brothers, about 400 Sisters, 2 colleges, 2 normal schools, 1 agricultural school, and more than 300 secondary and parochial schools.

Porto Nacional, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS NATIONALIS IN BRASILIA), in the State of Goyaz, Brazil, suffragan of Marianna. It was erected 20 December, 1915, by separation from the Diocese of Goyaz, and Rt. Rev. Vicente Maria Moreira, O. P., was elected bishop 28 January, 1918. He resigned and was succeeded 30 July, 1920, by Rt. Rev. Raymond-Dominique Carreterot, O. P., b. at Pamiers, France; 1863, ordained 1885, elected titular bishop of Uranopolis, and prelate nullius of Araguaia, where he governed until his transfer to Porto Nacional. The diocese has 14 parishes, 31 churches, 1 convent for men (Dominicans), 1 for women (Dominican Third Order), 2 secular priests, 4 regular, 1 lay brother, serving a population of about 150,000. There are 1 college for boys with 3 teachers and 25 students, 1 college for girls with 5 teachers and 150 students, 1 normal school with 2 teachers and 12 pupils, 2 elementary schools with 3 teachers and an attendance of 115. The Government contributes to the support of the elementary schools. The confraternity of the Holy Rosary, the Third Order Secular of St. Dominic and various Catholic circles are organized among the laity. A Catholic periodical is published. Noteworthy deaths since the erection of the see include those of Father Rosarius Melizer, who founded St. Thomas College for young men, and Father Bartholomeus Merinho, who built the cathedral, the Dominican priory and the Sisters' convent.

Porto Rico, DIOCESE OF (PORTORICENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—292a); comprising the islands of Porto Rico, Vico and Culebra, directly dependent on the Holy See.—In 1921 Mgr. Georges Caruana was appointed bishop of Porto Rico to succeed Mgr. Jones, O. S. A., who after an episcopate of fourteen years died in Philadelphia, 17 February, 1921. Mgr. Caruana was born in Malta, 23 April, 1882, and was incardinated in the Diocese of Brooklyn. Later he went to Philadelphia as secretary to Cardinal Dougherty, and was consecrated in Rome at the Colegio Capranica College by Cardinal Vico, 28 October, 1921, being installed 10 February, 1922. He served as chaplain in the World War. In 1913 the diocese celebrated the fourth centenary of its foundation. Within the last few years two prominent priests died there, Rev. Pedro M. Berrios, P. A., V. G., who had labored in Porto Rico for fifty years and was renowned for his charity; and Rev. José Nazaire, a noted scholar and preacher. During the recent war the clergy and laity of the diocese co-operated in every patriotic movement. A brigade 17,000 strong was formed and was ready for embarkation when the armistice was signed. Furthermore, the regiment of Porto Rican infantry, a regular organisation, served in the Canal Zone.

There are about 1,000,000 Catholics in the islands which comprise the diocese, American, Spanish and Porto Rican. According to 1921 statistics there are 78 parishes, 83 churches, 20 missions, 78 secular and 30 regular priests, 7 Brothers, 14 convents of men and 5 of women, 1 seminary with 24 seminarians, 1 preparatory college for boys with 6 teachers and an attendance of 90, 5 for women with 285 students, 10 elementary schools with 4000 pupils. Charitable institutions include 3 houses, 5 asylums, and 5 hospitals. The Mission Helpers conduct a school for the deaf and dumb, and work amongst the poor. All public institutions are visited and ministered to by priests. The Knights of Columbus, Catholic Daughters of America, and many parochial societies are established in the diocese. Two Catholic periodicals "La Verdad" and "El Amigo de Todos," are published.

Porto and Santa Rufina, DIOCESE OF (PORTUNENSIS ET SANCTAE RUFINAE; cf. C. E., XII—290a), suburbicarian see in Italy. The present archbishop is Cardinal Antonio Vico, b. 1847, elected titular Archbishop of Philippi and delegate apostolic to Colombia 1897, apostolic nuncio to Belgium, 1904, and to Spain 1907, created cardinal priest 1911, chose the see of Porto and Santa Rufina 1915, prefect of Rites 1918. The diocese has 19 parishes, 26 priests, 30 churches and chapels, and 4652 Catholics.

Portoviejo, DIOCESE OF (PORTUS VETERIS; cf. C. E., XII—294d), in Ecuador, suffragan of Quito. The area of the diocese is 13,200 square miles, and the Catholic population is 78,000. There are: 2 secular priests, 1 regular priest, and 1 religious community of women in the diocese. At present the see is vacant. The administrator apostolic is Rt. Rev. Andres Machado, S. J., Bishop of Guayaquil.

Portsmouth, DIOCESE OF (PORTUSMUTHENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—296d), suffragan of Westminster, England. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. William Timothy Cotter, b. 1866, ordained 1892, consecrated auxiliary to Bishop Cahill 19 March, 1905, succeeded to the see 24 November, 1910. The population of the diocese (census 1911) is 1,318,606 of whom about 48,200 are Catholics. There are: 93 secular priests; 194 regular priests; 47 convents; 106 churches and public chapels; 51 private chapels; 34 public elementary schools receiving government grant and 9 not receiving government grant, with an attendance of 1828 boys, 1948 girls, and 1658 children; 11 secondary schools for boys with 1321 pupils; 21 secondary schools for girls with 1667 pupils; 6 charitable institutions caring for 408 children.

Portugal (cf. C. E., XII—297b), a republic, has an area of 35,490 square miles and a population of 5,967,985 (latest census 1911). The chief towns with their population in 1911 are Lisbon 435,359; Oporto 194,009; Setubal 30,346; Funchal 24,687. In 1917 there were 190,485 births, 134,691 deaths, 34,210 marriages, 15,825 emigrants. Portuguese emigrants went chiefly to the U. S. and Brazil.

Economics.—Of the total area, 26.2 per cent is cultivated, 17.3 per cent is forest, and 43 per cent is waste land. In 1919 the chief crops were: wheat 4,767,665 bushels, rye 1,785,838; oats 3,037,831; barley 1,009,780. The production of wool amounted to 6,244,684 pounds. The olive trees cover about 825,000 acres, producing an annual average of 12,760,000 gallons of oil. The imports of the country in 1919 were valued at £52,110,675; the exports, £24,874,650. Wine formed the staple import, the quantity amounting in 1919 to 12,458,220 gallons, valued at £7,940,582. The revenue in English pounds sterling in 1920—21 was £26,913,445; the expenditure, £52,802,831. On 30 June, 1920 the external debt of Portugal was £36,287,252. The internal debt amounted to 1,113,601,347 escudos (1 escudo = $1.080, normal exchange).

GOVERNMENT.—The constitution of 20 August, 1911, provides for two Chambers, the National Council (164 members in 1921), elected by direct suffrage for three years, and the Second or Upper Chamber (71 members), elected by all the Municipal Councils. The President is elected by both Chambers with a mandate for four years, but cannot be re-elected. He appoints the Ministers, who, however, are responsible to Parliament. For judicial purposes the republic is divided into 193 comarcas, each having a court of first instance. There are 2 courts of appeal at Lisbon and Oporto, and a Supreme Court at Lisbon.

EDUCATION.—In 1915 there were 6706 public elementary schools with 342,763 pupils; in 1919, 32 secondary schools (with 11,791 pupils in 1917). For higher education, there are three Universities at Lisbon, Coimbra, and Oporto, a technical school at Lisbon, special colleges of music, art, commercial schools, a military academy at Lisbon, and a naval school.

RECENT HISTORY.—Since the proclamation of the republic on 6 October, 1910, there have been no fewer than seven revolutions, or attempted revolutions in Portugal. Two of these have been monarchical, for the restoration of the deposed King Manuel II, now living in England; the rest have been due to one faction of the Republican party attempting to oust its rivals, so that it might enjoy the benefits of office. The President chosen for 1911—15 was Manoel de Arriga, who survived the invasion of Royalists in 1912. This movement failed from lack of support from the Monarchists. In a compromise between ex-King Manuel and Dom Pedro at Dover on 22 January, 1912, the latter renounced the throne, so that the following Royalist risings were in support of King Manuel. The vigorous anti-clerical policy of the Government at this time aroused attention throughout the world. The hierarchy refused to accept the separation law, and to prove their sincerity, refused even the small stipend allowed to the priests from a Government which had been so unjust to the Church. Numerous priests were imprisoned as political offenders. In 1912 several Bishops, including the Patriarch of Lisbon, two archbishops and six bishops were arrested. The Archbishops of Portalegre and Braga were expelled for two years. Diplomatic relations with the Vatican were suspended and the next year the Portuguese legation at the Vatican was abolished. In 1913 the Bishop of Oporto was arrested for administering confirmation in a diocese from which he had been expelled. So unrelenting was the Government's attitude that the world protested, and the Portuguese Assembly on 19 February, 1914, passed an Amnesty Bill, providing that the insurgent leaders be expelled and amnesty granted to others, and that political prisoners be given a free trial to determine whether they were to be exiled or acquitted. Among those exiled were four priests. In 1915 there was an attempt to set up a separate republic in northern Portugal, and at the same time another group of democrats formed an organization for the Defense of the Republic. After a coup d'état, President Arriaga resigned, and Theophilo Braga was elected provisional president. He served until 5 October, 1915, when he was succeeded by Bernardino Machado, elected on 6 August, 1915. In March, 1916, Portugal declared war on Germany, and joined the Allies in defending the western front. In December, 1917, occurred another revolution, headed by Major Sidonio Paes. On 28 April Paes was elected president, but was murdered by the party which he overthrew the previous year. A provisional government was established with Joao do Canto e Castro Silva Anátunes as president, and on 6 August, 1919, Dr. Antonio José de Almeida was elected president.

The most recent revolution in October, 1921, was tragic in the extreme. Pressure had been brought on President Almeida for a more conservative administration with proclivities favoring the Royalist prisoners and unfavorable toward the victims of Major Sidonio Paes's revolution of December, 1917. These victims a year later became the murderers of Paes and the results of his revolution drove into exile ex-President Bernardino Machado and ex-Premier Dr. Alfonso Costa. Since 1920 the victims of Paes's revolution have been determined to restore the one faction government, as it had existed prior to the revolution of December, 1917. The revolutionists hoped to achieve their ends by peaceful means but they allowed the revengeful Carbonario to arm themselves at the Naval Arsenal. Admiral Machado dos Santos, the founder of the republic, was murdered by his guards while being taken to the arsenal under arrest, the Minister of Marine under President Paes was shot dead, and Senhor Granjo, Captain Ereitas da Silva, and Captain Carlos da Maia were killed.

The Army of Portugal is a militia raised by conscription and consists of about 30,000 men (peace footing). The navy personnel is about 6,000. During the war 65,062 officers and men were sent to France. The casualties were: 1862 killed, 5224 wounded, and 6678 taken prisoners. The military estimates for 1919-20 was about 44,228,346 escudos.

RELIGION.—There are about 5000 Protestants, mostly foreigners, and 500 Jews. The rest of the population is Catholic.

Postulant.—By an Apostolic Decree of January, 1911, generals of orders in which lay brothers made solemn vows were authorized to allow in individual cases the reception of lay brother candidates on the completion of their seventeenth year, but a postu-lature of two years or longer was necessary for valid profession. Abstracting from the constitutions of each order, however, the Code now allows lay brother postulants to be received at the age of fourteen and a half. A postulature of at least six months is necessary in all religious institutes having perpetual vows in the case of nuns or sisters and lay brothers; if the institutes have only temporary vows the necessity and duration of the postulature depends on the constitutions. The higher superiors may extend this period of probation but not beyond six months. Before beginning their novitiate postulants must make a spiritual retreat of at least eight days and, if their confessors allow them, a general confession of their whole lives.

Codex juris canonici, 539-41.

Postulation.—When postulation is simultaneous with an election the canons now require the candidate to receive the approval of at least two-thirds of the voters; in the pre-Code days he was required to have twice the number necessary for one who was canonically eligible. A postulation must be sent to the proper superior within eight days, otherwise it becomes ipso facto null and void and the electors, unless their delay was justifiable, lose their right to elect or postulate for that occasion. Ordinarily, postulation is not permissible in capitular elections.

Codex juris canonici, 179-82; 507.

Potamian, BROTHER, in the world MICHAEL FRANCIS O'REILLY, scientist and bibliographer, b. in Co. Cavan, Ireland, on 29 September, 1847; d. in New York on 20 January, 1917. He studied in the Christian Brothers' School, New York, and at the age of twelve entered the junior novitiate of the institute at Montreal. At the age of twenty-three he was sent to London, where he taught in St. Joseph's College. Taking advantage of the opportunities offered in London to specialize in scientific studies he graduated as Master of Arts and Doctor of Science in London University, and was on terms of intimacy with Lord Kelvin, Mivart, Huxley and Tyndall. He represented the British Government in the educational section at four international exhibitions, Vienna (1873), Philadelphia (1876), Paris (1889) and Chicago (1893); at Chicago he was a member of the Jury of Awards. He taught at the De La Salle Training School, Waterford, Ireland, from 1893 to 1896, when he was transferred to Manhattan College, New York, where he died twenty-one years later. Perhaps the greatest testimony to his scientific scholarship was his selection by the trustees of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers to compile a catalogue raisonné of the Latimer Clark Library, the most complete collection of books relating to electricity. The work was accomplished successfully in seven years, and the catalogue ranks with the famous catalogues of the Surgeon General's Library at Washington. Brother Potamian was as unassuming as he was learned; he was a popular lecturer and his course in science was one of the chief features at the Catholic Summer School, Lake Champlain. Among his writings are: "Gleanings in Electrical History," "Franklin and De Romas, or the Lightning Kite," "Gilbert of Colchester," "The Rotation of the Earth," "Electric Illumination" (co-author); "The Makers of Electricity," "The Makers of Astronomy"—the last two in conjunction with Dr. James J. Walsh; and finally his great "Catalogue of the Wheeler Gift, or a brief illustrated account of works on electricity and magnetism from earliest times to the middle of the nineteenth century." Brother Potamian was a collaborator in the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, contributing to it a number of scientific biographies.

Pouso Alegre, DIOCESE OF (POUSALEGRENSIS; cf. Porto Alegre, C. E., XII—289d; where for Porto read Pouso), in the State of Minas Geraes, Brazil, erected in 1900. At present it is being ruled by its third bishop; the first, Rt. Rev. João Baptista Correa Nery, was transferred to Pampinas in 1908; the second Rt. Rev. Antonio Augusta de Assis was transferred to Guaxupe in 1916, these two dioceses having been created in the year mentioned by separation from Pouso Alegre. The third and present bishop, Rt. Rev. Octavio Chagas de Miranda, b. at Campinas on 10 August, 1881, ordained on 30 December, 1908, nominated to the see on 14 February, 1916, was consecrated on 4 June following. He founded and directed the Catholic paper of Campinas, "O Mensageiro". The episcopal city is Pouso Alegre. At present there are in the diocese 350,000 inhabitants; 34 parishes; 164 churches and chapels; 33 secular priests, 7 regular priests and 8 lay brothers; 2 convents, 55 sisters; 1 ecclesiastical seminary, 22 students; 1 diocesan college, 150 students; 2 girls' schools; 2 normal schools, 25 professors, 250 students; 1 trade school for orphans, 3 teachers, 20 pupils, 7 hospitals. The Government aids one of the diocesan institutions, and in eight the administration of the clergy is allowed. There are 103 sodalities and Catholic societies among the laity. There is a Catholic press issuing the following publications: "Semana religiosa", weekly, "O Santuario", monthly; and two reviews "Archivo diocesano" and "O Levita."

Pozzuoli, DIOCESE OF (PUTEOLANA; cf. C. E., XII—331), in Italy, suffragan of Naples, is governed by Mgr. Guiseppe Petrone, b. in Naples on 27 August, 1872; appointed to this see 23 Sept., 1921. The diocese of Pozzuoli has 10 parishes; 98 churches and chapels; 2 monastic houses for men, 5 for women 2 convents for men, 5 for women; 85 priests, of whom 5 are regulars; 25 sisters; 1 seminary with 12 students; 4 boys' colleges, with 15 teachers and 500 pupils; 3 girls' colleges with 10 teachers and 400 pupils; 20 elementary schools with 100 teachers; 1 refuge; 2 asylums; 1 hospital; 1 day nursery; 9 organizations and associations for the laity, and 1 among the clergy; 1 Catholic weekly and 1 monthly magazine; the ministrations of the priests are allowed in two public institutions. Among those who died recently was; Salvatore Lopex, a noted musician, director of the orchestra of the Royal Palace, Naples. The remains of Giambattista Pergolesi, whose "Stabat Mater" is famous, have been placed in a magnificent new chapel of the cathedral erected by the Government.

Prague, ARCHDIOCESE OF (PRAGENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—338b), in Bohemia. On 26 June, 1918, Pope Benedict XV declared blessed the 64 Servite martyrs of Prague. These holy men had endeavored to stay the progress of the Hussite heresy in Bohemia at the beginning of the fifteenth century. So many were the conversions that they excited the enmity of the revolutionists at whose head was John Ziska. When assembled in general chapter in 1420 the Servites were locked in their monastery and given a choice between apostasy and death. They chose martyrdom, and 64 were thereupon burned alive in the monastery. Part of their remains, interred in the presbytery of the Church of the Annunciation at Prague, were exhumed by Cardinal Schwarzenburg and deposited in a magnificent reliquary. The present administrator of the archdiocese is Francis Kordac, b. 1852, elected 1919. The Catholics in the archdiocese number 2,438,109, Protestants 77,895, Jews 48,330, others 613, those without creed 3786. There are: 589 parishes, 1343 secular priests of whom 91 belong to other dioceses, and 407 regular priests.

Prague, UNIVERSITY OF; (cf. C. E., XII—342b).—On the establishment of the Czechoslovakian Republic the name of the University of Prague was changed to "Universitas Carolina," its original title. In 1920 the professors of the natural sciences withdrew from the faculty of philosophy and established a new faculty from which the Rector for the year 1921-22 was chosen. The proposal to separate the theological faculty from the university which was made in 1919 is remaining in abeyance until the question of the separation of the Church and State is decided.

The Bohemian theological faculty was separated from the German university in 1892, and united to the Bohemian university. At present the schedule of the theological faculty calls for lectures in: Old Testament sciences, 9 hours per week, philosophy 4, fundamental theology 5, New Testament 9, special dogmatics 9, moral theology 9, church history and patrology 9, canon law 7, sociology 2, pastoral theology, homiletics and liturgy 9, methodology and pedagogy 3, Oriental languages (Arabic, Syriac, Aramaic, Assyrian, Ethiopic and Coptic) 5, veteroslavic liturgy and palaeoslav versions of the Bible 5, Christian art and archaeology 5, ethics 3, and history of religions 3. Only those who have passed through the gymnasium and received their testimonium maturitatis, as it is called, rank as ordinary students and they alone are admitted to degrees. To obtain a degree the candidate must pass a satisfactory test in Arabic, Aramaic and Syriac, and higher exegesis, and submit a dissertation on a Biblical subject, or on moral or pastoral theology or on church history and canon law; those who pass these tests must stand an oral examination for two hours in general and speculative dogmatic theology; if still successful the candidate having taken the oath in presence of the chancellor of the faculty is admitted solemnly to the doctorate with the consent of the chancellor, the dean of the faculty and the promotor. In addition since 1901 seminary examinations are held in the Bible, philosophy, apologetics, church history, palaeoslav studies and recently Christian art. The number of students in 1910 was 116 ordinary and 8 special students in the theological faculty, but in 1920 as a sequel to the war there were only 31 ordinary and 10 special students. Moreover there are three diocesan institutes where theological students can attend the same lectures.

Recently Benedict XV sent an evangelical letter to the bishops of the Czechoslovakian Republic emphasizing the necessity of a two years' course in philosophy and a four years' course in theology.

Preachers, ORDER OF (cf. C. E., XII—354d).—There are three divisions of the Order of St. Dominic: the Order of Friars Preachers (First Order); the cloistered Dominican Nuns (Second Order); and the Brothers and Sisters of Penance (Third Order). Although this last branch of the institute does not seem to have had any juridical confirmation, or to have been formally affiliated to the First Order until 1285, it certainly existed in the days of St. Dominic, and fell within his plan of the religious life. Before the Saint's death pious associations of religious-minded persons had begun to gather around his priories, to place themselves under the guidance of the Fathers, and to assimilate the spirit of the institute. The Third Order of Penance living in the world was most probably the parent stem out of which grew the Conventual Third Order of Sisters. Some have traced this branch of the Third Order back to 1255; yet its beginnings seem shrouded in no little obscurity (C. E., XII—369d); XIV—638b; "Manual of the Third Order of St. Dominic," London, 1871; De Ganay, "Les Bienheureuses Dominicaines," Paris, 1913; chapter on "The Third Order" by Dix, in "The English Dominican Province," London, 1921). The First Order substituted the monastic scapular for the rochet of canons.

A general chapter of the order promulgates new laws, but to become a part of the constitutions they must be accepted by three consecutive chapters. General chapters are two fold: (a) general chapters of provincials; and (b) general chapters of definitors. Their periods of convocation have not always been the same. At times, owing to various causes, they have been held rather irregularly. But they are now convoked alternately every three years, and are largely intended as a counterbalance of power. The general chapter of provincials is composed of the master general and the actual provincials of the order. Each province also elects a delegate or companion (socius) to accompany its provincial to the chapter and to act in his stead in case of necessity. The general chapter of definitors is formed by the master general and the definitors elected in their respective provinces to constitute this legislative body. Each province chooses one such representative. Another delegate or companion, elected at the same time, accompanies the definitor to the chapter, and takes his place should this become necessary. When a master general is to be elected, both the provincials and their companions and the definitors and their associates attend the elective chapter. All these (except the delegates who accompany the provincials), together with the ex-masters general and the procurator general, have a voice in the selection of the order's new head. The suffrage is given in secret. Similarly, the provincial chapters of the order (that is, those convened in the various provinces) are held biennially. They are also twofold: (a) the elective chapter; and (b) the intermediate chapter (congregatio intermedia). By the former the provincial is elected, together with the definitor and the two delegates spoken of above. It is made up of the masters in theology, ex-provincials and preachers general belonging to the province, the priors and one delegate (chosen by ballot) from each convent. Such a delegate must belong to the community which he represents; and only its members have a vote in his selection. The last general chapter (Corias, Spain, 1920) gave representation to the houses that are not convents. These institutions are arranged in groups, and each group sends one or more delegates according to the number of Fathers who constitute it. That each such cluster may be more truly represented, only its members may vote for or be elected its delegates. The intermediate chapter is assembled two years after the election of the provincial, whose term of office is four years. It is composed of the provincial and those just mentioned, except the preachers general and the several conventual and group delegates. The laws regulating the convocation, etc., of chapters, whether general or provincial, are given in the constitutions under the title "De Capitulo Generali" and "De Capitulo Provinciali."

The spirit of the order has ever been quite democratic. Nearly all its officials and representatives are chosen by secret suffrage. However, the spirit of the new Code of Canon Law, though its legislation did not change the institute's law in this matter, led the chapter of Corias (1920) to limit the number of ballots to seven for all elections. The new Code of Canon Law also took the Friars Preachers out of those religious orders known as mendicants in the strict sense. The chapter of Corias, however, authorized the master general to petition the Holy See for a restoration of the institute to its time-honored place among the mendicant orders. The Dominicans, it will be remembered, have a ritual of their own. But, owing to the Motu Proprio of Pius X, "Abhinc duos annos," 23 October, 1913, their Divine Office has been rendered more like that of the present Roman Breviary. By the Motu Proprio of Benedict XV, "Alloquentes proxime," 25 March, 1917, the Congregation of the Index, of which a Dominican was always the secretary, has been suppressed.

Among the works on preaching written by Dominicans, in the first two centuries of their existence, two deserve special mention. They are "De eruditione prædicatorum" (On the instruction of Preachers) by Blessed Humbert of Romans (d. 1277), published the last time in "De vita regulari Beati Humberti de Romanis," Rome, 1888-89; and John Bromyard's (d. 1420), well-known and often-published "Summa prædicantium," which treats of all preaching matter in alphabetical order (Quétif-Echard, "Scriptores Ordinis Prædicatorum," I, 700). St. Vincent Ferrer (d. 1419) was one of the most extraordinary and effective preachers as well of the Church as of the order. Father Thomas Nicholas Burke (d. 1882), one of the greatest pulpit orators of the English-speaking world, did some of his best work in the United States. Father Vincent J. Lombardo (d. 1909), Bonaventure Krotz (d. 1914), and Charles H. McKenna (d. 1917) were among the most noted modern preachers respectively in Italy, Germany, and the United States.

In England the studium generale of the order at Cambridge, founded in the beginning of the fourteenth century, was an active rival of that at Oxford. The Friars Preachers influenced English society, from the highest to the lowest ranks, to a remarkable extent. Among those who took a conspicuous part in the public affairs of the country were John Darlington (d. 1284), Archbishop of Dublin and a trusted member of the government under Henry III; William Hotham (d. 1296), Archbishop of Dublin and favorite minister of Edward I; Thomas Rushook (d. 1393), Bishop of Chichester and confessor and protector of Richard II; and John Gilbert (d. 1397), Bishop of Hereford and twice lord treasurer of England (Palmer, "Blackfriars of Cambridge," in "The Reliquary Magazine," January, 1885; MacInerny, "History of the Irish Dominicans," Vol. I, Dublin, 1916; chapter on "In Public Life," by Gumbley, in "The English Dominican Province," London, 1921). In Ireland, the order's influence was rather through the people than through those in public authority; but it was none the less profound. To mention no others, David MacKell (1253), Archbishop of Cashel and the first Irish Friar Preacher to wear the mitre in his native land; Ross MacGeoghegan (d. 1641), Bishop of Kildare; Terence Albert O'Brien (d. 1851), the martyr bishop of Emlý; Dominic Burke (d. 1704), Bishop of Elphin; Thomas De Burgo or Burke (d. 1776), noted historian and Bishop of Ossory; John Thomas Troy (d. 1823), Archbishop of Dublin and founder of Maynooth College, were among the leading lights of the Irish episcopacy. Of the 368 Irish martyrs now proposed for beatification 101 belonged to the Order of St. Dominic (De Jonghe, "Belgium Dominicanum," Brussels, 1719; De Burgo, "Hibernia Dominicana," Cologne, 1762; "The Hibernian Magazine," April 1864; Brennan, "Lives of the Irish Martyrs and Confessors," New York, 1879; O'Heyne, "The Irish Dominicans of the Seventeenth Century," translated and edited by Coleman, Dundalk, 1902; Nolan, "The Irish Dominicans in Rome," 1813; MacInerny, op. cit.: "Acta Capitulum Ordinis Prædicatorum," Vol. VII, edited by Reichert, Rome, 1902; "Analecta Ordinis Prædicatorum," February and December, 1915). The Friars Preachers, in a brotherly spirit and a desire to promote faith and morals among the people, have taken a notable part in the formation and development of more than one religious order.

The 36 Annamese and the 8 Tonkin martyrs beatified, respectively 27 May, 1900, and 20 May, 1906, belonged to the Province of the Philippines, as did the proto-Chinese martyr, Francis de Capillas (d. 1648), who was beatified, 2 May, 1909. The same province still has its famous Indo-Chinese missions in East, North, and Central Tonkin. Bishop Edward D. Fenwick (d. 1832), Father Matthew A. O'Brien (d. 1871), and Father Nicholas D. Young (d. 1878) stand out as conspicuous examples of missionary laborers in the United States.

In spite of revolutions and social upheavals, the Order of Preachers has continued to foster a cultivation of the fine arts, especially that of architecture. Among the splendid structures it has erected within the last seventy-five years are the Church of St. Saviour, Dublin, Ireland; that of St. Dominic, London, England; St. Thomas's Priory, Zwolle, Holland; the Collegio Angelico, Rome; and in the United States, the Dominican House of Studies, at the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., and St. Vincent Ferrer's Church, New York. St. Dominic's Church, San Francisco, destroyed by the earthquake of 1906, was a fine specimen of the Romanesque basilica. Throughout the order the lay brothers have ever been among its most skillful artists and architects.

The late World War, which appeared to bode so badly for religion, seems rather to have turned the minds of men to God. Since its close vocations have increased. The members of the First Order are considerably more numerous than they were a decade ago. After the return of peace, even in those countries which suffered most from the upheaval, the Fathers, undismayed by their trials, resumed their various social, intellectual, religious, and missionary endeavors. It is worthy of note that the Biblical School of St. Stephen, Jerusalem, has been accredited to the French Academy of Inscriptions and Belles-Lettres, and honored with the title of "L'École Française Archéologique de Jérusalem." In practically all the provinces the publication of religious and scientific views has been revived. The output of books and other literary productions shows an intense intellectual activity. For many years the labors of the Friars Preachers in the English-speaking countries, especially in the United States, in giving parochial missions have been enormous. Although teaching in the universities and seminaries has always been regarded as a part of the order's apostolate, conducting secular colleges was looked upon as foreign to its vocation. In more recent times, however, the Fathers have begun to engage in this work as conducive to the end of the institute, which is the salvation of souls. The Province of the Philippines, for instance, has several such institutions, and that of St. Joseph, in the United States, has two; while the Province of the Holy Name is starting one in California.

According to the latest statistics ("Analecta Ordinis Prædicatorum," May-August, 1921), there are today 352 convents and secondary institutions of the order distributed through 31 provinces and 2 congregations. Forty of these institutions are in the United States, belonging respectively 26 to the province of St. Joseph, 10 to that of California, 2 to that of the Philippines, and 2 to that of Canada. Fourteen convents of the order are under the immediate jurisdiction of the master general. The members of the First Order now number some 5000, and about 1000 students are preparing to enter the novitiates. Two of its members are cardinals, 7 archbishops, 19 bishops, and 7 prefects apostolic.

It has 34 foreign missions, on which 450 Fathers and Brothers are engaged. The Province of St. Joseph, in the United States, has now accepted a foreign mission in the civil prefecture of Kien-ning-Fu, about 170 miles north of the city of Fu-chau, China. There are about 5000 enclosed Dominican Nuns (Second Order), nearly half of whom are in acetic Spain. The United States has 300. The Conventual Third Order Sisters number more than 20,000. Almost half of these are in the United States. The principal mother-houses of the American Sisters specially devoted to educational work are located at Springfield, Ky.; Columbus, O.; Caldwell, N. J.; Brookland and Newburgh, N. Y.; Fall River, Mass.; Adrian and Grand Rapids, Mich.; Racine and Sinsinawa, Wis.; Springfield, Ill.; Nashville, Tenn.; New Orleans, La.; Galveston, Tex.; San Rafael and Mission San José, Cal.; and Tacoma, Wash. The Dominican Sisters of the Sick Poor, with their headquarters in New York City, are performing a noble mission of charity. The Foreign Mission Sisters of St. Dominic, Maryknoll, N. Y., devote themselves to the Christian instruction of Chinese and Japanese in the United States as well as in foreign lands. Other communities again, with their principal houses at Sparkill and Blauvelt, N. Y., are engaged in the care of orphans and other like works of benevolence. The members of the Third Order living in the world are very numerous; but, quite naturally, this branch of the institute flourishes especially in those places where the other divisions are established.

The order has 14 canonized Saints. St. Dominic (d. 1221), St. Peter of Verona, commonly called St. Peter Martyr (d. 1252), St. Hyacinth, apostle of Poland (d. 1257), St. Thomas of Aquin (d. 1274), St. Raymond of Pennafort (d. 1275), St. Vincent Ferrer (d. 1419), St. Antoninus of Florence (d. 1450), St. Pius V (d. 1552), St. John of Cologne (d. 1573), and St. Louis Bertrand (d. 1581) are of the First Order. St. Agnes of Montepulciano (d. 1317) was a member of the Second Order. St. Catherine di Ricci (d. 1589) belonged to the Conventual Third Order. St. Catherine of Sienna (d. 1380) and St. Rose of Lima (d. 1615) are the glory of the Third Order living in the world. Besides these, some 290 members of the three orders of St. Dominic have been beatified and perhaps as many as 600 others have been declared venerable by the Church, or are regarded as such in the piety of the faithful.

V. F. O'DANIEL.

Preaching.—The object of preaching is to enable the faithful to know God, to understand His revelation, and to realize and fulfil their duties towards Him and their fellow-men. As the care of the faithful in spiritual matters was entrusted by Christ to St. Peter and the Apostles, the duty of preaching the truths of religion devolves on their successors in their respective spheres, that is primarily on the pope for the whole world and on the bishops for their dioceses. Confronted with the prevalent disregard of the supernatural and the adoption of pagan standards of living throughout Christendom, Pope Benedict XV, realizing that this condition was in part due to the failure of preaching to supply the proper antidotes, issued an Encyclical "Humani generis" (15 June, 1917), dealing with the preaching of the Gospel. The three abuses which he signalized as in need of urgent reform were (1) the unwarranted assumption of the office of preaching on the part of many; (2) the unfitness of many of those who had been allowed to preach; (3) the manner and procedure of not a few preachers, inspired as they were by vain glory, by a desire to rival the leaders of the stage or political platform, who dealt with profane topics and abstained from setting forth divinely revealed truths that might weary or terrify their hearers. About two weeks later the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory issued a Decree setting forth rules to regulate the authorization of preachers in accordance with the papal encyclical and the Code. On 11 November, 1918, the pope again showed the great importance he attached to preaching the Gospel in his allocution to the Lenten preachers in Rome.

In virtue of his office a bishop must personally preach the Gospel to his flock; as it is impossible for him to do this unaided the work is carried on by the parish priests and others approved by him to preach the Gospel, while he should have a commission of vigilance to see that the work is executed properly. Ordinaries and religious superiors are strictly bound to have their clerics during the time of their studies thoroughly trained in preaching and made acquainted with the famous models of sermons bequeathed by the Fathers, to say nothing of those contained in the New Testament. They may also prescribe for their clerics a yearly oral and written examination in preaching for some years after ordination. No one must undertake the ministry of the word unless deputed by a lawful superior; apart from parish priests, no one may preach to the faithful in public churches or oratories, even those of regulars, not even regular priests, without the local ordinary's express permission. Permission is granted only to priests or deacons, but in a special case the local ordinary might authorize another cleric for a good cause, but he cannot allow a lay person, even a religious, to preach. If a sermon is to be given exclusively to exempt religious or others such as servants, pupils, or guests, who live in their house by day and night, the superior of a clerical institute grants the faculty for preaching to his own subjects or to a secular priest or a member of another religious order who has been adjudged competent by his ordinary or superior. If a sermon is to be given to nuns with solemn vows subject to a regular order or to non-clerical religious, permission of both the local ordinary and the religious superior, is to be obtained. Local ordinaries must not, without a grave reason, refuse the faculty of preaching to a religious presented by his own superior, or recall it later, especially from the entire community at one and the same time; however, religious in order to preach always require the permission of their own superior. The ordinary or superior is bound in conscience not to grant the faculty or permission to anyone whose good character has not been established and who has not passed a suitable examination in theology, and the preacher may be subjected to another examination if his orthodoxy is questionable; if the faculty is revoked an appeal may be taken.

No priest from outside a diocese is to be invited to preach unless the permission of the ordinary of the place where the sermon is to be given has first been obtained, and he must not consent before being satisfied as to the preacher's virtue and knowledge. The permission is to be sought by a parish priest for a sermon to be preached in his parish church or in others depending on it; by the rector for a church exempt from the jurisdiction of the parish priest; by the highest dignitary with the chapter's consent, for a capitular church; by the moderator or chaplain of a confraternity for the confraternity church. A local ordinary may preach in any church, even exempt, in his territory, and, except in large cities he may forbid anyone to preach in the local churches during the time that he himself is preaching or is present at a sermon given to the people for some special cause of public interest. A parish priest is under a strict obligation to explain the word of God in a homily every Sunday and holyday of precept at the chief Mass especially. He cannot fulfill this duty by securing a permanent substitute, unless the ordinary consents to it for a just reason; the ordinary, however, may allow the sermon to be omitted on some of the greater feasts and even, where there is good cause, on some Sundays. The Church, while not imposing a precept, wishes that there should be a short discourse on the Gospel or on some point of Christian doctrine at all Masses attended by the faithful on feasts of precept whether in churches or public oratories; if the ordinary prescribes this, all priests even exempt religious, must obey. The faithful, furthermore, are to be exhorted earnestly to be present at sermons frequently.

The matter of sermons must be essentially sacred, dealing chiefly with what Christians must do and believe to attain salvation. If the preacher would treat of other matters not strictly sacred, yet in keeping with the house of God, or if he would deliver a funeral eulogy, he must not do so without permission of the local ordinary; it is absolutely forbidden for any preacher to treat of politics in the pulpit. Citations from profane authors and especially from heretics or infidels must be employed only with the greatest caution, the Sacred scriptures, the Fathers and Doctors of the Church providing adequate proof and defense of the principles of Christian morality. The preacher should accommodate himself to the ordinary intelligence of his hearers both in reasoning and in the choice of language, and in delivery should observe the modesty and gravity befitting one who speaks in Christ's name. Preachers neglecting these prescriptions are to be admonished and reprehended by their bishop; if they neglect to amend or if their offense was grave their faculty of preaching is to be withdrawn by the bishop temporarily or permanently, in case of his own subjects; if the preacher was an extern or religious the bishop is to forbid him to preach again in his diocese and at the same time to notify the culprit's ordinary or even, in extreme cases, the Holy See.

Precious Blood, CONGREGATIONS OF THE.
I. CONGREGATION OF THE MOST PRECIOUS BLOOD (cf. C. E., XII—373c), an association of secular priests who live in community but take no vows, being held together by the bond of charity only, and in America by a promise not to leave the community without permission of the lawful superior. The present general superior is Very Rev. Hyacinthe Petroni, elected for life, 11 Oct., 1905, to succeed Aloysius Biaschelli (d. 1905). The mother-house is Santo Maria in Trivio in Rome, in the convent garden of which a Methodist church was erected at the time of the confiscation by the Italian Government. This has been replaced (1922) by a printing office. In Europe, as a rule, members are not admitted to the congregation until they are at least students of philosophy; these pursue their studies in Rome. At present there are two minor seminaries for the lower studies at Albano and Patriccia. In America the congregation conducts a college (Collegeville, Ind.) and parishes in the Archdiocese of Chicago and Dioceses of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Toledo, Fort Wayne, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Lincoln, Bismarck and Newark. The present statistics for the congregation are: Italy, 3 provinces, 15 houses, the principal ones being at Rome (Santa Maria in Trivio), Albano, Naples, Bari, Ancona, Rimini, Cesena; Spain, 2 houses; Bavaria, 1 house (Baumgaertli); North America, 1 province with a seminary at Carthagen, Ohio, seat of the provincial with 43 students, a college at Collegeville, Ind., with 300 students, novitiate at Burkettsville, Ohio, with 90 students. The houses at Shellenberg (Liechtenstein), Feldkirch, Kufstein (Austria), belong to the American province. There are in the American province 140 priests, 50 lay brothers, and over 50 missions and stations. Prominent members of the society include Cardinal Alexius Ascalesi, Archbishop of Benevento and Bishop Aloysius Fantozzi of Veroli. There are seven deceased bishops. Publications of the congregation are: "Bolletino dei Missionari del Prez. Sangue," a monthly (Rome); "De Botschafter" and "The Messenger," monthlies, (Collegeville, Ind.).

II. DAUGHTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (cf. C. E., XII—374b).—This congregation, founded by Maria Seraphina Spickermans in 1857, was approved by decree of Leo XIII, 24 Sept., 1890, the constitutions being definitely approved 3 June, 1901. The main object of the congregation is the education of girls, from elementary and infant schools to boarding and training schools, and the care of the sick. The first general superior was Mother Seraphina Spickermans (b. 1 May, 1819; d. 17 Aug., 1876). She was succeeded by Mother Josephine Frank (b. 29 May, 1841; d. 4 Aug., 1886), Mother Ludgera Schweers (b. 10 July, 1847; d. 12 Aug., 1920), and the present superior, Mother Kostka Rensing (b. 17 March, 1868). At present (1921) there are 200 members of the congregation and 6 foundations. All the convents have infant, elementary and needlework schools. In addition there are: 1 training school for teachers, 2 boarding schools, 3 higher schools for girls, and 3 schools for housekeeping. In three places the congregation has district care of the sick. The total number of persons cared for is about 4000.

III. SISTERS ADORERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (Saint-Hyacinthe; cf. C. E., XII—374c), a congregation of nuns maintaining daily adoration of the Precious Blood really present in the Blessed Sacrament. They care for a few ladies in retreat and as boarders in a house separate from the monastery. The Sisters also direct under the chaplain or another appointed priest, the Confraternity and Guard of Honor of the Precious Blood. At the request of the Bishop of St. Hyacinthe the Holy See has granted the institute (1919) the privilege of celebrating as of old the Lenten feast of the Most Precious Blood. The congregation is not under a generalship, each house being independent, even from the first house of the institute, and governed by a local superior elected every five years by the chapter of each house. The institute subsists on doweries provided by the choir Sisters, on alms charitably offered by very many persons petitioning prayers and in thanksgiving for favors received; and on the work of some of the Sisters who make everything requisite for the altar and other pious articles. Choir and lay sisters, after three years of temporary vows, make their perpetual vows, according to the new regulations in conformity with the Code of Canon Law. The tournières (out sisters) pronounce their vows for a year only, being allowed to renew them on the date of the first emission. The rules and constitutions of the institute have been sent to Rome for any necessary revision. There are 15 foundations of the institute, with 490 menbers. Houses have recently been founded at London, Ont. (1913), and Saint-Boniface, Man. (1918). Among distinguished religious recently deceased are: Mother E. de St. Joseph, co-foundress of the institute and foundress of the monastery at Toronto (1913); M. Marie-des-Cinq Plaies, co-foundress and superior of the monastery at Nicolet (1918); M. Marie du Saint-Esprit, foundress and first superior of the monastery at Montreal (1917); M. Catherine de Ricci, co-foundress of the monastery at Brooklyn (1917); M. Marie Sainte-Ursule, foundress of the monastery of Sherbrooke (1920); M. Thérèse de Jésus, co-foundress and superior of the monastery at Havana (1921). On 14 Sept., 1911, the Sisters celebrated the golden jubilee of the foundation of the institute.

IV. SISTERS ADORERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (Alton, Ill.; cf. C. E., XII—375a).—The Nazareth Home, Alton community, was incorporated (1918) under the laws of the State of Illinois with the right of succession under the legal title of Nazareth Home, Alton, Ill. The institution is under the direction of Mother Pauline Schneeberger, vicar general. In February, 1920, at the time of the influenza epidemic, seven sisters died within a week. Mother Josepha, first assistant, died in the same year (16 Oct.). There have been several changes made in the original buildings of the Nazareth Home. St. Xavier's House, the first novitiate, was repaired as an orphanage for boys and girls. In September, 1920, a high school was opened for girls, especially those who aspire to be teachers as Sisters Adorers of the Precious Blood. A new edifice, St. Paul's Hall, was constructed. At present the institution numbers 55 Sisters, 7 novices, 1 candidate, 12 aspirants. The Sisters conduct schools in the Archdiocese of St. Louis and in the Diocese of Alton, Ill., Harrisburg, Pa., Altoona, Pa., Pittsburg, Pa., Fort Wayne, Ind. There are about 1400 pupils.

V. SISTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (O'Fallon, Mo., cf. C. E., XII—375b).—In 1910 the rule of the institute was revised. The community received the "Decretum Laudis" from the Holy See in 1918. In July, 1920, Mother M. Wilhelmina was elected superior general. The institute numbers 229 Sisters, 18 novices, 12 candidates. There are 24 parochial schools and 1 academy, St. Elizabeth Institute.

VI. SISTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (Ruma, Ill., cf. C. E., XII—375b).—The Sisters conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of St. Louis and in the dioceses of Alton, Belleville, Concordia, El Paso, Oklahoma, St. Joseph and Wichita. The community numbers 346 Sisters, 17 novices, 25 candidates. They have under their care 60 schools, 2 academies, 3 hospitals, and 1 orphanage with 261 orphans. There are 6300 pupils.

VII. SISTERS OF THE PRECIOUS BLOOD (Maria Stein, Ohio; cf. C. E., XII—375b).—The Sisters have 49 foundations in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, and the dioceses of Cleveland, Fort Wayne, Kansas City, Monterey and Los Angeles, St. Joseph, Toledo, and Tucson. They have 40 schools, 1 sanitorium, 1 orphanage, 3 boarding schools, 1 home for the aged, and the care of domestic work for 6 institutions. Under their care are 7800 pupils, 210 boarders, 150 orphans, 100 to 150 patients in the sanitarium. The community numbers 580 professed religious, 32 novices, 2 postulants. The present superior general is Mother M. Emma Nunlist, elected 1899, succeeded 1905 by Mother M. Josephine Boetsch (d. 1917), re-elected 1911.

Prefect Apostolic (C. E., XII—386).—Prefects apostolic and vicars apostolic are governed by the same laws except that the prefects have not to make the canonical visit ad limina: the prefects take possession of their territory officially by exhibiting the decree or letters patent of the Congregation of Propaganda, the vicars by showing their apostolic letters, to the pro-prefect or pro-vicar of their respective districts. Prefects apostolic while within their own territories enjoy the same rights and faculties as residential bishops, unless the Holy See has limited them; like vicars apostolic, even if they have not received episcopal consecration, they can, within their districts and during their term of office, give all the blessings reserved to bishops, except the pontifical blessing, grant indulgences of fifty days, administer confirmation, first tonsure, and minor orders. If they have received episcopal consecration they have a right to the honorary privileges of titular bishops: if they are not bishops, they have, but only during their term of office and while within their own territories, the insignia and privileges of the prothonotaries apostolic de numero participantium.

Prefects and vicars apostolic must require all missionaries, even religious, to show on arriving their letters of authorization, and the missionaries, including regulars, must ask leave of them to exercise their ministry, a request which is not to be denied except to individuals and then only for grave cause. All missionaries, including regulars, are subject to their jurisdiction, visitation, and correction in matters pertaining to the government of the missions, the cure of souls, the administration of the sacraments, the direction of schools, alms and bequests for the mission. Except in the cases allowed by law, they must never meddle with the discipline of religious under the direction of their own superior; yet if a dispute arises regarding the orders of the religious superiors and those of the vicars or prefect apostolic in regard to the matters just referred to, the religious must ordinarily follow the directions of the vicar or prefect apostolic; they have, however, the right of appeal to the Congregation of Propaganda. If there are not enough secular priests, vicars and prefects apostolic can, after advising with the superiors, compel religious, even those who are exempt, if they are attached to the mission, to undertake the cure of souls, unless the religious have a rule to the contrary approved by the Holy See.

Vicars apostolic are obliged to make the visits ad limina like residential bishops, but where it would be gravely inconvenient they can employ a procurator, even one residing in Rome. They and the prefects apostolic are to send a written account of the state of their mission, signed personally and also by one of their council, to the Holy See every five years, and moreover, at the close of each year they are to forward a statement of the conversions, baptisms, annual receptions of the sacraments, and other facts worthy of notice. They may not absent themselves for a notable time from their territories, except for a grave and urgent cause, without consulting the Holy See; and they should visit their districts as often as necessary personally or by proxy, if they are lawfully excused, to see if the missions work is being properly conducted. They should select a council of at least three of the older and more prudent missionaries, whom they are to consult in more serious and difficult matters. If possible they should call meetings of at least the chief religious and secular missionaries once a year or oftener to discuss their experiences and to perfect the means of carrying on the mission work. They are bound to enforce the laws relating to episcopal archives, due allowance however being made for difference of place and persons. The regulations concerning plenary and provincial councils and diocesan synods should be carried out in territories subject to Propaganda, as far as conditions permit; no time is fixed, however, for holding them, and the decrees of the councils before being promulgated must be sent to the Congregation of Propaganda. They are bound gravely in conscience to use every endeavor to build up a native clergy and priesthood and, moreover, must apply Mass for the people entrusted to them on the feasts of the Nativity, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension Thursday, Pentecost, Corpus Christi, the Immaculate Conception, the Assumption, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, and All Saints, according to the regulations laid down for bishops. They may not, without the knowledge of the Holy See, allow missionaries whom it has sent to leave their territory perpetually, or to go into another, neither may they expel them. In a case of public scandal, however, they can, after consulting their councils, and, where there is question of a religious, warning his superior as far as possible, remove a missionary, but they must notify the Holy See of the fact.

At the end of the year 1921, there were of Latin Rite 177 vicariates apostolic (Europe 8, Asia 68, Africa 54, America 27, and Oceanica 20), 62 prefectures apostolic (Europe 4, Asia 10, Africa 28, America 13, and Oceanica 7), and 14 missions (Europe 1, Asia 9, Africa 1, America 2, and Oceanica 1); in addition there are 2 vicariates apostolic of Uniat Greco-Bulgar Rite (Thrace and Macedonia) and 4 vicars apostolic of Syro-Malabar Rite in India.

Prelate Nullius, that is a prelate of no diocese, one who rules over a territory independent of any diocese and having its own clergy and laity. In canon law prelates nullius are governed exactly by the same regulations as abbots nullius, having the same rights and obligations (see ABBOT). In 1921 the prelatures nullius were: Acre and Purus, Bom Jesus do Piahy, Registro do Araguaia, SSma Conceicao do Araguaia, and Santarem in Brazil; Altamura and Acquaviva delle Fonti, and Santa Lucia del Mela in Italy; and Mozambique. On 13 May, 1921, the prelatute of Rio Branco was aggregated to the Benedictine Abbey of Our Lady of Monteserrato, Rio de Janeiro, the abbot during his term of office administering the prelatute without the obligation, however, of personal residence there.

Premonstratensian Canons (NORBERTINE ORDER; cf. C. E., XIII—387d).—The year 1920 witnessed the eighth centenary celebrations of the foundation of the Norbertine Order (1120-1920), the event being marked by splendid festivities throughout the order, and eulogistic tributes appeared in both the European and American press. The activities of the Norbertine Fathers, especially in the Brabant province, are worthy of note. During the last twenty years their number has increased from 408 to 640, while new houses have been founded in England, the United States, the Belgian Congo, Brazil, Denmark, Canada, and Switzerland. Thus would appear to be fulfilled St. Norbert's prophecy, the circumstances of which are not without interest. At the consecration of St. Norbert's first church at Premontr  (1122) before a large assembly of worshippers, the altar stone fell in pieces, an incident of apparently ill-omen, which caused the postponement for the time being of the ceremony of consecration. According to St. Norbert's prophecy, this was an indication that one day his order would decline, but after some time would be restored with new vigor. At the general chapter of the order (1921) in the Abbey of Schlagl, where the revision of the constitutions was arranged, the following events of far-reaching importance were announced: the French Fathers were allowed to return to France, their two houses in Belgium being also retained; a beautiful and extensive building had been acquired in Rome, alongside of the famous Basilica of St. Pudenziana, whose administration was likewise entrusted to the order; the Abbey of Tongerlo had taken charge of the episcopal college of St. Charles, Porrentruy near Basle (Switzerland); the Abbey of Averbode was to start a new house of the order at Antwerp; the Abbey of Tepl had bought the former Norbertine Abbey of Speinshart, in Bavaria; the canons of Averbode had started a huge Eucharistic crusade for the Belgian youth.

St. Norbertine's Third Order, founded by the Saint himself for his friend Count Theobald of Blois and Champagne, a grandson of William the Conqueror, was the first institution of this kind, being established one hundred years before the Franciscan and Dominican Third Orders (1122). It flourished especially in Flanders, Brittany, and Bavaria. Count Baldwin IX of Flanders, afterwards Emperor of Constantinople, was one of its illustrious members. The year 1922 being the eighth centenary of the foundation, a national congress of the members of the Third Order of St. Norbert was held in the Abbey of Tongerlo, presided over by Rt. Rev. Thomas L. Heylen, Bishop of Namur. Bishop Heylen is a son of Tongerlo, founder of the Corpus Christi basilica of Manchester and of the Belgian Archconfraternity of the Holy Mass of Reparation (238,000 members), and as president of the Permanent Committee of the International Eucharistic Congresses has given vigorous impulse to those splendid world-gatherings in honor of the Blessed Sacrament, which are making the twentieth century "the century of the Holy Eucharist." The process of beatification of Hugh of Fosses (1093-1164), first disciple of St. Norbert and first abbot general of the Norbertine Order, will be introduced in Rome in May, 1922, by Bishop Heylen. On 27 January, 1922, occurred the death of the abbot general, Norbert Schachinger, Abbot of Schlögl. He was succeeded by the present abbot general, Gummarus Crets, Abbot of Averbode (Belgium).

STATISTICS.—The following statistics show the present state of the order in each circary or province. Particulars are also given having reference to some convents of nuns who, though no longer under the jurisdiction of the order, are or have been related to it. The figures have been taken from printed catalogues published in December, 1921, or from letters since received. When the desired information has not arrived in time, a catalogue of a former year has been consulted.

Circary of Brabant (Belgium and Holland).—Averbode Abbey: priests, 89; clerics and novices, 26; lay brothers, 37; of these, 28 priests and 22 lay brothers have been sent to Brazil; and 4 priests and 2 lay brothers to Veile in Denmark. Grimbergen Abbey: priests, 32; clerics, 7; lay brothers, 6; of these, 4 priests are in Canada. Park-Louvain Abbey: priests, 38; clerics, 5; of these, 8 priests in Brazil. Postel Abbey: priests, 27; clerics, 4; of these, 1 priest in Belgian Congo and 1 in England. Tongerlo Abbey: priests, 80; clerics, 31; lay brothers, 31; of these 12 priests are in England, 5 priests are in Switzerland, and 12 priests and 10 lay brothers are in Belgian Congo in the Prefecture Apostolic of Welle (q. v.). Berne-Heswijk Abbey: priests, 48; clerics, 11; lay brothers, 13; a flourishing college with 100 students is attached to the abbey. St. Norbert's Priory, West De Pere, Wisconsin, U. S. A.: priests, 34; clerics, 7; lay brothers, 4; and a college conducted by the fathers.

Circary of France.—The Abbey of Mondaye and other houses, confiscated in 1903, founded a new house at Bois-Seigneur Isaac, near Nivelles, Belgium. In 1921 the old Abbey of Mondaye was reestablished (priests 22; clerics, 2; lay brothers, 2). The Abbey of Averbode took charge of the Priory of Bois-Seigneur Isaac (priests 8; clerics, 7; lay brothers, 2).

Circary of Provence.—The Abbey of Frigolet and other houses confiscated in 1903, bought the former Norbertine Abbey of Leffe, Dinant, Belgium. In 1921 they recovered their house of Frigolet (priests, 31; lay brothers, 2). The Abbey of Leffe became a simple priory (priests 3). The Priory of Storrington, England, has 6 priests and 1 lay brother. The mission in Madagascar is served by 8 Norbertine Fathers.

Circary of Austria.—In Czechoslovakia: Neureisch Abbey (Nová Rise), 15 priests; Seelau Abbey (Zeliv), 21 priests, Strahov Abbey (Prague), 66 priests and 2 clerics; Tepl Abbey, 95 priests and 3 clerics; the college of Pilsen is conducted by the abbey (professors, 9; students, 185). In Austria: Geras Abbey, 25 priests and 3 clerics; Schlögl Abbey, 41 priests and 5 clerics; Wilten Abbey (Innsbruck), 44 priests, 4 clerics, and 4 lay brothers.

Circary of Hungary.—In Czechoslovakia: Jaszo Abbey (priests, 85; clerics, 13), which supplies the professors and conducts the gymnasia of Kassa, Rozsnyo, and Nagy-Várád (now in Rumania). In Hungary: Csorna Abbey (priests 45; clerics, 5), which supplies the professors and conducts the gymnasia of Keszthely (professors, 13; students, 332) and Szombathely (professors, 14; students, 450). These two abbeys have a college for their religious, who study at the University of Budapest; some clerics follow the course of lectures at the University of Fribourg.

Convents of Norbertine Nuns (Second Order).—Oosterhout Priory, Holland, 52 nuns. Neerpelt Priory, Belgium, 25 nuns. Bonlieu Abbey, nuns expelled from France, reassembled at Grimbergen, Belgium, 35 nuns. Le Mesnil-St-Denis Priory, Seine et Oise, France, 34 nuns. Abbey of St. Sophia, Toro, Spain, 14 nuns. Abbey of St. Maria near Zamora, Villoria de Orbigo, Spain, 42 nuns. Zwierzyniec, near Cracow, Poland, 46 nuns. Imbramowice Abbey, Poland, 12 nuns; Priory of Berg Sion, near Utsnach, in the Diocese of St. Gall, Switzerland, 39 nuns.

Convents of Norbertine Nuns (Third Order).—St. Joseph's at Heiligenberg, near Olmutz, 10 nuns, and Stresovice Adelka, near Prague, 3 nuns.

Congregation of Norbertine Sisters. mother-house at Duffel, Belgium, with branch houses in Mechlin, Gheel, Hoostraeten, Neerwaer.

Prendergast, EDMOND F., Archbishop of Philadelphia, b. at Clonmel, Ireland, on 3 May, 1843; d. at Philadelphia on 26 February, 1918. He came to the United States in 1859 and made his ecclesiastical studies at Overbrook Seminary, being ordained on 17 November, 1865. He held several important pastorates in the Archdiocese of Philadelphia and from 1895-1897 he served as vicar-general. He was auxiliary to Archbishop Ryan on 27 November, 1895, and he was consecrated titular Bishop of Scillio by his immediate superior on 24 February, 1897. He was appointed seventh archbishop of Philadelphia on 27 May, 1911.

Presbyterianism (cf. C. E., XII—392c).—In 1906 the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America effected a union with the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. However, approximately one-half of the ministers, organizations, and members of the latter refused to recognize the union and continued the organization. Much litigation ensued, most of the cases being decided in favor of the "reunited church," in Tennessee and Missouri the decisions favored the Cumberland body. The union has adopted a "Book of Common Worship" for voluntary use. In 1907 the Council of the Reformed Churches in the United States holding the Presbyterian System was organized, bringing into co-operative relations seven of the Presbyterian family in this country. Of the Reformed bodies the Reformed Church in America, and the Reformed Church in the United States joined this council, although rejecting a proposed organic union with the Presbyterian Church.

Since 1907 there have been proposed various plans of union, notably that of the Northern and the Southern bodies. The latter rejected the overtures. Plans of union in Scotland and in Canada also failed, or have been postponed. In 1920 the Welsh Presbyterian Church united with the Presbyterian Church in the United States. Finally in 1921 (December), proposals for union of all Presbyterian and Reformed Churches in the United States were indefinitely postponed, owing to inability to agree on a unification program. The point of disagreement was as to whether there should be a complete union, with one general assembly and a number of regional synods, or a federal union in which the various denominations would preserve their autonomy. The denominations rejecting the proposals were the Presbyterian Church in the United States (South), Presbyterian Church in the United States (North), Reformed Church in the United States; and the United Presbyterian Church.

In interdenominational work the Presbyterians are affiliated with the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America and have been prominent in the preparations for the World Conference on Faith and Order.

The Presbyterians have been especially active among foreigners in this country. In 1916 there were eighty-one different communities served by the board in charge of this work; eleven languages were regularly employed. The Presbyterian Church (Northern) has inaugurated a "New Era Movement" in an attempt to bring under one leadership the various agencies and a plan of financial centralization has been adopted.

Since 1917 the educational work of the Presbyterian Church in this country is under a general board of education. It controls 13 seminaries, including two for Germans, and two for negroes. Among other institutions affiliated with the board (generally owned or controlled by the Presbyterians) are Elmira College, Lafayette College, Lincoln University, New York University, University of Wooster, Washington and Jefferson College and Illinois College. Princeton University, Hamilton College, and Western Reserve University, though not directly connected with the church, have been closely identified with its history.

In the foreign field in 1916 the Presbyterians carried on 26 missions, 7 in China, 3 in India, 2 each in Persia, Siam and Brazil, and 1 each in Africa, Japan, Korea, Mexico, the Philippine Islands, Chile, Colombia, Venezuela, Guatemala and Syria. They reported 1353 missionaries, 118 medical missionaries (24 women), and 308 single women, 930 churches and 161,470 communicants. In 1920 they reported 1772 missionaries and 226,971 members. The church conducts the Syrian Protestant College at Beirut, Syria, Forman College at Allahabad, India, and the Canton Christian College in China.

The names of the various Presbyterian bodies in the United States are (1922) the Associate Reformed Synod, Associate Synod of North America, Colored Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Presbyterian Church in the United States (South), Reformed Presbyterian Church (Old School), Reformed Presbyterian Church General Synod, United Presbyterian Church, and Welsh Presbyterian Church (Calvinistic Methodist).

In 1920 there were between five and six million Presbyterian communicants in the world; United States, 2,255,000 (10 bodies), (2,384,000 in 1922); Scotland 1,245,000; Canada 300,000; Wales 200,000; Ireland 130,000; England 89,000; Australia 100,000; New Zealand 50,000; South Africa 50,000. The total number of Presbyterian constituents (communicants and their families), in the world, is between fifteen and twenty millions, although some state a much higher figure.

Presentation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, CONGREGATION OF THE (cf. C. E., XII—399d).—The general mother-house is at Bourg Saint-Andéol (Ardèche), France, and Mother Marie-Sainte-Honorine is the sixth superior general of the institution. The provincial-house in America is at Saint-Hyacinthe (Quebec), Canada. Mother Marie des Saints Anges is provincial superior. Connected with the American provincial house are the novitiate, with 114 novices and postulants, a boarding school affiliated to the University of Montreal, and a government normal school. The Sisters are also in charge of two academies and two primary schools in the city of Saint Hyacinthe. There are 1023 Sisters in America, with a total of 59 houses and 20,751 pupils. In the United States 12,856 pupils are under the Sisters' instruction in 25 schools belonging to this congregation.

Presentation of Our Lady, SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XII—399a), founded at St. Nicolas in 1830. The Rev. K. Schockaert is chaplain and director of the institute and Mother Mary Alphonse was re-elected general superior in 1920. Dependent on the mother-house at St. Nicolas are the filial houses of Boom (near Antwerp) Ledeborg (Ghent) Lockeren, Bornhem, and Lottenhulle, each house has an institution for boarders and two day schools, one for the lower classes of society which is gratuitous and another for the better classes. At St. Nicolas, besides the boarding school with about 170 pupils, there is a college for pupil-teachers with an attendance of 270. It has two sections, a primary and a middle section for higher studies. The latter was founded in 1911, and in 1920 commercial classes were started, with a three year course in business training for girls, at the end of which a certificate may be obtained. At present the community numbers about 200 members.

Presentation Order (cf. C. E., XII—397b).—The new Code of Canon Law has made necessary some changes in the rule of the order. In Ireland the bishops are advocating amalgamation, the extent of which is not yet known. In the last ten years the following new houses have been founded: Ireland, 2; England, 2; Australia, 1; India, 1; America, 6. Of the new foundations in America 3 are in South Dakota, 1 in Dubuque, Iowa, and 2 in New York City. A novitiate was opened in 1921 at Mt. St. Joseph, Newburgh, N. Y.

Prince Albert and Saskatoon, DIOCESE OF (PRINCIPIS ALBERTI ET SASKATOONENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—427b), in the Province of Saskatchewan, Canada, suffragan of Regina. By decree of 30 April, 1921, the name of the diocese formerly Prince Albert, was changed to Prince Albert and Saskatoon. The Benedictine Abbey of St. Peter at Muenster, Saskatchewan, was erected into an abbey nullius by Apostolic Constitution of 6 May, 1921, and its territory separated from the Diocese of Prince Albert and Saskatoon. The diocese is confided to the Oblates of Mary Immaculate and the present bishop is Rt. Rev. Joseph Prud'homme, O. M. I., b. 1882, elected 1921, succeeding Bishop Albert Pascal, deceased. There are in the diocese: 32,000 Catholics, not including Ruthenians, 34 secular priests; 37 regular priests, of whom 36 are Oblates and 1 Redemptorist; 54 churches with resident priests; 75 chapels; 8 religious congregations of women with 203 Sisters; 3700 children in 115 Catholic schools; 2 schools for Indians with 130 children.

Privation is a vindication imposed by the law or by a superior by which one is deprived of an ecclesiastical right, dignity, office, benefice or the fruit thereof. In public cases where it has been incurred as a penalty latae sententiae of the common law it cannot be remitted by the ordinary. If it has been imposed by an ordinary he cannot validly confer the vacated office, benefice or dignity on one of his own household or on one who is related to him by blood or affinity in the first or second degree.

The following persons by the very fact of their offence suffer privation: those who presume to hold two incompatible offices or benefices lose both; a newly promoted cardinal who refuses to swear to visit the pope within a year, is deprived of the cardinalitial dignity forever; a bishop-elect who neglects to receive consecration within six months is deprived of the right of consecration; a patron who converts to his own use ecclesiastical property belonging to the church of which he is patron loses his right of patronage; one who holds an office, benefice, or dignity and violates the obligation of residence annexed, eo ipso loses a part of the revenue proportionate to the time of his absence, if he remains obstinate he may be deprived of the office, benefice, or dignity itself.

The following are to be punished by privation: clerics who impede directly or indirectly the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction and have recourse for that purpose to any lay power or who publish laws, mandates or decrees against the rights and liberty of the Church, or who join Masonic or similar associations which plot against the Church or legitimate civil authority; they are to lose their office, benefice, dignity, pension or function (and if they are religious are to be deprived of active and passive voice in their institute); so, too, are clerics who conspire against the authority of the pope, a papal legate, or their own ordinary, or clerics laying violent hands on a cardinal or papal legate; or confessors guilty of solicitation; or clerics who usurp or retain the property or rights of the Roman Church; or clerics guilty of certain aggravated sins of impurity.

Clerics usurping or converting church property are to lose their benefices; clerics who deliberately inflict grave bodily injury on themselves, are to lose their benefices or offices having cure of souls annexed.

The following offenders are to be punished by privation but only if recalcitrant: apostates, heretics, or schismatics, are to lose their benefices, dignities, pensions, office, or functions; canon theologians, or penitentiaries, their benefice; concuninary parish priests are to lose their parishes, other clerics their benefices.

The following persons may be punished by privation at the discretion of the ordinary: those who traffic in Mass stipends or who fail to notify the ordinary annually of the number of Masses still unsaid for which stipends have been received, if this notification is required by law; those who insult or defame another verbally or in writing; those who steal, destroy, conceal or substantially change any document belonging to the episcopal archives, may be deprived of their office or benefice; those who are found guilty of homicide, abduction of the young, selling anyone as a slave or for any other evil purpose, usury, rapine, grievous theft, incendiary, grave mutilation or assault or battery inflicted on another, or those who take possession of a benefice, office, or dignity irregularly; those who stubbornly refuse to make the profession of faith when required by law; those who fabricate or falsify papal letters, decrees or rescripts, or knowingly use the same (if religious, they are to lose active and passive voice); clerics who violate the sixth commandment especially if they have cure of souls.

Again a cleric who is giving grave scandal and remains recalcitrant may be deprived temporarily of the right to wear clerical dress; if a cleric has been deposed and shows no sign of amendment he may be deprived perpetually of this right, which would entail the loss of clerical privileges, or clerics who publicly sympathize or who attempt even civil marriage, or who elope, lose their right to the clerical dress, ipso facto.

Religious superiors who admit unsuitable candidates irregularly to the novitiate or to profession may be deprived of their office; so, too, reverend mothers who spend any part of a nun's dowry or who fail to notify the ordinary in due time about approaching receptions or profession, or who violate the regulations protecting the liberty of criticism enjoyed by nuns during visitation; or a superioress who puts any difficulty in the way of a nun who desires to have an extraordinary confessor, or who prevents or asks about a nun going to confession to any approved confessor in a church or even a semi-public oratory, or who would in any way prohibit a nun who was seriously ill from calling in any priest who has approbation for hearing women's confessions. After a warning for any of these offences a superior is to be deprived of his or her offices if a second offence occurs. It should be noted that a sentence of privation does not take effect until it has been communicated to the guilty party, who has always, however, the right of a devolutive appeal to the Holy See.

Privilege.—If a privilege has been enjoyed for 100 years or from time immemorial it is presumed to have been properly granted. A privilege granted by rescript is not revoked by a contrary law unless this is stated expressly in the law or unless the law was enacted by the superior of the person who issued the rescript. It was formerly customary for religious orders properly so called to communicate to one another whatever privileges were granted specially to any of them (cf. C. E., XII-756b). This practice has now been abolished, for the Code declares that a religious order or institute henceforth enjoys only the privileges contained in the Code or granted to it by the Apostolic See, all communication of privileges being hereafter excluded; privileges of a regular order, however, belong also the nuns of the same order in so far as they are capable of enjoying them.

Privileges, ECCLESIASTICAL.—The faithful owe reverence to the clergy, according to their different grades and offices, and would be guilty of the crime of sacrilege if they inflicted an unjustifiable bodily injury on a cleric.

Privilegium canonis.—Under the Code of Canon Law the punishment inflicted for attacking the person of a cleric is proportioned to the dignity of the party injured. Thus anyone who lays violent hands on the pope incurs excommunication very specially reserved to the Holy See, is ipso facto an excommunicate vitandus, legally infamous, and if he be a cleric is to be degraded; if the party injured is a cardinal or a legate of the pope the culprit incurs an excommunication specially reserved to the pope, he becomes legally infamous and is to be deprived of any ecclesiastical benefice, dignity, pension or office he holds; if the injured party is a patriarch, archbishop, bishop, whether residential or titular, the offender incurs excommunication reserved specially to the Holy See; if the party wronged is any other cleric or religious of either sex, the excommunication is reserved to the culprit's ordinary, who may if he judges fitting impose additional penalties.

Privilegium fori.—This means that in civil and criminal cases the clergy must be brought to trial before an ecclesiastical not a secular judge; however, in certain places the Holy See has agreed with the civil authorities to waive this privilege while in all others places permission when necessary, though it must be asked, is always granted to bring clerics before a lay tribunal. If the defendant is a prelate of high rank permission can be obtained only from the Holy See; otherwise it can be granted by the ordinary. Canonists agree that this privilege of the forum is not in force in Belgium, France, Holland or Germany, Ireland and English-speaking countries generally; in the United States laymen may sue a cleric without asking the ordinary's permission, but a priest may not sue another cleric in the civil courts without leave of his ecclesiastical superiors. Where the privilege is in force the legislation of the Church is as follows: Whosoever without leave of the Holy See dares to bring before a lay judge a cardinal, legate of the Holy See, or higher official of the Roman Curia in connection with matters pertaining to this office, or finally his own ordinary incurs excommunication specially reserved to the pope; if the party haled before the judge is any other bishop, abbot or prelate nullius or one of the higher superiors of a pontifically approved religious order, the excommunication is reserved simply to the pope; in any other case the culprit if a cleric is ipso facto suspended from office, while a lay person is to be suitably punished by his bishop.

Naturally an individual loses these privileges when he is no longer in the ranks of the clergy; that is the case when a minor cleric after notifying his ordinary discontinues his studies for the priesthood and returns to secular life; or when a culprit for his evil deeds has been degraded or deprived forever by his bishop of the right to wear ecclesiastical dress.

Prjasev, DIOCESE OF EPERJESSENSIS RUTHENORUM (cf. C. E., Eperjes V—484d), of the Greek Ruthenian Rite, dependent of Estsergom, formerly in kingdom of Hungary, but now in Czechoslovakia. Rt. Rev. Stephen Novak, born in Oblysa, diocese of Munkacs, 4 December, 1879, was consecrated bishop in 1913 to succeed Rt. Rev. John Valyi, d. 22 November, 1911. On account of political reasons Bishop Novak has been out of the diocese for three years and his affairs are administered by the vicar general Nicolaus Russnak. The bishop's see is Prjasev, in Latin Fragöpolis, in Slovakian Presov, in Hungarian Eperjes. Here the episcopal residence, cathedral, seminary and most of the diocesan institutions are situated. The diocese contains 185,000 Ruthenian Catholics, 230 priests (11 celibates, 27 widowers, the rest married) 183 parishes scattered through 6 counties, 183 parochial churches, 135 filial churches, 61 chapels, 250 parochial schools with 35,000 pupils, a college for boys, 2 convents of Basilians, and a theological seminary with 40 students.

Profession, RELIGIOUS (cf. C. E., XII-451c).—The canonical requirements for a valid religious profession are as follows: (1) the candidate must be at least sixteen years old for temporary or twenty-one for perpetual profession; (2) he must have made a valid novitiate; (3) he must be admitted to profession by a superior authorized by the constitutions; (4) the profession must be explicit, made freely and with requisite knowledge, and finally must be accepted by a lawful superior or his delegate according to the constitutions. Furthermore, if there is question of perpetual profession in any religious institute the candidate must have been professed of simple temporary vows for at least three years. The first profession must be made in the house of novices at the end of the term of probation. These vows bind either for three years or longer in the case of those who after the lapse of three years have not reached the age required for the perpetual profession, or from year to year where the constitutions prescribe annual professions. The general law no longer extends the time or age for profession in the case of lay brothers beyond those required for other religious; the law exempts from temporary profession a religious who, having been professed solemnly or with simple perpetual vows, changes with permission of the Holy See to another order or congregation; such a religious on completing his new novitiate must be admitted to perpetual profession at once or return to his old order; however, if necessary to test his vocation, the superior may prolong his period of probation but not for more than one year. It may be noted by way of exception that the first vows of the Jesuits and the Religious of the Sacred Heart are still perpetual on the part of the professed religious; however, the profession by which the latter institute becomes bound to its members cannot be postponed beyond six years.

When the temporary vows of the professed have to be renewed, for a just cause the renovation may be made earlier, but not by more than a month. In such a case the new year of temporary profession does not begin from the day of renovation, but from the day in which it would have begun had the time of renovation not been anticipated. If the lawful superior questions the fitness of the religious for perpetual profession, he may allow the temporary vows to be renewed but not for more than three years; should a doubt still remain, the superior, if desirous of continuing the probation, must apply to the Holy See, which, however, is not wont to extend it beyond a year. In case a novice on account of his age had to make a temporary profession for more than three years, if an extra period of probation is needed, it must not, in the opinion of Vermeersch, extend beyond six years from the time of the first profession, though Augustine holds that extension may be for three years beyond the time for which the first vows were made. Before the period of their temporary vows has expired religious may be dismissed by the general of a pontifically approved order or institute with the consent of his council, or in the case of nuns by the local ordinary and the regular superior, if there is any, acting on the written request of the mother superior, and her council, or, in the case of diocesan Sisters, by the ordinary of the place where the convent is situated with the knowledge and consent of the superioresses.

In dismissing temporarily professed religious the following conditions must be observed by superiors: (a) the motives for dismissal must be grave; thus a lack of the religious spirit causing scandal to others is sufficient, when repeated admonition combined with a salutary penance has proved ineffective; though ill-health is not, unless it is clearly proved that the ill-health was fraudulently concealed or dissimulated before profession; (b) although the motives must be really known to the superior who dismisses, it is not necessary for them to have been proved judicially, but they must always be made known to the subject, who must be granted full liberty to reply, and his answer must be communicated to the superior who is to dismiss or retain the religious; (c) if dismissed, the religious has the right to appeal to the Holy See, and pending its decision the dismissal remains in abeyance. If a dismissed religious was received without a dowry or cannot support herself with her means, her institute must in charity, but not in justice, not merely aid her to return home safely and becomingly, but provide her in accordance with natural equity for a certain time, to be determined by mutual consent, or, in case of disagreement, by the local ordinary, with the means of living decently. A religious so dismissed is ipso facto released from all his vows, but not from the obligations arising from sacred orders, if he has received them. It might be added that religious however professed are ipso facto lawfully dismissed if they have (a) apostatized publicly from the Faith; or (b) eloped with one of the opposite sex; or (c) contracted or attempted to contract marriage, even civil marriage; but according to the constitutions the higher superior with his chapter or council should make a declaration of the fact and draw up the proof for their archives.

The religious superior, before admitting anyone to the first temporary profession must have the consent of his council or chapter; but for the perpetual profession he need only consult them. At professions the formula and ceremony prescribed by the constitutions should be employed; all rites and ceremonies referring to perpetuity of state, which had been allowed in certain institutes by the decree "Perpenasis" of 18 July, 1902, for both temporal and perpetual profession are now to be reserved for solemn profession. A written copy of the formula signed by the professed and at least by him who received the profession is to be kept in the archives; if the profession was solemn the superior who received it must notify the pastor of the place where the newly-professed religious was born, for purposes of record.

Religious professed temporarily in preparation for their perpetual vows enjoy all the indulgences, privileges and spiritual favors of those professed of solemn vows or of simple perpetual vows; should they die while thus bound temporarily they have a right to the same prayers and masses as the perpetually professed. So, too, are they under the same obligation to observe the rules and constitutions; however, where choir is obligatory they are not bound by the rule of reciting the Divine Office in private, unless they are in holy orders or the constitutions expressly provide otherwise. They have no right of active and passive voice unless it is granted to them expressly by the constitutions; the time set down for enjoying this privilege is counted from that of their first profession, if the constitutions are silent. By profession they lose parochial benefices at the end of a year, and all other benefices after three years.

PROPERTY.—Professed religious with simple vows, whether perpetual or temporal, retain the ownership of their property and can acquire more, unless as happens in certain institutions the constitutions provide differently. As has been mentioned in the article Novice before simple profession the religious, though he has to retain the ownership of his property as long as his simple vows continue, must give over the administration of his property to any person he selects, and, if the constitutions do not provide otherwise, must dispose of its use and revenues as he pleases. This right of disposal most probably permits the novice to ordain that the revenue is to be added regularly to the capital (Papi, op. cit. infra, p. 51). If this arrangement regarding the administration of the property and the disposal of its use and revenue was omitted for any reason before simple profession, it is to be made by the religious, notwithstanding his vows, with the same freedom as is enjoyed by novices. If the constitutions do not allow a religious to change the administration of his property or the disposal of its revenue at his discretion, he must have the leave of his superior general, or in case of a nun who has simple vows made in an institute with solemn vows (monialis) of the local ordinary, and of the regular superior. If the change, however, should be in favor of his own institute, he may not make it even if the superior authorized him, at least if it would involve a considerable part, in which case it would be necessary to obtain the permission of the Congregation of Religious. If the religious professed of simple vows, should leave the institute before making his solemn vows the provisions as to the administration and the disposal of the revenue would cease to hold. Should one professed of solemn vows leave, this would not be so, because the latter by his solemn profession gave up not merely the right to administer his property and dispose of its revenue, but divested himself entirely of ownership. What a simply professed religious receives as a recompense for his work done or what is given to him for the sake of the community belongs not to him but to the institute; but he can acquire new property by will or donation as a personal gift, unless this is forbidden by the constitutions. However, the Holy See has made a special provision by which a dowry brought in by any nun or sister must be returned to her, if she goes back to the world.

Apart from special Apostolic indults, the professed with simple vows belonging to an order of regulars, cannot validly renounce their property before the last sixty days preceding their solemn profession; within those sixty days, however, they must renounce it all in favor of anyone they wish, the renunciation to become effective only when the solemn profession takes place. Immediately after their profession steps should be taken to have the renunciation made binding in civil law. Due regard being had to special Apostolic indults, all property devolving in any way to a religious after solemn profession goes to the order, province, or house, according as the constitutions provide, if the order is capable of owning property; should the order be incapable, the Holy See becomes the owner. Professed with simple vows in religious congregations may not divest themselves of the ownership of their property by a free gift, nor may they change the will which, in accordance with canon law, they made as novices, without leave of the Holy See, or, in urgent cases of a higher superior or even a local superior, if there is no time to have recourse to the Holy See or higher superior respectively. Formerly the giving up of ownership was forbidden only while the religious had temporary simple vows, now it is forbidden also when these vows are perpetual.

A parochial benefice becomes vacant after the lapse of a year from the first profession of the holder, all other benefices after three years. On being perpetually professed a religious loses by law the right of incardination in the diocese to which he belonged before entering religion. A religious profession which was invalid on account of an external impediment can be validated only by the Holy See or by lawful profession made after the nullity became known and the impediment was removed; if, however, it was invalid from a mere internal defect of consent, it becomes valid when that consent is given, provided the institute has not already withdrawn its consent.

Profession of Faith.—All customs to the contrary being reprobated, a profession of faith according to the formula approved by the Holy See must be made personally as follows: (a) Those who assist at a general or special council or diocesan synod with a consultive or deliberate vote must make it before the president or his delegate; the president makes it in presence of the council or synod; (b) cardinals-elect in presence of the dean of the sacred college, the first cardinal priest and deacon, and the camerlengo; (c) those promoted to an episcopal see, even non-residential, or to abbeys nullius, vicariates Apostolic, or prefectures Apostolic, in presence of an Apostolic delegate; (d) a vicar capitular in presence of the cathedral chapter; (e) those promoted to a dignity or canonry, in presence of the local ordinary or his delegate and of the chapter; (f) newly appointed diocesan consultors, the local ordinary or his delegate and before the other consultors; (g) vicars general, parish priests, and all those who have been provided with a benefice, even manual, having the cure of souls annexed; rectors and professors of theology, canon law, and philosophy in seminaries, at the commencement of each scholastic year or at least on taking office; all candidates for the subdiaconate; all diocesan censors of books; all priests before obtaining faculties to hear confessions or to preach, make the profession of faith in presence of the local ordinary or his delegate; (h) the rector of a university or faculty, in presence of the ordinary or his delegate; all the professors in a canonically erected university or faculty, at the beginning of each scholastic year or at least on assuming office, and candidates who, having passed the examinations, are about to receive their degree in presence of the rector of the university or faculty or his delegate; (i) superiors in clerical religious orders or congregations, the chapter or the superior who designated them or his delegate. Those who after having relinquished an office, benefice, or dignity, even of the same kind as one which they had previously held, must again make profession of faith, in the manner just prescribed. Any one who neglects to make this profession without just cause is to be admonished after a suitable time; should he then prove contumacious he is to be punished with privation of his office, benefice or dignity, and of the revenue accruing therefrom.

Prohibition. — I. DEFINITION.—Prohibition, as commonly spoken of and practically so understood, can best be defined specifically as the forbidding by civil law of the manufacture, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, exception being made in the case of liquor when used for scientific, commercial, medicinal and sacramental purposes. As so defined it must be clearly distinguished from both temperance and total abstinence. The former is a virtue by which one uses liquor or any other material thing in reason, so that a man can drink an intoxicating beverage and at the same time be perfectly temperate by drinking the same in reasonable moderation. Total abstinence differs likewise from Prohibition in the sense that it is a voluntary act, inspired by a variety of motives such as penance or desire for better health or as a mere exercise of will-power or from physical dislike, whereas Prohibition is imposed by force of law and is not necessarily a virtue. It is important to keep these distinctions clear. All decent people advocate temperance, many practise total abstinence, but there is a sharp and bitter division of sentiment on the question of Prohibition.

II. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.—It is manifest that Prohibition can have no justification on the ground of any inherent and essential evil in liquor. All material things, whether drink or food or clothing, etc., are the creations, either actually or potentially, of God, Who meant man to use and enjoy them rationally. Matter is not evil in se. Long ago the Church condemned such fantastic philosophy when battling with the Manichean sects. Alcohol, as such, therefore is no more evil than wheat or water or fruit. Were it otherwise, it is strange that the Creator should have so universally provided nature with the power to produce alcohol.

The only premise, therefore, at all justifying a discussion of Prohibition relates to the abuse of alcohol, exactly the same as if it were a discussion on the abuses of marriage or political government or eating or dressing or playing. Theoretically most Prohibitionists would admit this, though practically their extreme language would indicate that they do ascribe some sort of essential evil to liquor as such. At all events, the only possible ground for discussion of the drink problem is the abuse of drink. Any other discussion is futile and necessarily endless. Moreover, Prohibition is not necessarily a religious or even moral issue. It becomes so only when the abuses of alcohol affect the morality of its victims, as can be said with equal truth of the abuses of the theatre or dancing or dressing. This should particularly be borne in mind in view of the tendency here in the United States to promote Prohibition through religious agencies, in fact by an appeal to religious fanaticism. Equally important is it to keep in mind that Prohibition cannot be based upon Scriptural grounds. Whilst the Bible of course utters many admonitions against drunkenness, it is manifestly indifferent concerning the use of drink which it evidently recognizes as an universal human custom. Only a fanatical textual criticism would attempt to distort isolated texts or particular words into a universal condemnation of drink. In this connection it is significant that Christ's very first miracle was the changing of water into wine. His selection of wine for the Eucharistic sacrifice completely throws out of court any appeal of Prohibitionists to the Bible. It is true that the extremists among them endeavor to show that He used the unfermented juice of the grape, but, as above observed, this is a fanatic textual criticism gone mad, and is moreover in direct opposition to the universal interpretation of the Christian world (both Catholic and Protestant) up to the present. In a word, then, the whole discussion of the question of Prohibition resolves itself down to a question of the abuse of alcohol. The only question to be seriously discussed is whether or not this abuse has become such a grave menace to the political, economic or moral life of society that to preserve itself from destruction society must either altogether abolish its use or restrain it within reasonable bounds.

III. HISTORY.—The United States is the only civilized nation of any size or importance, past or present, which has attempted real and absolute Prohibition. (For apparent or unimportant exceptions see below under Europe. It, therefore, merits most attention, though its efforts in that direction will be seen in clearer relief, if we describe also the less drastic efforts of other countries to solve the drink problem.

(1) The United States.—Prohibition as above defined, i. e., a forbidding of liquor by force of civil law, may be said to have come into being about the middle of the nineteenth century. Before that moral suasion had been the only agent used in combating the increasing evils of drinking. But in the year 1850 the State of Maine appealed to the new method of force by formally passing a statewide prohibition law. This can be said to be the beginning of the idea that the civil law was the best agent to stop drunkenness: it was the birth of Prohibition as such. The idea spread with surprising rapidity and by 1860 twelve States had followed the example of Maine, among them some like Rhode Island and New York, which are now bitterly opposed to Prohibition. By 1890 others had joined, bringing the total up to seventeen. This first stage of the movement proved, however, to be only a sort of preliminary skirmish.

For some ten years or so a hopeless fight was carried on by the National Prohibition Party at the customary elections, but some dozen years ago, a new and powerful factor began to make itself felt in the advent of the Anti-Saloon League, to the unremitting efforts of which is now due Constitutional Prohibition in the United States. This body was from the start skillfully organized, bold to the point of unscrupulousness in its political methods and apparently enormously financed. With clear-headed intelligence it concentrated its attack upon what even those opposed to Prohibition recognized and still recognize as the undefensible element of the liquor question, namely, the saloon.

The old ale-house or road-house, with whatever abuses, was after all a rather decent affair, celebrated in song and interwoven with much romance and venerable tradition, but the saloon which took its place in American life was seldom respectable and only too often a nest for the lowest elements in our social and political life. With rare intelligence, then, this new foe of drink concentrated its attacks upon it exclusively, thereby bringing to its aid all those decent people who, even though drinkers themselves, could not countenance such a social cancer.

With equal intelligence, though unfortunately not altogether honest, the Anti-Saloon League made an emotional appeal to what it called "the church," the church being, however at most a certain radical element of Evangelistic Protestantism, chiefly Methodists, who have always been opposed to many forms of amusement enjoyed by other Christians. So powerful was this ally that it is not too much to say that this religious body was more responsible than any other factor in bringing about Prohibition. Lastly, the Anti-Saloon League with consummate skill engineered a political campaign at small local political units, especially in country paign which has no equal in American politics. At first neglectful of national politics, it prepared the way to enter the national field by nibbling away districts, where heavier pressure could be brought to bear upon the individual politician or office-seeker, particularly where that pressure could be applied through the medium of religious or social ostracism. Moreover, the small country unit offered a more fertile field for an appeal to sentimentality and fanaticism than could be found in the more liberal city life. Such a campaign was all the more subtle inasmuch as its demands for local option appealed to the sense of liberty and local pride of a small political unit, which could not be expected to be farsighted enough to foresee that local option was only the means whereby to attain universal Prohibition, as subsequent events have amply proved, for surely, no Prohibitionist would now advocate local option, but rather bitterly oppose it.

The prohibition movement, so skillfully directed, found an indirect ally in the very political spirit of the early years of the present century. Radicalism was rampant in politics. New political panaceas were the visionary cure-alls. A sort of fanaticism was in the very air. That this helped the "dry" forces is evident from the fact of the prevalence of radicalism in the Southern and Western States which have been the mainstay of Prohibition in its later stage. At all events, the Anti-Saloon League made an amazing progress. From the local county or township it spread to the State, until finally it had enough States in line to force through the Constitutional Amendment. The progress was so swift that the people were taken by surprise. The fact was accomplished when many even yet deluded themselves into thinking that it could not happen.

The peculiar method of passing Constitutional amendments favored the "drys." By this method an amendment must be submitted not to a popular vote but to the Legislatures of the various States. This gave the Anti-Saloon League the advantage of bringing the familiar pressure to bear upon individual legislators, with the result that some Legislatures voted in direct defiance of the well-known wishes of the people. In Maryland, for instance, the Legislature ratified the amendment notwithstanding the fact that only shortly before the State had gone wet. The most extreme Prohibitionist will admit that had the amendment been submitted to a popular vote throughout the United States the issue would have been at least doubtful. The passing of it by the Legislatures, therefore, cannot be taken as an adequate expression of the will of the people.

As to the effect so far of Prohibition, it is hard to judge. In so far as it has eliminated the old saloon, or at least made the return of the old saloon impossible so far as public recognition goes, it has done good. But, when that is said, any other alleged benefits are at best doubtful. Undoubtedly crime has increased. Of course, this may be equally due to the lowering of moral standards brought on by the great War. But, it is significant, to say the least, that the great moral regeneration predicted by the Prohibitionists has not materialized. Equally difficult is it to estimate whether or not drinking has decreased. Certainly in the large centres it has not, the hospitals in these cities showing frequently an increase of alcoholic patients. Moreover, millions are making home wines and beer who before perhaps never or seldom drank, and the mere fact that the last Congress was asked by the Prohibition forces for some ten million dollars wherewith to suppress illicit liquor traffic is sufficient proof that the amendment is violated as much as it is observed.

Perhaps the most serious result of it all lies in the feeling of resentment created by it and the startling impetus it has given to the invasion of personal liberties by the State. The resentment shows itself in a contempt not only for the Constitution itself but for all law as law, for law is being more and more regarded as a tyrant, whereas the handing over to the Federal Government of the police powers of the individual States would seem to be taking down the last barrier against Federal encroachments upon local liberty, and making of the old-time "sovereign State" a mere geographical unit in a huge political homogeneity, with a head at Washington possessing limitless powers. If this be true, and it seems incontrovertibly so, then Prohibition has not merely abolished liquor but it has altered that concept of government as framed by the Fathers of the Republic and substitutes something which would never have been accepted by the signers of the Constitution had they foreseen its possibility. It marks a change in the whole concept of government in the United States.

For these reasons Prohibition cannot in any sense be termed a fait accompli in the United States, because the struggle is no longer between decency and the saloon, which has passed away forever, but between lovers of liberty or of constitutional guarantees of the same and what seem to them a tyrannical band of fanatics. On the side of lighter wines and beer are found as many upright and religious people as can be mustered by the Prohibitionists. There is a respectable element (how numerous it is hard to say) which feels that the question has not been settled justly and wisely in spite of the Eighteenth Amendment, and this element is apparently determined to fight until a just decision be reached, not only as regards the mere question of drink, but still more so as regards the more important questions of liberty and States rights as opposed to a Federal Socialistic government. All that one can say now is that the drink question is far from being settled.

(2) Europe.—No European country has yet adopted Prohibition as such. At the beginning of the great War Russia, by a hasty imperial decree, abolished the manufacture and sale of vodka, which act was hailed by Prohibitionists as a great victory for their cause. But it should be noted that the local communities were still allowed the privilege of local option in regard to other alcoholic drinks of a milder form, like beer and wine. So also Finland attempted Prohibition in 1909, but was prevented from putting it into effect by the Russian authorities, and even that attempt permitted light beer. Likewise Iceland, a Danish colony, with less than 80,000 inhabitants, in 1915 adopted a drastic Prohibition similar to that in the United States, but it allowed spirituous drinks containing 2½ weight per cent of alcohol, and, moreover, latest news asserts that a reversal of this law has taken place in the 1922 elections. The whole situation is too insignificant and uncertain to warrant its citation as an exception to the above general assertions. Outside of the United States, therefore, only Mohammedan countries enjoy the theoretical honor of being Prohibitionary, though even there practice, as usual, does not follow theory. It is interesting to note in this connection that the Prohibition question has come to some prominence in Turkey, owing to the more liberal Mohammedans interpreting the Prophet's forbidding of "wine" as referring strictly to "wine"—hence their indulgence in beer, whiskey and brandy, a casuistry which rules out even Mohammedans from the list of absolute Prohibitionists. Moreover, Mohammedanism with its polygamy can hardly be held up as a moral criterion for Christian civilized peoples.

But, Europe has its drink problem, all the more acute since the war. A detailed review of it in every country is not possible here, but it is well to note two characteristics of the European way of dealing with the problem, in the hope that a study of them will help Americans to handle it more intelligently than they have hitherto done. The first thing which an American must note with humiliation is that in Europe the intricate problems associated with liquor laws are not left to the mercy of the propagandist or interested legislator. Europe attempts at least to clear the way through scientific enquiries by men of eminence and authority. For instance, in France the French Academy of Medicine has long labored with it. France was likewise one of the prime movers in the formation of the International Committee for the Scientific Study of the Alcohol question. Norway, once the most intemperate of nations, has, through its Alcohol Commission, put through what is perhaps the most intelligent alcohol legislation in the world. European intelligence has been far ahead of American, which so far has never approached the subject with scientific calm, but has handed it over to crude fanatics and equally crude and often politically corrupt legislators. The result is that Europeans do achieve some real results in the way of temperance, while we flounder around in a hopeless tangle of a multitude of laws which are only more or less obeyed and with an ever increasing bitterness against such laws.

The second point noticeable in European methods is their wisdom in confining their energies to the abolition or at least drastic control of strong distilled spirits like vodka, whiskey and brandy, but allowing a reasonable liberty in favor of the lighter fermented beverages like beer and wine. It is undeniable that the drink problem goes hand in hand with distilled spirits; that sobriety goes hand in hand with light wines and beer. Take, for instance, France. Fifty or sixty years ago France was one of the soberest countries of Europe, though every Frenchman drank wine every day. Now, it has come up very high in the list of alcoholics, the reason being simply that according to all authorities, various forms of distilled liquors have more and more supplanted wine as a national beverage. The same is true for Italy. So long as the Italians stuck to their wine, they had absolutely no drink problem. Neither had Spain and Portugal, but these historically sober countries now have a drink problem due to the increasing use of whiskey, a custom introduced chiefly by returning emigrants from America. Europe, therefore, with admirable prudence and with good results is concentrating its energies upon strong spirits and endeavoring to bring its wine and beer drinking peoples to their old sober ways.

From all this the United States can learn some wisdom in handling its drink problem. It cannot hope to reach any permanent results until it first places the study and control of the problem in the hands of men who, by experience and scientific study, are qualified to handle it. It will forever remain an acute problem, prolific of evils, so long as it is left to the mercy of emotional fanatics or timid and perhaps corrupt legislators, the former of whom take no account of psychology and the latter of whom take account only of votes. Only in this way can the problem be shorn of the emotional frenzy and political corruption and bitter feeling which now characterize it here on both sides. It will remain insoluble so long as Americans persist in their crude methods of letting it be handled by amateurs. Such a view should, it would seem, meet with universal approval of sane men.

It is the opinion, likewise, of an ever-increasing number of observers that America should follow the example of Europe in permitting the reasonable use of wine and beer, while repressing the stronger spirits. Every person of decent moral standards, drinkers as well as non-drinkers, is glad to see the old saloon abolished, for it was an evil. Equally would all like to see whiskey restricted to a very narrow rôle, but if the experience of Europe and that of the United States during the past few years counts at all, it is the merest common sense to allow wine and beer under reasonable control. At all events it was the essence of political folly to try to force absolute prohibition all at once upon many millions of people who had been accustomed to drink from time immemorial.

IV. PROHIBITION AND THE MASS.—The position of the Church regarding the matter for the Eucharistic Sacrifice is too well known to warrant discussion. For detailed discussion of the Church's teaching and practice on this subject see C.E., V-584. She considers as invalid any juice of the grape which has been de-alcoholized. She requires wine in the plain sense of the word—wine from the grape. A more practical question, however, is how far the Mass may be affected by the Eighteenth Amendment. It is, of course, true that that amendment restricts its prohibition to "beverage purposes," and that the Volstead Law specifically interprets that expression as permitting wine for sacramental purposes. Congress could not do otherwise without violating the Constitution, which forbids Congress to interfere with the exercise of religion. But all this does not allay the misgivings of more far-sighted Catholics, because Congress can throw so many drastic and irritating regulations around the getting of wine as to seriously interfere with its legitimate procuring and in some cases practically make the same impossible, all the more so when the administration of these regulations would be in the hands of fanatical bigots some of whom have not hesitated to declare themselves in favor of absolutely prohibiting wine for Mass. That this is no idle apprehension is manifest from the restrictions thrown around the issuing of permits of whiskey for medicinal purposes, which have deterred all but a few physicians from prescribing it and druggists from carrying it in stock. Significant is it also that on its face the Eighteenth Amendment gives no such powers, these powers seeming to have been read into it by over-zealous officials. If, then, they can practically put liquor for medicinal purposes out of business, why can they not do the same for Mass wine? Such an eventuality is at least conceivable.

Again, whilst Congress cannot make any laws establishing a religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, any individual State can do so. The Constitution is no guarantee of religious liberty except so far as Congress is concerned. It is not inconceivable, therefore, that a State, roused to frenzy by a bigoted wave of fanaticism, might actually attempt such a monstrous injustice, all the more so as it has the present Eighteenth Amendment for a sort of precedent and encouragement in such prohibitory legislation. The situation, to say the least, excites misgivings.

The unscientific and emotional character of the Prohibition movement, at least in the United States, is reflected in the inferior quality, despite the enormous quantity, of its literature. Few works of permanent value are accessible to the general reader. Perhaps the sanest and best informed and most complete study of the drink problem is Korn's "Alcohol and Society" (New York, 1916). More advanced readers will find works in English and other languages cited by him. For a full discussion of the bearing of religion—the Bible in particular—upon the question, see Wasson, "Religion and Drink" (New York, 1914).

LUCIAN JOHNSTON.

Property, ECCLESIASTICAL (cf. C. E., XII-466b) —The Code emphasizes once more that the Catholic Church and the Apostolic See have an innate right, independent of the civil power, of acquiring, holding, and administering temporal property for the attaining of their proper ends; and individual churches and moral persons erected by ecclesiastical authority as legal entities have also a similar right in accordance with the sacred canons. The Church, moreover, may, independently of the civil power, exact from the faithful whatever is necessary for Divine service, the decent support of the clergy and other ministers, and the ends for which the Church exists. It may acquire temporal goods by all means lawful to others. The ownership of ecclesiastical property vests, under the supreme authority of the Holy See, in the moral person who acquired it legitimately; if that person passes away the dominion accrues to its immediate superior, full consideration, however, being given to the wishes of the founder or donor, the rules governing the moral person, and outstanding rights.

ACQUISITION.—Anyone who, by ecclesiastical or natural law, is competent to deal with his property freely, may devote it to pious uses even by a donation causa mortis or by will. In bequeathing property to the Church the requirements of the civil law should be fulfilled if possible; if through any defect the testament is held invalid in the civil court, nevertheless the heirs must be warned to carry out the wishes of the testator. The ordinary is the executor of bequests or donations for religious purposes; he must see that the donor's or testator's wishes are carried out, and those delegated to do so must account to him. Any clause in a testament contrary to this right of the ordinary is to be considered non-existent. A cleric or religious who receives property in trust for pious purposes must inform the ordinary about his trusteeship, the property and its obligations; if the donor expressly and entirely forbids this the trusteeship must be refused. If the trust to a religious is in favor of a church, or of pious works or of the inhabitants of a place or diocese, the ordinary to be informed is the local ordinary, otherwise it is the ordinary of the religious. If there is a just reason for making a change in carrying out a testator's will, permission is to be obtained from the Holy See, unless the testator has expressly authorized the local ordinary to act. If, however, through no fault of the administrators it is impossible to carry out the provisions, on account, for instance, of the small size of the estate or for another reason, the ordinary, after consulting the interested parties, may, in an endeavor to carry out the testator's wishes as far as possible, reduce all the bequests proportionately, except that the number of Masses may never be reduced, except with the express permission of the Holy See.

ALIENATION.—The consent of the Holy See is required for a valid contract to alienate any treasure or any church property worth over 30,000 francs ($6000), or to incur debts or obligations exceeding that sum. If the goods are valued at 1000 francs ($200) or less, the permission of the bishop, who is to consult the council of administration (except in case of things of trifling value) and also of those who are interested, suffices. If the value lies between the two figures mentioned, the consent of the cathedral chapter and of the council of administration is also needed. If part of the property has already been alienated, the fact must be stated in applying for permission to sell more. The property is to be appraised by an expert, and ought not to be sold below the price he fixes; the sale should ordinarily be by auction or at least it should be made known publicly, and the property should go to the highest bidder, everything considered without special permission of the local ordinary; however, immovable church property must not be sold or leased to its administrators or those related to them in the first or second degree of consanguinity or affinity. The church has the right of personal action against any person (and his heirs) alienating church property without the proper formalities, and a right of real action against any holder, if the alienation was void. If the alienation was invalid the action may be pursued by the person alienating, his superior, their successors in office or by any cleric of the church that has suffered the injury. To mortgage or pledge ecclesiastical property or to contract debts, the permission of the legitimate superior mentioned above is required; he is to consult those who are interested and to provide for the liquidation of the debt as soon as possible.

In leasing ecclesiastical property worth over 30,000 francs, for more than nine years, the consent of the Holy See is needed. If for less than nine years, or for more than that time, provided the value is between 1000 and 30,000 francs, the consent of the ordinary, cathedral chapter, council of administration and of those interested, is needed; but for property of this value, if the time does not exceed nine years, the consent of those interested and of the ordinary, after consulting the council, suffices, which is also the case if the property is not valued over 1000 francs and the time exceeds nine years. If the goods do not exceed 1000 francs in value and the time is less than nine years, the legitimate administrators can act on notifying the ordinary. If the property is held by emphyteusis (perpetual lease) the grantee cannot redeem the rent without the proper superior's authority; the deed of grant must accept the ecclesiastical forum as alone competent to adjudicate in any of the controversies that might arise between the parties in connection with the property.

Alienation of church property without due permission is null and void; consequently the property must be given back and the culprit must repair any injury or loss his act has occasioned. The alienor and those who consented to the alienation are liable to punishment according to the value of the property involved. If the object is worth less than 1000 francs the penalty is left to the ecclesiastical superior's discretion; if it is valued between 1000 and 30,000 francs, the culprit, if a patron, loses the right of patronage, an administrator his office, a religious superior or oecumenus his office and his eligibility for any other office—his superiors may impose further suitable penalties—an ordinary and other clerics having an office, benefice, dignity, or function in the Church, have to pay for double the amount of injury, to the church or pious work injured; other clerics are to be suspended for a time fixed by the Holy See. In a case in which the permission of the Holy See is required by canon law and has been deliberately omitted, those who have alienated the property, or consent to this, and those who have bought or received it incur unreserved excommunication. It may be remarked that the canons in which these penalties are laid down speaks expressly only of alienation, nothing being said therein about loans, mortgages or leases.

Apart from this alienation, those who usurp or hold personally or otherwise the temporary property or rights of the Roman Church incur excommunication reserved specially to the Holy See, and the offenders, if clerics, are to be deprived of whatever dignities, benefices, offices or pensions they may hold and declared incapable of acquiring them in future. Furthermore, if anyone presumes, personally or by another, to convert to his own use any ecclesiastical property whatsoever or to prevent the proper parties from enjoying the income or return therefrom he falls under excommunication and remains there till he makes restitution or removes the obstacle he placed and asks absolution from the Holy See; if he was the patron of the church or property he loses his right of patronage eo ipso, if he was a cleric (even if he only consented to the usurpation), he loses his benefices, is rendered incapable of receiving others and is to be suspended from exercising his orders, even after absolution and reparation made, if his ordinary thinks fit. These penalties, however, are not incurred by ordinary thieves of church property, nor by city officials who acquire church property for the city but not for themselves.

PRESCRIPTION.—The Church accepts, as regards ecclesiastical property in general, the principles of the civil law in the various countries regarding prescription in the matter of acquiring or losing the ownership. But prescriptive rights do not arise in the case of: (a) what is ordered by natural or positive Divine law, or what cannot be granted except by Apostolic privilege; (b) spiritual rights, for which a layman is incompetent, if there is question of prescription in favor of a layman; (c) the definitive fixed boundaries of ecclesiastical provinces, dioceses, parishes, vicariates Apostolic, prefectures Apostolic, abbeys or prelaties nullius; (d) Mass stipends or obligations; (e) an ecclesiastical benefice without title; (f) the right of visitation and obedience, such that an ecclesiastical person cannot be visited by or is not subject to any prelate; (g) the payment of the cathedralicium. Sacred things in possession of a private individual can be acquired through prescription by a private person, but they must not be used for profane purposes; if, however, they have lost their consecration or blessing they can be used for profane, but not for sordid uses. One ecclesiastical person may acquire a sacred thing from another similar body by prescription, but a private person can thus acquire sacred things only from a private person. Immovable property, and movable valuable property, rights and actions, whether personal or real, belonging to the Holy See may be prescribed in a hundred years; those belonging to other ecclesiastical moral persons in thirty years. The prescriptive right does not arise, however, unless there was good faith not only at the beginning but throughout the required period.

Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, (cf. C. E., XII-493c).—In the General Conventions of 1910 and 1913 the proposal to change the name of this church was defeated. The question, which had been a burning one since about 1890, developed two extreme parties, one desiring the church to be designated as the American Catholic Church (or some equivalent title), while the other desired more clear Protestant designation and affiliation. The change was not proposed directly; it was to be accomplished in the revision of the Prayer Book. Excluding the change of name, a committee on Prayer Book revision was appointed in 1913, among its chief sponsors being those who desired to eliminate everything savoring of Ritualism. This committee, after bringing in recommendations similar to those proposed by Anglicans for the Book of Common Prayer (q. v.), has been continued over the conventions of 1916 and 1919 and final action is promised in the Convention of 1922. The General Convention of 1919 rejected a proposal to prohibit the remarriage of divorced persons.

The Anglican community of the Atonement, a Protestant Episcopal religious community consisting of 2 men and 15 women following the Franciscan rule were received into the Catholic Church 30 October, 1909, and in 1919 the Protestant Episcopal bishop of Delaware, Frederick J. Kinsman, made his submission, these being the two most notable cases in a series of conversions.

The Episcopalian Church has been prominent in its efforts toward church union in recent years. Several cases have occurred of admission of non-Episcopalian ministers to Episcopalian pulpits, and of local "concordats" with dissenters, a notable instance being the tentative arrangement (later abandoned), with the Congregationalists for the admission of ministers of the latter to Episcopal ordination while continuing to minister in the Congregational Church (see CONGREGATIONALISM). In 1922 a quasi-organic union with the Hungarian Reformed Church was effected, the ministers of the latter, without repudiating their existing orders, agreeing to accept Episcopal ordination. Participation by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Congress on Christian Work in Latin America in 1916 (see PROTESTANTISM) was strongly opposed by those who did not desire to see their church committed to a policy of pan-Protestantism, and who considered such a congress an intrusion on Latin America. The Board of Missions, however, voted to participate and five members resigned their connection with the board as a consequence. The leading work of this church along the lines of reunion was the inauguration at the General Convention of 1910 of arrangements preliminary to a World Conference on Faith and Order (see UNION OF CHRISTENDOM), to consider the question of church union.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States consists of sixty-eight dioceses (1922). Home mission work is carried on for the white population, for Indians, negroes (there is now a negro suffragan bishop), Swedes, Japanese, and the deaf mutes in the south and west. A fund of $9,000,000 has been raised as a sustentation fund for the sick and retired clergy.

Foreign missionary work is carried on in Africa, China, Japan, Haiti, Brazil, Cuba and Mexico. They reported in 1916, 463 stations, 346 American missionaries, 247 churches, 346 schools, 14 hospitals, 6 asylums, 17,551 members. In China a union was effected in 1912 with the Anglicans of England and Canada.

The educational system of the Protestant Episcopal church includes 14 theological institutions with 462 students in 1916, and 3 distinctively church colleges, while the non-sectarian Columbia University, Hobart College, Trinity College (Hartford, Conn., not to be confused with the Catholic institution of the same name in Washington, D. C.), and Lehigh University have a loose connection with the church. There are also about 122 academic institutions with 12,000 students, and 261 parochial schools with 14,000 pupils. In 1922 the Protestant Episcopal Church reported in the United States, 8103 churches, 5677 ministers, and 1,104,099 communicants.

THE REFORMED EPISCOPAL CHURCH, an offshoot of the Protestant Episcopal Church, was founded in 1873 by Bishop George Cummins of the latter church, in protest against criticism directed against him for having participated in a communion service in a Presbyterian church. He was joined by several clergymen and a few laymen, all of whom were opposed to the "ritualistic" tendencies of Episcopalianism at the time. In doctrine this sect accepts substantially the Thirty-nine Articles of the Protestant Episcopal Church, but specifically rejects the doctrine that "regeneration is inseparably connected with Baptism"; it considers episcopacy merely as a desirable form of government, not a divine ordinance; it rejects the distinction between clergy and laity, holding that ministers are merely included in the same way as all believers in "a royal priesthood." Since 1905 there has been a decrease of 22 churches, and 23 ministers. In 1921 there were 65 churches, 65 ministers, and 11,806 members (13,022 in 1922).

Protestantism (cf. C. E., XII—495c) will be treated under three heads: 1) theology, or attitude toward creed, faith or doctrine; 2) work; 3) statistics.

I. THEOLOGY.—Protestantism has in recent years tended to become more and more "liberal" in its attitude toward theology, creed, or "creedal statements." Both as cause and as effect the fever for some kind of reunion (see UNION OF CHRISTENDOM), especially prevalent since 1910, brings out clearly that many, if not most, of the sects of Protestantism have already given up, or are willing to give up, belief in revealed truth as the test of a Christian. Most sects, it is true, continue officially to hold a "creed" but their indifferent attitude toward the question of the relation of the individual to the creed may be summed up in various statements made at the preliminary meeting of the World Conference on Faith and Order (Geneva, August, 1920). "There was no idea, when the Nicene Creed was formulated, of requiring the subscription of the laity. . . . I desire that there may be as little inquisition as possible into the opinions and beliefs of private individuals" (Report, p. 63). That the Anglican bishop who uttered these words could reconcile them with his previous statement that "a united church can never come into being or exist without articles of faith," and his subsequent defense of the Nicene Creed as "obligatory upon the Church's teachers" and as the only "basis on which any religion can maintain itself in the long run without becoming a mere theism," indicates a truly puzzling confusion of ideas as to what faith means. Again another Anglican bishop argues along the same lines: "What is the word, creed? . . . It is always the expression of the Christian experience, burning intimate in the very heart, deep down in the soul. . . . It is not a statement. It is unfair to say that a creed is an intellectual statement." Yet he too stands uncompromisingly for the Nicene Creed. In answering him a Presbyterian rejects his distinction, and adds, "it seems incredible to me that spiritual communion in any way depends upon holding the same intellectual statement of truth." While the foregoing opinions are not entirely official utterances on the part of any church, it remains true, however, that the men quoted are representative leaders of Protestant thought, vested with authority to present to the Conference at least to a certain extent, the views and official attitude of their churches. It is only fair to add that it is precisely the question of creed which so far has proved the greatest obstacle to the success of such movements as the World Conference; a delegate may indeed reject a creed as a trammeling, binding, intellect-hampering ball and chain, but the "creedal" and "non-creedal" churches. (i. e. those that hold a creed as necessary and those that reject its necessity respectively), are for all that no nearer union today, and, what is logically more remarkable, the various "non-creedal" sects are equally unable to effect union among themselves, and in each case the true final reason for failure is the insistence upon "creed."

A correct interpretation of this anomaly is the explanation that the churches have practically rejected the necessity of a creed for individual members; but they retain the creed as obligatory on the church and its teachers. In practice this distinction is not of very great value; an attitude of indifferentism pervades the sects today, and the doctrine of exclusive salvation ("Outside the church there is no salvation"), though formerly held by most of them is now practically rejected by the majority. One minister, speaking against the "useless multiplication of churches," sums up very well his ideas on this point: "What a blessing it would be if communicants of churches could rid themselves of the idea that the only true church is the one to which they belong. There is no church that has fully apprehended Christian truth or that mirrors flawlessly the ideals of Jesus Christ. There are no 'Christians only' in the fullest sense of the term. . . . God has not given to any one race, any one nation, any one religion, a monopoly of Truth or elected any particular communion to be the custodian of orthodoxy, not even my own. . . ." Such indifferentists do not perceive how utterly unworthy of God it is to think that He should purposely have failed to make any one church the custodian of His revelation; they fail utterly to realize how hopeless and futile, if their premises be true, it would be to cling to any church, which by their admission has at most only a part of the truth.

II. WORK.—The facts set forth above go far to explain the emphasis on the material rather than the spiritual in foreign mission work. The belief of the individual matters little hence rather is a community approached as a whole with the intention of transforming them without regard to the individuals into a "corporate Christian community." As a Baptist speaking of his own sect, words which are applicable quite generally to Protestants, says, "We share a transfer of emphasis from effort to rescue individual souls from perdition to the endeavor to create Christian communities. . . . [Hence] we have no longer an exclusive or preponderant interest in evangelistic work in the strict sense of the term, but found hospitals, maintain schools, conduct industrial work." Naturally, such works have a certain value, and in most cases the good will of the promoters is also to be presumed; it is, however, a strange anomaly to find among those who at least theoretically still cling to the doctrine of "justification by faith alone" what is practically tantamount to the diametrically opposite, "justification by works alone."

A similar tendency to stress the material side is noticeable also in domestic work, especially in the United States. As significant examples it is sufficient to mention the New Era Movement among the Presbyterians, the Centenary "drive" of the Methodists and the Tercentenary Fund of the Congregationalists, in all of which rather excessive emphasis was laid upon the financial side of religion and its works. Going further than any of the instances cited, the Interchurch World Movement illustrates well the point in question here, while its brief span of life serves to indicate the futility of such movements when not firmly based on spiritual foundations. This movement was launched in December, 1918, as a union of Protestant organizations in their "program of Christian service and the performance of their common task." Not without some opposition it succeeded in eliciting the support of about forty denominational and interdenominational boards and societies. At first ostensibly a co-operative movement of mission boards and societies, it soon set its hand to other works such as education, ministerial relief and pensions, supervision of eleemosynary institutions, and investigation of industrial conditions. Numbering among its sponsors many prominent financial leaders, it set out to acquire a fund of $336,000,000 with which to accomplish its purposes. Within a comparatively short period $180,000,000 had been raised and a vast organization was functioning at a monthly expense of $1,000,000. About a year after its inception, expenses were reduced to $75,000 monthly, when about twenty-two of the denominations co-operating signified their intention to withdraw, while some, notably the Baptists and Presbyterians, had definitely severed connections with the movement. Finally, early in 1921, the organization was forced to close its books and retire from business, in debt to New York banks for large sums advanced,—loans which the various denominations which guaranteed them are gradually paying off.

Many reasons have been suggested as explaining the failure of the movement. From a Catholic point of view, it would seem (and this is the view of most of the Protestant criticisms, of which there were not a few), that the movement represented the crassly material side of Protestantism and died from sheer spiritual inanition. The very just criticisms which many of the sects directed against it, and its final collapse are rather to the credit of the "orthodox" Protestants, although it must be admitted that one of the strongly contributory causes of the failure was the refusal of the "unchurched" to support it with any great financial contributions. They having been counted on to finance the central organization while the denominational contributions were to have been expended proportionately among the denominations themselves.

To sum up the general situation, while the "saving faith" (confidence in one's justification) of the early reformers is rather generally retained, faith as meaning articles of belief to which intellectual assent is to be given receives but slight attention in Protestantism today. The "orthodox" still strive to maintain the traditional doctrines, but actually Protestantism is tending more and more to resolve itself into, or at least to concentrate itself around, the one doctrine of the "Brotherhood of Man," more or less materially interpreted, forgetting that the command on which that doctrine is based is only the second of the Law, the first duty being to love God, and forgetting also that the first and higher duty of love of neighbor calls us to minister to the soul of the individual before we care for his body and his material welfare. The Brotherhood of Man, in other words, means nothing, or very little, unless interpreted in the light of the eternal truths which are essentially unchangeable, and which must forever be centered around the Creation and the Incarnation and all that those truths imply.

Under such conditions as outlined above it would be natural to expect to find a disinclination on the part of Protestants to enter the ministry. Such a state of affairs exists; indeed so noticeable is it, that many churches have sounded a note of alarm. To cite conditions in the United States: in the National Congregational Council of 1917 the president of the Chicago Seminary stated that the decrease in the number of theological students had progressed to such an extent that the church was facing the most serious crisis since the Civil War. There has been a steady decline also in the enrollment of Episcopalian, Presbyterian and Baptist theological students. In the latter sect in 1920, 189 ministers died, while only 245 were ordained, leaving a gain of only 56, far too few to provide for the demands of a growing church. The general result is that in 1920, according to a report made for the Federal Council of Churches, there were 40,000 Protestant pulpits without pastors; in the South alone there were said to be 3000 Baptist, 1800 Methodist, 1000 Episcopalian, and 1000 Presbyterian churches without leaders. In 1921, according to a writer in the "Independent" (20 August, 1921) 5000 Protestant pulpits became vacant; 5000 more are expected to become vacant in 1922; yet there were only 1600 seminary graduates in 1921, with prospects of even less in the year following. Moreover, it is significant that the writer just referred to (a Protestant) names as the outstanding causes for the present Protestant crisis, and for what he terms the failing influence of Protestantism in the last generation (1) bad theology (2) bad Christianity (3) bad Protestantism.

United States Government statistics for ministers for the period 1890 to 1916 are as follows: number of Protestant ministers in the United States in 1890, 101,870; in 1906, 149,653; in 1916, 171,509. The rate of gain from 1890 to 1906 was somewhat less than 3% per year; for the following ten years it was less than 1.5%, or about one-half the former rate.

In England and Wales conditions are quite similar: in 1909 there were 10,125 dissenting clergymen, and 55,476 "local and lay preachers." In 1915 there were 10,863 of the former and 54,449 of the latter, showing a net loss of 289 for the period. In 1901 there were 25,235 Anglican clergymen; in 1918 there were reported only 19,800 (with the possibility that there may have been a few more on the non-active list). It is true that the war had a serious effect in this period, but nevertheless we should expect an increase over the figures of seventeen years before, if the churches were in a healthy condition.

Contrasting with its rather moribund state from the point of view of theology, Protestantism has of late been making added efforts to penetrate the Catholic countries of Europe and South America through the medium of material resources. France, Belgium, Italy, Poland, and other countries, after the war, have become the center of the proselyting efforts of the Protestants; and under the guise of "humanitarian aid" they have sought to inject the virus of religious division among those peoples. Funds contributed to by American Catholics as well as Protestants have been used to further this propaganda, not directly always, but in many instances none the less effectively. In Italy and in Rome itself the proselyting activities were especially evident until the Holy Father finally called upon the Knights of Columbus and the Paulists of America to help counteract the propaganda. The Holy Office (5 November, 1920), issued a letter to the Bishops of the Church, warning them of the activities of the Y. M. C. A. (q. v.) and similar organizations, and indicating the dangers to the Catholic faith which lurked in accepting favors from their hands. The Holy Office did not condemn the "applied Christianity" of the associations. The educational and recreational features are to be commended; but the Protestant rationalism and indifference of the promoters exact a terrible toll in return. That this is really the purpose of the Y. M. C. A. and other similar societies, particularly in their European work appears from their own words, according to the letter of the Holy Office which bases the following statement on a Y. M. C. A. pamphlet published in Rome ("che cosa è la Y. M. C. A.: ciò che si propone, etc."): "This society, indeed, makes profession of a sincere love for young people, as if it had no dearer aim than to give them facilities for corporal and mental development; but at the same time it destroys their faith and declares that it proposes to purify it, and to impart a more perfect knowledge of life, 'above and apart from any religious system'."

In the Western hemisphere Protestant propaganda has been pushed strongly in Latin America, although much proselytism has also been attempted among Catholic immigrants in the United States. The opening of the Panama Canal, various Pan-American meetings, the Panama Pacific exposition, and the commercial prospects of trade with South American countries had for years turned attention to Latin America. The sects which have in point of fact never met with any striking success in that field, now turned their attention thither. In the Edinburgh World Missionary Conference of 1910 the delegates had practically been told, "Hands off," when the question of South America was raised, the Anglican and German delegates particularly decrying any attempt to proselyte among the Latin-American Catholics. The consensus of opinion was that missionary efforts should be expended in non-Christian countries. The American delegates, not satisfied with such an attitude, soon after their return conceived the idea of a union congress to consider the possibilities, methods, and means, of a campaign "to win Latin America to Christ" (sic). As a consequence the "Congress on Christian Work in Latin America" was arranged for, to consist of a union meeting of delegates from various churches. The proposal was generally hailed with approval by the different sects. The Missionary Society of the Protestant Episcopal Church voted to participate, contrary to instructions from the General Convention of the church. Recognizing the true nature of the movement, three bishops and several of the clergy (including Dr. Manning, who was later made a bishop), resigned in protest from the Board in 1915, one bishop declaring that the conference was a direct attack of one part of Christendom on another, and that in such an affront to Roman Catholics he would not take part. Meanwhile, after long discussion at the preliminary meetings, the following invitation was sent to various Catholic leaders, in the full knowledge, of course, that no Catholic would accept such a call from such a source: "All communions or organizations which accept Jesus Christ as Divine Saviour and Lord, and the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments as the Revealed Word of God, and whose purpose is to make the will of Christ prevail in Latin America, are cordially invited to participate in the Panama Congress, and will be heartily welcomed."

The congress met in Panama 10-20 February, 1916, and later issued in three volumes the reports and discussions of the commissions and meetings. The chief aim seemed to be to present to the Latin Americans a united front, a "catholic Protestant" church as it were, no longer divided. Accordingly a quasi-contract was entered into distributing exclusive territory to the various sects. The reports and discussions with very few exceptions were a rehashing of the old, often vile, and many times refuted calumnies hurled at the Church since Luther's revolt; they may be summed up in the statement of one of the delegates (vol. I, p. 350), "The Roman Church deserves warfare." The congress was attended by delegates from the following churches: Adventist, Baptist, Christian, Congregational, Disciples, Friends, Lutheran, Methodist, Moravian, Presbyterian, Protestant Episcopal, Reformed Church in America, and United Brethren; by delegates from various interdenominational societies and by some delegates from Canada and Great Britain (not Anglicans). Continuation conferences were arranged for various Latin American cities; but since then no striking results have been reported.

III. STATISTICS.—In compiling statistics on the number of Protestants in various countries and in the world, much confusion has resulted from a failure to define terms and to follow the definitions consistently. Protestants themselves usually list only "communicants" when enumerating the members of their churches. This term has, naturally, different meanings in different sects, but in general it signifies those who are in full union with their church, who are fully affiliated and enrolled, and who are entitled to full participation in the various exercises of worship. Keeping this definition in mind, statistics show that there are considerably less than 100,000,000 Protestant communicants in the world today (1922); the true figure is possibly very close to 90,000,000. However, these Protestant communicants represent a much larger Protestant "constituency," among whom should be included, besides the communicants, all those of Protestant connection: children (not considered as members by most sects), who are brought up under Protestant influence and who in many cases will later on "join the church"; occasional church-goers; and finally that vast army of quasi-unbelievers who although not affiliated with any church, nor likely to be, are by their training, education, and prejudices thoroughly Protestant or at least anti-Roman. It is easy to understand that in this last category are necessarily included many indifferentists and rationalists, who can only in a very broad sense be classed as Christians. The Protestant constituency of the world (communicants and connections) numbers about 175,000,000. For purposes of comparison it may be stated here that there are in the world about 350,000,000 Catholics, united under the Pope of Rome. Discounting those who have ceased to be practical Catholics the membership is close to 325,000,000. These estimates are arrived at from a study of the religious statistics of all countries of the world as presented by the Statesman's Year Book for 1921.

The actual distribution of the Protestants of the world has not changed much in recent decades; in all Latin America there are about 100,000 communicants (about 300,000 constituents); in Catholic Europe (France, Italy, Luxembourg, Ireland, Austria, Poland, Portugal, Spain, and Czechoslovakia) there are about 1,000,000 Protestant communicants (about 4,000,000 constituents), of whom about one-half are in Poland, the number in most of these countries being entirely negligible. In France, which excepting Czechoslovakia, is the only other Catholic country possessing an appreciable Protestant population (about 1,000,000 constituents), the effect of the Separation Law of 1905 and of the war has been almost disastrous to Protestantism, which is now admittedly in a struggling condition. In Protestant Germany, Protestantism, already before the war attacked by the canker of rationalism, has also received a decided setback through the separation of church and state, although it is still (1922) impossible to gauge definitely the results of this clause of the constitution. In Czechoslovakia Protestantism has made some gains recently through a schism resultant upon the formation of the new Government. However, the gains were greatly exaggerated and Czechoslovakia must be numbered among the predominantly Catholic countries, containing in 1921 about 11,675,000 Catholics and 900,000 Protestants (constituents).

The United States numbers among its inhabitants 28,111,553 Protestant communicants (according to a secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, 1922), divided among about 200 sects. The Catholics number about 20,000,000. As indicated above, however, it would be a mistake to class this country immediately (as some do), on the strength of these figures, as non-Christian, for many of the other 60,000,000 inhabitants are rightfully included in the Protestant constituency, this totaling probably about 40,000,000 (Year Book of the Churches, 1920, p. 196) although Dr. Watson, the Washington secretary of the Federal Council, claims nearly 75,000,000 in 1922. This latter figure is evidently too high. The number of sects increased from 186 in 1906 to 200 in 1916 (about 193 in 1922), the net gain of fourteen in the decade being due to a loss of seventeen and an addition of thirty-one denominations. (For further information on points touched on in this article see especially articles on various sects and various countries.)

GERALD SHAUGHNESSY.

Providence, DIOCESE OF (PROVIDENTIENSIS, of C. E., XII—509c), is co-extensive with the State of Rhode Island. In March, 1915, at the request of Bishop Harkins, the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Thomas F. Doran, vicar general of the diocese, was appointed auxiliary bishop. On 27 April, 1915, he was consecrated titular Bishop of Halicarnassus. He died 3 Jan., 1916, after a short illness. On 4 July, 1917, Rev. Denis M. Lowney, one of the vicars general of the diocese, was appointed auxiliary bishop, and consecrated 23 October following. He died 13 Aug., 1918, after having served less than a year, and was succeeded by the present administrator, the Rt. Rev. William A. Hickey, who was appointed coadjutor bishop with the right of succession, 16 Jan., 1919. Born at Worcester, Mass., 13 May, 1869, ordained at Boston, 22 Dec., 1893, he succeeded Bishop Harkins on the death of the latter, 25 May, 1921.

On 25 April, 1912, the Rev. Austin Dowling, rector of the cathedral, was consecrated Bishop of Des Moines at Sts. Peter and Paul's Cathedral, Providence. On 29 Oct., 1916, Most Rev. John Bonzano dedicated St. Ann's School at Providence. Providence College was incorporated, 14 Feb., 1917, and Bishop Hickey delivered the opening address, 18 Sept., 1919. In 1920 a drive was inaugurated to pay off the debt on the college, the amount realized being $330,000. In January, 1920, the National Council of Catholic Men was organized. This was the first diocesan body in the United States to complete its organization. During the war 7 priests of the diocese enlisted as chaplains, 11,646 men enlisted in the Army and Navy, 281 were killed or died of wounds or disease, 192 were wounded. The Catholics of the diocese number about 275,000, of whom 151,000 are Irish, 65,000 French, 37,000 Italians, 10,500 Poles, 10,100 Portuguese, 1100 Syrians, 1000 Lithuanians. Parishes and schools have been founded for the Catholic foreigners in the various cities and towns of the diocese and many of them are in charge of priests of their own nationality. The Armenians are periodically served by an Armenian priest who hears their confessions and exhorts them to attend the church for English-speaking Catholics. There has been an extensive post-war development in parochial school building. One school has already been built, two are in actual process of construction, while plans for at least five more are under consideration.

According to the statistics of 1922, the parish contains: 96 parishes, 21 missions, 2 stations, 100 churches, 2 monasteries and 4 convents for men, 49 convents for women, 218 secular priests, 54 regulars, 38 lay brothers, 911 Sisters, 48 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries in other dioceses. The educational institutions are: 1 college, 14 teachers, 256 students; 8 high schools, 40 teachers, 692 students (185 boys, 507 girls); 7 academies, 91 teachers, 1614 students (1189 boys, 425 girls); 46 elementary schools, 547 teachers, 21,622 pupils; 2 industrial schools, 5 teachers, 118 pupils. The schools are not supported by the Government. The missionary works are the Catholic Missionary Society and the Providence Apostolate. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 6 homes, 2 asylums, 2 hospitals, 6 day nurseries. All the public institutions admit the ministry of priests. Some of the institutions receive appropriations from the state. Organizations among the clergy are the Pia Unio Precum and Clergy Fund Society. The following associations exist among the laity: National Catholic Council of Men, National Catholic Council of Women, Queens' Daughters, Daughters of Isabella. A Catholic periodical called the "Providence Visitor" is published in the diocese.

Providence, DIVINE, CONGREGATIONS OF. See DIVINE PROVIDENCE, SISTERS OF.

Providence, HOUSE OF. See JOSEPH BENEDICT COTTOLONGO, BLESSED.

Providence, SISTERS OF (St. Mary-of-the-Woods; cf. C. E., XII—507d).—The Sisters take simple vows. The postulanship of six months is followed by a novitiate of two years, at the end of which time vows are taken. A year of second novitiate precedes the final and perpetual vows. The administrative faculty of the congregation is an elective body comprising a superior general and five assistants, a secretary, and a general chapter. In a private audience given in 1913 to the superior general, Mother M. Cleophas, Pope Pius X granted the privilege of Perpetual Exposition of the Blessed Sacrament, for which a special chapel connecting with the conventual church has been built at the mother-house. The cause of beatification of Mother Theodore (d. 1856) has been taken up at Rome by the Sacred Congregation. The Sisters conduct parochial schools and academies in the Archdioceses of Baltimore, Boston, and Chicago, and the dioceses of Indianapolis, Fort Wayne, and Peoria, also a college at St. Mary-of-the-Woods, four miles from Terre Haute, Indiana. In 1920 they opened a house in East Ho-nan, China, being the first American sisterhood to take up work in the foreign missions. Statistics for 1921 are: 1442 professed Sisters, 106 novices, 30 postulants, 60 parochial schools, 15 academies, 1 college, 1 orphanage, 2 day nurseries; 30,000 children.

Provincial Councils.—Provincial councils are to be held at least every twentieth year. Bishops who are not subject to a metropolitan, abbots or prelates nullius, archbishops without suffragans, must elect, after obtaining Apostolic approval, to attach themselves to a neighboring metropolitan whose provincial councils they will assist at and be bound by. The metropolitan should summon the bishops of his province at least every five years to meet and consult about religious conditions and prepare for the next council. Among those who should be invited to and should attend provincial councils are prefects apostolic, cathedral chapters or diocesan consultors, who are to be represented by two of their members selected by their college, also superiors, of monastic congregations and higher exempt clerical superiors residing in the province; of these only the prefects apostolic have a deliberative vote. No penalties are mentioned in the Code for a violation of the obligation to attend the councils. On the conclusion of the council the president is to forward the acts and decrees to the Holy See for examination by the Holy Congregation of the Council; they are not to be promulgated until approbation has been given. After promulgation, local ordinaries cannot dispense from the decrees unless for just cause in particular instances. In places subject to the Congregation of Propaganda the regulations concerning provincial councils should be observed, as far as possible allowing for altered circumstances; no time for holding these councils, however, is laid down, but their acts and decrees are to be submitted to Propaganda and not to the Congregation of the Council.

Provision, CANONICAL (cf. C. E., XII—516a).—No one who has been elected, presented or nominated for any office, benefice, or dignity may take possession of it or interfere with its government or administration, before presenting his apostolic letters to the proper authorities. If he violates this canon, he becomes by the very fact incapable of acquiring the office, benefice, or dignity, and is to be suitably punished by the ordinary and compelled by spiritual penalties, even deposition if necessary, to give it up without delay. Chapters, communities, and others who officially admit such a party before he has presented his letters are by the very fact suspended from the right of electing, nominating or presenting till it pleases the Holy See to revoke the suspension. Formerly, in virtue of the Constitution "Romanus Pontifex," the dignitaries and canons of the cathedral admitting a prelate under such circumstances incurred specially reserved excommunication.

Przemysl, DIOCESE OF, OF THE LATIN RITE (PREMISLIENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—532c), suffragan of Lwow (Lemberg), in Galicia, formerly an Austrian province, which was included in the new Republic of Poland at the division of Austria-Hungary. The present bishop is Mgr. Joseph Sebastian Pelczar, born at Korczyn, 17 January, 1842, elected titular bishop of Miletopolis 20 February, 1899, transferred 17 December, 1900, and enthroned 13 January, 1901, succeeding Mgr. Solecki, deceased, as Bishop of Przemyśl. His auxiliary is Rt. Rev. Charles Joseph Fischer, born in Jasło, 1847, elected titular bishop of Mallus 15 April, 1901. During the war the Diocese of Przemyśl was invaded by the Russians, Germans, Austro-Hungarians and Ukrainian rebels. The city was captured by the Russians in March, 1915, and many towns and villages were burned, also about 100 churches of the Latin Rite. About 100 diocesan priests were chaplains in the Austrian (later Polish) army, six of whom were captured by the Russians. Many priests, Sisters and Polish laywomen worked in hospitals, way-stations and other places to relieve the misery of the soldiers, prisoners, the poor and the many orphans. In 1921 the diocese contained 345 parishes, 1,200,000 Latin Catholics, 760,000 Uniat Catholics (Greek Ruthenian), 200,000 non-Catholics (mostly Jews), 345 parishes, 30 convents and monasteries for men, 135 for women, 699 secular and 150 regular priests, 1 upper seminary, 81 seminarians, 1 lower seminary, many orphanages and hospitals. The schools are supported and directed by the Government and religion is taught in all schools by priests appointed by the bishop and pensioned by the government. There are three associations among the clergy and many and varied ones in each parish for the laity. An official paper is published by the bishop.

Przemyśl, Sambor and Sanok, DIOCESE OF, of the Greek Uniat Rite, using the Ruthenian language, in Western Galicia, Poland, suffragan of Lwów (Lemberg). This diocese includes the territory of the Latin diocese of the same name and also that of the Latin diocese of Tarnów. The present bishop is Mgr. Josaphat Joseph Kocylowsky, born in Pakosziwka in 1876, ordained in 1907, elected 29 January, 1917, to succeed Mgr. Czechowicz, deceased. In 1915 the diocese contained 1,252,492 Greek Catholics, 819 secular priests, of whom 685 are married, 140 widowers and 28 celibates, 36 regular priests, 697 parishes and 1374 churches or chapels.

Psichari, ERNEST, author and soldier, b. 27 September, 1883, d. 22 August, 1914, the son of Jean Psichari, a professor at the Ecole des Hautes Etudes, by his wife Noëmi Renan, daughter of the famous sceptic. M. Psichari, being a member of the Orthodox Greek Church, Ernest was baptised according to the Greek Rite, but thenceforth religion formed no part in his life. At the lycées Henri IV and Condorcet, he displayed brilliant mental gifts and a poetical temperament, writing verses in the manner of Verlaine. In 1902 Psichari left Paris to spend a year of military service in a provincial garrison. At the end of the year he returned to Paris to take up his studies, but in 1904 he enlisted in the 51st Regiment of the line and in 1906 was sent to Africa. In 1907 he returned to France, was promoted sub-lieutenant in 1909 and at once set out for Mauretania, French West Africa. His first book "Terres de Soleil et de Sommeil" was followed by "L'Appel des Armes" (written in Mauretania, 1910-1912), which is an apology for the military life and in which there is seen the author's groping for faith. Close after follows "Le Voyage du Centurion" which is autobiographical, although told in the third person. This book tells of a French soldier in Africa searching for faith and finding it. Psichari left Africa in 1912 and was stationed at Cherbourg where although he read a great deal concerning the Faith, confession still seemed a stumbling block. On 4 February, 1913, the grandson of Renan read his profession of faith after which he went to confession and received absolution. He was confirmed 8 February, taking the name of Paul in reparation for Renan's treatment of the Apostolic. After a "year of prayer" he decided to become a Dominican. He was still at Cherbourg when war was declared and on the second day of mobilization set out for the battle front. During those first days of surprise and defeat Lieutenant Psichari was an inspiration to his men and after twelve hours of terrific fighting at St. Vincent-Rossignol in Belgium, he fell, shot in the temple, and was found with his rosary wound about his wrist and on his lips the smile of a great peace.

SAMUEL FOWLE TELFAIR, JR.

Psychoanalysis (Gr. Ψυχή, ἀνάλυσις), means a disclosing of the mental content, the latter being taken in its widest extent as embracing both the conscious as well as the unconscious psychic processes. It began as a therapeutic treatment of certain neurotic diseases, but quickly developed into a general science of the unconscious which aims at a complete reorientation of human life and a far-reaching revaluation of its values. In its narrower aspects, it may be defined as a therapeutic procedure designed for the cure of nervous disorders which it effects by means of a mental analysis revealing and removing the underlying psychic causes that are at the bottom of these abnormal conditions in its larger acceptation, it may be described as the investigation of the content and the workings of the unconscious mind and of the relation between the unconscious and the conscious in all manifestations of human life. Taken in this broad sense, psychoanalysis claims intimate contacts with all the phenomena of civilization and pretends to furnish a new basis for human activities in art, education, morality and religion. "In the few years of its existence," writes Dr. André Tridon, "psychoanalysis has made a deep impression on all the mental sciences and has especially revolutionized psychology, ethics and psychiatry. Its terminology, at first forbidding, has enriched the language with entirely new expressions, without which the cultured would find themselves helpless in psychological discussions. It has supplied not only physicians, but artists, thinkers, sociologists, educators, and critics with a new point of view. It offers to the average man and woman a new rational code of behavior based on science instead of faith." Dr. Isador H. Coriat speaks in the same strain: "Psychoanalysis is beginning to found a new ethics as well as a new psychology, a new neurology and a new school of literary criticism." This sweeping claim is based on the alleged discovery, made by the psychoanalysts, that the differences between the content of the unconscious of the abnormal and of the normal are extremely slight and that consequently the laws governing pathological conditions of the mind may be extended to its healthy states. The highest and the lowest are thus brought together and explained by the same causes. Whatever there is most exalted in man can be adequately understood as a transfiguration of the vilest animal instincts. Thus psychoanalysis would have us believe. "For," declares Miss Beatrice M. Hinkle in her introduction to Dr. C. G. Jung's notorious "Psychology of the Unconscious," "this theory has so widened its scope that its application has now extended beyond a particular group of pathological states. It has in fact led to a new evaluation of the whole conduct of human life; a new comprehension has developed which explains those things that formerly were unexplained, and there is offered an understanding not only of a neurosis and the phenomena of conduct but the product of the mind as expressed in myths and religions." The new world-view that grows out of psychoanalysis, it may easily be surmised, follows the evolutionary and materialistic trend of modern psychology and is very much at pains to establish man's biological relationship to animal life. It strips man of everything that constitutes his unique dignity.

HISTORY.—Psychoanalysis is of recent date. Though its antecedents may be traced back to the great French students of mental disturbances, notably Dr. J. M. Charcot of the Salpêtrière, its origin as a distinct method is associated with the name of Dr. Sigmund Freud of Vienna, who formulated his theory and gave it to the public for the first time in 1895. He departed from previously adopted methods of treating nervous troubles by rejecting hypnotism and hypnotic suggestion as factors in the cure and substituting for them his own newly developed method of mental analysis. To this he was led by the discovery of an older colleague, Dr. Breuer, who while treating a case of hysteria made the observation that the patient improved in the degree in which she disclosed her life history. Freud saw the deeper significance of this fact. It suggested to him that the first step towards a cure of the neurosis is the unburdening of the mind which is oppressed by some unpleasant emotional experience and cannot regain its equilibrium until it has been relieved of the troublesome idea. But in some instances it was difficult to gain access to the hidden memories and an elaborate technique had to be developed to reach down into the depths of the mind. This technique Dr. Freud called psychoanalysis.

Though first received with distrust, it gradually won its way into the medical world and at present enjoys considerable popularity. In 1908 it was introduced to the scientists of America and since has gained in vogue. The literature of psychoanalysis is steadily growing and has already reached bewildering proportions. Divergences of opinion and method have sprung up among the followers of Dr. Freud, and different schools have arisen, but this is inevitable in a new science that is not yet entirely sure of its ground. A certain body of fundamental tenets, however, is universally accepted by the advocates of psychoanalysis.

THE ETIOLOGY OF NEUROSIS.—The characteristic assumption of psychoanalysis is that psychoneurotic symptoms are due to unfulfilled desires of unrecognized tendencies that have been repressed into the unconscious and now are entirely forgotten in their original form. Though repressed, they are not obliterated and struggle to get expression. If this psychic tension finds no outlet through legitimate channels, it will express itself in unethical behavior or in the form of psychoneuroses. The neurosis betrays the existence of a dynamic idea in the unconscious which, though it cannot emerge into consciousness, may in some way influence emotional attitudes and produce certain motor impulses. As Dr. Freud says: "Neurotics suffer from reminiscences." The paradoxical phase of the matter is that the memories that cause the disturbance are forgotten. Unpleasant forgotten memories of a strong affective nature are the roots of the neurotic symptoms. These memories are also referred to as strangled emotions.

If these concealed memories are brought back into consciousness they lose their evil power, the pent-up emotion is discharged and the symptoms disappear. The way to recovery then would seem easy. But a great difficulty confronts the physician, because since these memories have dropped out of the field of consciousness they cannot be recalled at will. The forgetting, moreover, in these cases is not a mere passive process, it is rather an actual repression, which enhances the difficulty of discovery. Only by the subtle methods of psychoanalysis can the hidden springs be unearthed. For a proper understanding of the technique employed in the search after the disturbing emotions, a previous knowledge of Freud's theory of the unconscious is indispensable. This theory is not original with Freud, but has been taken from modern psychology, though Freud has added to it a few touches of his own, notably the radical contention that the unconscious is dominated by the sexual instinct.

STRUCTURE OF THE MIND.—The mind is the battleground of conflicting forces and tendencies. Its content is divided into the conscious and the unconscious. To the former belong those experiences which are actually in the focus of attention or that may easily be recalled (foreconscious). The latter comprises such experiences that have been utterly forgotten and that cannot be brought back to our knowledge by the ordinary processes of introspection. It is, moreover, the realm of primitive instincts, selfish and antisocial tendencies, elemental urges, brutal impulses and repressed desires. The unconscious knows no higher moral law, it seeks only self-gratification and is ruled by the pleasure principle. Civilization and social life put a curb on those primitive egocentric impulses and require of the individual to hold them in check. From early childhood days this repression goes on, and thus man becomes adjusted to his social environment. But the primitive cravings remain ready to break through the barriers that have been erected against them.

Consciousness seeks adaptation to the social requirements and represses whatever would lead to conflicts with the outer world. It is governed by the reality principle. In the average human being the adjustment to the demands of civilization, though beset with difficulties, is accomplished without any fatal consequences to physical and mental health. Some types, however, are unequal to the formidable task; they break down under the strain and morbid states result which manifest themselves by emotional instability, unreasonable irritability, violent antipathies and other abnormalities.

The unconscious is dynamic and continually strives for expression. It seeks to break into consciousness, but is prevented from doing so by an inhibitive power that stands guard at the threshold of consciousness and repels these outlawed desires unless they assume a guise that will make them acceptable to our socialized consciousness. This inhibitive power is called the censor and represents the restraining force of society. By disguising itself the unconscious frequently determines our actions which we think have been performed from motives that are altogether different from the real ones. "Too much emphasis," says Dr. Wilfrid Lay, "cannot be placed on the fact that the real causes of what we do in our acts from hour to hour are hidden from us and that the majority of assigned reasons are mere pretexts, the real motives being in the unconscious, and therefore absolutely inaccessible to us."

THE COMPLEX.—Into the unconscious we repress such wishes that shock our socialized consciousness and that have attached to them an unpleasant emotional tone. Not always, however is the repression successful. The unwelcome wish may form in the unconscious a complex that will eventually disturb the emotional and mental equilibrium. The repression it must be understood, is not a deliberate act, but the result of the counteracting activity of another interest. "This unwitting repression," writes R. H. Hingley, "is the activity on which the whole psychoanalytic theory is built." The complex thus formed exerts a bias on the whole trend of the individual life and starts a series of impulsive activities that are unrelated to the rest of the mental life and resemble the phenomena of dissociation. From this source arise distressing phobias, annoying amnesias, dislikes, tics, compulsion neuroses, anxiety neuroses, paralysis and hysteria. The complex may be defined as a group of unconscious ideas, or rather a group of ideas in the unconscious, which, having been subjected to repression, continue to have an independent existence and growth. Since the complex is unknown the patient cannot account for his trouble and is utterly helpless. Psychoanalysis comes to his rescue, for its purpose is to set free the unconscious with a view to the discovery and comprehension of the patient's buried complexes and to reintegrate and reharmonize his mental life.

A complex greatly decreases efficiency and tends to make life miserable. It induces obsessions and inhibitions of various kinds and consequently becomes a serious handicap. Being progressive it leads from one inability to another. This expansion of the area of the complex is graphically described by Dr. W. Lay, who says: "A complex being repressed into the unconscious on account of the painful feelings connected with it, at once begins in the unconscious to associate with itself a number of other ideas, all of which take on the unpleasant quality. These ideas, therefore, are prevented by this acquired unpleasantness from coming into consciousness. The person in whose mind these complexes are forming will not, without effort, be able to remember these ideas when he wants them. The complexes will detach from the foreground, where are stored the ideas which are subject to voluntary recall, one person's name, another person's address, another's occupation, and drag them down towards the unconscious, where they will nevermore be subject to his will. It is thus seen that, when looked at from the under side,—as it were from the point of view of the unconscious,—there must be complexes forming down there from the time of our earliest infancy. The complexes continue to develop and attach more and more ideas to themselves until finally our minds, even those of us who are completely normal, are made up of an overwhelming majority of forgotten or repressed matter, all of it available for the purpose of feeding the complexes, and none of it of any use to ourselves. Only the fullest human lives can prevent this formation of a sodden mass of complexes in the unconscious of every one of us."

Since according to Freud, all mental conflicts are of a sexual nature and arise out of suppressed sexual experiences, it follows that in his view every complex must cluster around a sex idea. Where the sex life takes a normal course, no complex can form and no neurotic disturbances occur. He explicitly states: "In a normal sexual life no neurosis is possible." This dictum has been amended by Dr. A. A. Brill, one of his disciples, and cast into this more acceptable form: "We can lay it down as a fundamental that if a person's love-life is adequately adjusted, his adjustment to life generally is normal."

THE PSYCHOANALYTIC TREATMENT.—In order to cure neurosis resulting from unfulfilled wishes, it is necessary to get at the hidden desire that has been thwarted and repressed and that seeks compensation in the neurotic symptoms which afford a morbid gratification. This presents great difficulties; for what has been purposely forgotten is buried much deeper than what merely slips from our memory. The difficulty is accentuated when the fatal emotional shock dates back to early childhood, as is frequently the case. Actual and exceedingly clever resistance both from the unconscious as from the patient is encountered in the process of discovery. For strange to say, the patient clings to his symptoms and cherishes them. "The time required to cure a patient," writes Dr. A. A. Brill, "is directly proportional to the degree in which he is morbidly benefited by his neurosis. The patient dreads the disclosure and offers opposition rather than assistance. Hence Dr. Freud complains: "When we undertake to cure a patient, to free him from the symptoms of his malady, he confronts us with a vigorous, tenacious resistance that lasts during the whole time of the treatment."

Besides, the disguise which the unconscious urge has assumed must be penetrated. These assumed disguises, to which our suppressed cravings resort to elude the censor, are called symbols. They are meant to deceive the patient as well as everybody else and bear no recognizable resemblance to the reality which they cover. "Thus, for example," writes Dr. Lay, "the fear of crossing open places symbolizes a fear of quite a different sort which is in the unconscious, and never appears above the threshold because too terrible to be faced consciously." In fact, hate may mask love, fear may stand for desire. This symbolism renders the discovery of the real cause extremely difficult. Only after long and painstaking work will the analyst be able to reach down into the hidden depths of the individual and drag into the light the underlying motives and determinants of his symptoms and attitudes.

In order to dig up the buried complex the patient's life history is carefully studied, his little mannerisms are analyzed, he is encouraged to cultivate a passive attitude and to speak freely whatever may come to his mind. Forgotten names or seemingly trivial slips of speech point to the offending complex who by his clever tricks thus defeats his own purpose. Of great assistance is the word-association method by which the patient is made to betray the concealed wish through his reactions to a list of selected words.

This process of investigation simultaneously constitutes the cure; for, in its course the existing resistance is overcome, the disturbing experience relived in all its emotional intensity or, as the psychoanalysts inelegantly say, abreacted, and the psychic tension released. This process by which the mind is purged and the complex dissolved and reintegrated with the normal mental life is designated as the cathartic method. During the treatment a stage occurs where the patient transfers to the analyst the emotional attitude which was at the root of his trouble. This process is of a very delicate nature and calls for tactful and cautious handling.

The cure is not complete and permanent until the introverted energy, liberated by the destruction of the complex, is sublimated, that is, turned into channels of social activity and diverted to useful purposes. A dangerous urge may in this fashion not only be rendered harmless, but converted into a power for good. "The term sublimation," Dr. I. Coriat explains, "was first introduced by Freud and was borrowed from the terminology of chemistry. Literally, it means the act of refining and purifying or freeing from baser qualities. The process of such sublimation in psychoanalysis is an unconscious one, that is, it takes place without the subject's knowledge. It is the end result of psychoanalysis, since no patient can be said to have been cured, until he has successfully sublimated. Sublimation may be defined as the unconscious conducting of the repressed emotions to a higher, less objectionable and more useful goal. It is the capacity for replacement or exchange of the original (repressed) aim for a secondary social, religious, scientific or artistic aim. It is really a transference of basic instincts to other interests." According to Freud, who is quite frank and outspoken in this matter, sublimation is the directing of sexual cravings toward other aims of a non-sexual nature. In his view also the sexual impulse is the driving force behind civilization. "Nay," he says, "psychoanalysis claims that these same sexual impulses have made contributions whose value cannot be overestimated to the highest cultural, artistic and social achievements of the human mind." Over the extent of the part played by the sex factor in human life a split has occurred in the ranks of the psychoanalysts, some of whom repudiate the extreme views propounded by Freud on this subject. Nevertheless, even those who do not go to the length of Freud's position, make exaggerated concessions to his theory.

This overemphasis of sex is one of the most loathsome aspects of the psychoanalytic theory. Under its irreverent touch everything becomes slimy and reminiscent of the ooze and murk in which the repulsive monsters of the deep disport themselves. Every human instinct revolts against this desecration of things that are held sacred by our race. Spontaneously vehement indignation is aroused at the blunt statement of Dr. A. A. Brill, that "Every activity or vocation not directed to sex in the broadest sense, no matter under what guise, is a form of sublimation." By its doctrine of sublimation, psychoanalysis has gone further than any other theory in degrading man. It falls as a ruinous blight upon human ideals. It takes the glamor out of life and leaves it like a faded and dead flower. Where we were wont to see high idealism, lofty inspiration, splendid consecration, pure devotion to duty and magnificent heroism, there, according to this vile interpretation of human nature, after all is nothing but a disguised manifestation of the sex urge. Only a foul and diseased imagination would be willing to follow the tortuous paths and nasty byways into which a detailed exposition of this theory would of necessity lead us. We sum up the case in the words of Mr. R. H. Hingley, who writes: "Actors, ministers, surgeons, physicians, artists, poets, may all give their reasons for the vocations they have accepted. But these reasons will be very different from those crude primitive tendencies which psychoanalysis claims to be the motive power of their various activities. These tendencies are indignantly denied and wrathfully repudiated. They link up the finest and noblest achievements of human nature to its basest and most degraded forms. "At the bottom of every human activity, however, fair and exalted it may seem, there lies something sinister, something perverse. At the core of every flower of life we find curled up the hideous cankerworm of sex. That is what psychoanalysis would make of life."

DREAMS.—The dream occupies a very important position in psychoanalysis. For the diagnosis of the morbid condition it is of incalculable value.

More than any of the previously mentioned indications it helps to disclose the hidden complex. In the dream the unconscious is particularly active and the ordinary inhibitions of the conscious are very much relaxed. The dream, therefore, is the key to the storehouse of the unconscious and opens up windows into the deepest and most remote recesses of the mind. It took Dr. Freud some time to recognize and fully appreciate the rôle of the dream. Of the gradual development of this understanding Dr. A. A. Brill tells us: "At first Freud paid no more attention to the dreams which his patients narrated than any other intelligent man of the time. But gradually as he listened to them he began to see that they must have some place in the vital economy of the mind, for everything in the physical or mental spheres must have a function. In time he was convinced that the dream is not a mere jumble, a senseless mechanism, but that it represents frequently in symbolic form the person's inmost thoughts and desires, that it represents a hidden wish. He thus developed his monumental work, the greatest in the century, in my opinion, 'The Interpretation of Dreams.' He found that the dream offered the best access, that it was the via regia as he put it, to the unconscious; that it was of tremendous help not only in the treatment, but also in the diagnosis."

The cornerstone of Freud's theory of dreams is the hypothesis that all dreams are the fulfilment of a wish, especially of such wishes which we would disown and indignantly repudiate in our waking hours. The dream in this way answers a twofold biological function, it protects sleep against interruption through the unsatisfied desire and affords a fictitious gratification to repressed cravings. Freud expresses this office of the dream in technical language as follows: "Dreams are the removal of sleep-disturbing psychic stimuli by way of hallucinated satisfaction."

In the dream vengeance, hatred, jealousy, envy and other evil passions, which consciousness habitually holds in check, come to the fore and find a vicarious satisfaction by enacting scenes in which the unconsciously entertained wishes born out of these passions are realized. Yet even here these vile tendencies dare not appear in their native form and their unmitigated ugliness; for, though during sleep the vigilance of the censor relaxes it does not entirely cease. The dream, therefore, makes use of symbols in order to evade the censor. Withal on account of the partial eclipse of the censorship, the symbolic disguise may be less rigid and the underlying wish can be more easily recognized than in the incidents of our wakeful life.

To unlock the real meaning of the dream is the aim of dream interpretation which in psychoanalysis has been brought to a very high degree of perfection. Still it is fraught with great difficulties by reason of the disguise and the symbolic substitutions to which the dream has recourse. Dreams have two contents, the manifest and the latent. The former is obvious to the dreamer; the latter can only be revealed by minute analysis. Only the latent content is of value in the investigation of the unconscious.

The dynamic of the dream has received much attention on the part of the psychoanalyst. The factors energetic in the dream are dramatization, distortion, displacement and symbolic representation, all of which have but one aim, to nullify the watchfulness of the censor. These very devices which outwit the censor also render the interpretation a laborious task. The numerous gaps, the jarring incongruities and the slender threads by which the action is held together are due to the absence of reason in our dream life. The unconscious is devoid of logic. It is blind and impulsive. Dr. Ernest Jones writes: "Dream making proceeds by methods quite foreign to our waking mental life; it ignores obvious contradictions, makes use of highly strained analogies, and brings together widely different ideas by means of the most superficial associations." This illogical character of the dream processes accentuates the difficulties of dream interpretation.

According to Freud, dreams never deal with trivialities, but always with vital concerns of the individual. They revert with special predilection to childhood, in which the instinctive life was as yet unrepressed, and rehearse experiences of a strong sensational or emotional emphasis. The dream also is made to throw light upon certain race processes; for the situation of humanity with regard to social repression is analogous to that of the individual. Humanity also has its dreams by which it wishes to escape the restraint imposed by civilization. And in these dreams it likewise uses a symbolism intended to dissemble the real meaning. "Fairy tales, legends and religions," says Dr. A. Tridon, "are the dreams of the human race, expressing as they do the fulfillment of mankind's desire for happiness, and power or compensating mankind for the many restrictions imposed upon it by man's own biological status." These phenomena, then, according to Freud are properly understood if interpreted along the line of dream symbolism. Some have applied this method to the beliefs and traditions of mankind and have made havoc of its most precious spiritual possessions. Psychoanalysis in this respect has proved a great solvent and destroyer.

CRITICISM.—If we take psychoanalysis in its restricted sense as a therapeutic method we have no fundamental objections against it, but only warn against its exaggerations and counsel extreme caution in its application. The mind is a delicate mechanism and unskilled tampering with its working is liable to produce much harm. When the treatment of the patient is under the supervision of an experienced and reliable physician and if it is surrounded by the safeguards made necessary by the intimate nature of the disclosures, there is nothing to be said against it from a moral point of view. In view of ugly possibilities, however, these provisos must be insisted upon in the same way as they are urged in the practice of hypnotism. We are not prepared to admit that all psychic disturbances have their origin in unfulfilled desires, especially if these desires are supposed to be of the sexual sort. Moreover, psychoanalysis can hardly be said to be the cure of the neurosis, for after the disturbing element in the psychic life has been discovered, a complete re-education of the patient frequently becomes necessary. Psychoanalysis promises more than it can perform. The fashionable cult of psychoanalysis as practised in some circles lacking both knowledge and experience cannot be condemned too severely, because it may lead to most disastrous results. Psychoanalysis is a dangerous toy.

From the admissions of psychoanalysts strong arguments may be drawn in favor of well known Catholic practises such as confession and asceticism. A sincere confession will purge the mind of much perilous stuff which otherwise might begin to rankle and poison the soul. The resistance which the penitent experiences in disclosing his weakness also has a great curative value. Christian asceticism is by far more effective in repressing evil tendencies than the unconscious repression of which psychoanalysis makes so much. The conscious repression demanded by the moral law will prevent the formation of hidden complexes and will exercise deliberate control over evil impulses and tendencies. Habits of virtue, moreover, will not only repress the wicked inclinations into the unconscious, but will drain them of all their energy and gradually supplant them entirely. The important point overlooked by the psychoanalysts is this that disorders of the mental life are not so much caused by effectually suppressed desires as by insufficiently suppressed desires which are allowed to lurk in the mind. The Christian law forbidding evil thoughts prevents such insincerity that may avenge itself in psychic disturbances.

Psychoanalysis contains elements of truth, but they are distorted beyond recognition on account of the fantastic and pseudo-scientific terminology affected by the apostles of the new theory. Many of its heralded discoveries are common-sense truths expressed in a mysterious jargon calculated to impose upon the uneducated. That men act from mixed motives and that at times they disguise the real reasons that prompt their actions has long since been recognized by the teachers of the spiritual life, one of their staples being to warn the striver after virtue against this subtle self-deception. Sublimation is equally familiar to them, since they do not teach the annihilation of passions, but a redirection of them into spiritual channels. In this and in many other items Catholic asceticism has long anticipated what is useful in psychoanalysis, which has not even clarified the matters in question, but has only caused confusion and bewilderment by its pretentious vocabulary.

As an interpretation of life and a basis of conduct, psychoanalysis must be rejected without reserve. Its personification of the unconscious psychic processes, upon which it rests its astonishing claims, is unscientific and not borne out by facts. The unconscious is neither dynamic nor as omnipresent as the psychoanalyst would make it out. Freud has entirely inverted psychology, making the unconscious the dominant factor in our psychic life and exalting the instinctive life above the rational. In reality this would make an end of psychology as an independent science and reduce it to a branch of biology. On this point psychoanalysis is in accord with the general drift of modern evolutionary psychology.

For freedom there is no room in the psychoanalytical system; the will is nothing but the puppet of the unconscious forces. Thus writes Dr. A. A. Brill, the authentic exponent of the Freudian psychology: "For it is known that all our actions are physically determined by unconscious motives, that there is no psychic activity which does not follow definite paths formed in the individual since his childhood." Far from being known, this is contrary to observation and utterly at variance with well-established facts. For Freud man is only a bundle of conflicting impulses, each one of which is striving for the mastery whilst the mind is the passive onlooker. The animal life is not only the substratum, but the actual source of the rational and the spiritual. It is impossible to erect on such a basis an anthropology that will do justice to the dignity of man. Without exaggeration it may be asserted that at present psychoanalysis is the greatest enemy to a right understanding and a just estimate of man's place in the universe. It degrades him as few systems of philosophy have ever done. It obliterates the boundary lines between sanity and insanity; it explains the normal manifestations of the mind on the same basis as the phenomena of the diseased mind. Art, religion, heroism have the same source as crime, morbidity and perversion. The unconscious is the key to everything. The highest is nothing but a sublimation of the lowest. Behind everything lies the dark and somber background of the vital urge. The influence of such teaching can but be pernicious and subversive of morality.

The only valuable contribution that psychoanalysis has made to the science of education is that it has called renewed attention to the fatal consequences of illegitimate and unreasonable repression. The general application of psychoanalytic methods to the training of children would be nothing short of criminal. It would ruin the beautiful unconcern of the child, ruthlessly brush the bloom of innocence from its soul and, instead of preventing nervous troubles, lay the foundation of morbidity and perversion. Even Mr. R. H. Hingley, otherwise favorably disposed towards psychoanalysis, protests against such an abuse. "We do not believe," he writes, "it is desirable, necessary or possible to apply the full technique of this method to the task of educating the ordinary child."

Public Honesty (cf. C. E., XII-554a).—The matrimonial impediment known as public honesty or public propriety now arises only out of an invalid marriage, whether or not consummated, or from public or notorious concubinage; it annuls marriage in the first and second degrees of the direct line between the man and the blood relatives of the woman and vice versa. The causes of the impediment are now quite different from those that gave rise to it before the Code came into effect. In those days it arose from a valid betrothal, which now produces no effect on a marriage contract, or from an unconsummated valid marriage, which now gives rise to the impediment of affinity. While public or notorious concubinage gives rise to the impediment of public propriety, it would not be caused by secret concubinage, or occasional sexual relations.

Quebec, ARCHDIOCESE OF (QUEBECENSIS), in Canada, comprises the counties of Beauce, Bell-chasse, Dorchester, Kamouraska, Levis, L'Islet, Lotbinière, Megantic, Montinagny, Montmorency, Portneuf, Quebec and part of Temiscouata. The present incumbent, His Eminence Louis Cardinal Bégin, who took possession of the see in 1898, was created a cardinal 25 May, 1914. He has as his auxiliary Most Rev. Paul-Eugène Roy, b. 1859, who was consecrated titular Bishop of Eleutheropolis (1908), later appointed titular Archbishop of Seleucia (1914) and (1920) made coadjutor with the right of future succession to the Archbishop of Quebec.

Archbishop Roy is the chief force in the "Action Sociale Catholique," of which the "Action Catholique," edited in Quebec since 1907, is a branch. In connection with this paper there is a department which publishes tracts and pamphlets on various Catholic subjects. An ecclesiastical association organized in the diocese, "La caisse de Saint Joseph," grants a pension to its members who are out of employment through sickness or age. Other charitable institutions are: 10 hospitals, 2 of which are devoted to tubercular patients; 8 orphanages; 4 patronages for boys and 3 for girls; 1 house for the protection of girls; 1 refuge for repentant girls, all conducted by religious communities; 40 prosperous conferences of St. Vincent de Paul and a tabernacle society. A branch of the Catholic Association of Travelling Salesmen is organized in the diocese, as well as 30 branches of the Canadian Association of Young Catholics, a club of Catholic sailors and the Association of Canadian Girls. Throughout the diocese there are about 25,000 members of the national syndicates of Catholic workmen.

By 1921 statistics there are 404,500 Catholics; 668 secular and 102 regular priests; 233 parishes; 22 missions; 255 churches or chapels; 36 public oratories; 1 university (Laval), with 460 students, of whom 185 are theological students; 4 colleges or seminaries with 2100 students; 1 Apostolic School with 35 teachers who attend the Seminary of Quebec for lectures; Laval normal school with 100 young women and 75 young men training for teaching, and 200 other students; 1 normal domestic science school with 150 girls; 1 agricultural school with 100 students and 1 agricultural orphanage.

The religious Orders established in the diocese are: male (the asterisk shows which have in the diocese a novitiate or a preparatory postulate), Dominicans, Franciscans*, Capuchins*, Jesuits, Redemptorists*, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Missionaries of the Sacred Heart*, White Fathers*, Eudists, Fathers of the Blessed Sacrament*, Brothers of St. Vincent de Paul*, Fathers of the Assumption, the Fathers of the Holy Cross (who have a house in Quebec, in which there are about twenty students following the course of theology at Laval, while the Franciscans and the Capuchins have their own classes of theology); Brothers of the Christian Schools*, of Christian Instruction, of St.

Viator, of the Sacred Heart, Marist Brothers*, female: Ursulines*, Augustinian Sisters, called Hospitalières*, Grey Nuns*, Sisters of Good Shepherd (of Quebec), of Jesus-Mary, of the Congregation of Notre-Dame, Servants of the Holy Heart of Mary*, Sisters of Our Lady of Perpetual Help*, of the Holy Rosary, of Providence, Dominicans of the Infant Jesus*, Franciscans Missionaries of Mary*, of our Lady of Good Council, of the Holy Family, Cistercian (Trappistine) Sisters*, of Hope, of St. Joseph, of St. Valier*, of Charity of St. Louis*, White Sisters*, Redemptorist Sisters*, Sisters of St. Francis of Assisi*, of the Precious Blood*, of the Assumption, Little Franciscans of Mary, Missionaries of the Immaculate Conception, Oblate Sisters, Sisters of the Holy Infant Jesus*, of Ste. Chretienne*, Servants of the Blessed Sacrament, Visitandine Sisters, Sisters of Jeanne d'Arc*.

Querétaro, DIOCESE OF (DE QUERETARO; cf. C. E. XII—601b), in Mexico, suffragan of Michoacan. The present administrator of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Francisco Banegas, b. at Celaya, Mexico, 5 March, 1867, studied at Celaya, Querétaro and Morelia, and was ordained at the seminary. He was vicar general of Vera Cruz in 1914 and was exiled in August of that year. He took refuge in the Antilles, whence he was sent to Chicago. He returned to Vera Cruz, December, 1918, was elected 28 February, 1919, published 3 July, consecrated 27 July following, succeeding Rt. Rev. Emmanuel Rivera, who died 8 May, 1914. In 1920 the diocese contained: 279,414 Catholics, 19 parishes, 14 vicarages, 210 churches and chapels, 93 secular priests, 20 regulars, and 150 seminarians.

Quilon, DIOCESE OF (QUILONENSIS, cf. C. E. XII—610d), in India, suffragan of Verapoly, is still under the administration of Bishop Benziger. There are 152,424 Catholics, out of a total population of 1,900,000. Eighty-one priests, of whom 24 are Discalced Carmelites, serve 181 churches and 46 chapels. Besides the preparatory seminary with 39 students there is now at Quilon a higher seminary with 26 seminarians, besides 2 at the seminary of Kandy in Ceylon. There are 24 Discalced Carmelites, 61 Sisters of the Third Order Apostolic of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, 32 European and 27 native lay Sisters of the Missionary Canonesses of St. Augustine, 18 Sisters and 7 novices of the Congregation of the Holy Cross from Menzingen, 21 Sisters and 5 novices of the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. The boys' schools have 1756 pupils and the girls' 4066; the total number of schools in the diocese, including mixed schools, is 184; the total number of pupils 18,702.

The charitable institutions include 2 orphanages for boys with 85 inmates, 3 for girls with 183 inmates, the Infant Jesus Orphanage at Mulagamude with 295 inmates, one at Nagercoil with 30 inmates, besides a dispensary and 3 hospitals.

Quimper and Léon, DIOCESE OF (CORISOPITENSIS ET LEONIENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—611c), includes the Department of Finistère, France. It has 314 parishes, 314 churches, about 1000 chapels, 1 monastery for men, 37 convents or residences for men, and 154 for women. There are 1100 secular priests, 14 Jesuits and 3 lay brothers, 5 Benedictines, 142 Brothers and 1625 Sisters. There are 2 upper seminaries (one being for the Missions of Haiti), and 1 lower seminary with 150 seminarians in the upper seminary and 300 in the lower; Five colleges with 75 professors and 1500 students. There are 2 normal schools, 1 for boys with 4 teachers and 60 pupils, and 1 for girls, with 5 teachers and 38 pupils. Two hundred and sixty teachers instruct 16,000 boys in 67 elementary schools and 783 teachers instruct 30,000 girls in 180 schools. Charitable institutions include 16 asylums, 28 hospitals, 3 refuges, 8 orphanages and 15 industrial schools. Four organizations exist among the clergy and among the laity there are general associations such as the Jeunesse Catholique, the General Federation of Patronages, the League of the Fathers of Families, the Catholic Union, the Ligue Patriotique des Françaises, and the diocesan association for the Relief of War Orphans, besides one or two associations of various kinds in each parish. The population of the diocese is 809,771 Catholics. The see is still governed by Rt. Rev. Adolphe-Yves-Marie Duparc, b. at Lorient in 1857, ordained in 1880, elected 11 February, 1908, in succession to Bishop Dubillard, promoted to the see of Chambéry. The important events in the diocese since 1911 include the coronation of the statue of Ste. Anne at the famous shrine of Ste. Anne-la-Palme in 1913, and the fourth Breton Marian Congress held at Folgoat in the same year, under the presidency of the Rt. Rev. Bishop. Cardinal Dubillard, archbishop of Chambéry, former bishop of Quimper, president of the League Pro Pontifice et Ecclesia died at Chambéry 1 December, 1914, and in that year also occurred the death of Comte Albert de Mun (q. v.), member of the French Academy, deputy for Finistère, and founder of the Œuvre des Cercles Catholiques d'Ouvriers. During the war 766 ecclesiastics (priests and seminarians) were mobilized, of whom 100 were killed or missing, 233 were cited in orders of the day with 379 citations, 15 were decorated with the cross of the Legion of Honor, 23 with the Médaille Militaire, 10 with the Médaille des Epidémies, and a large number received the Croix de Guerre. Of the 17 army and navy chaplains 14 were cited in orders of the day with 36 citations, and 7 received the cross of the Legion of Honor.

Quito, ARCHDIOCESE OF (QUITENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—615c), Ecuador, has a Catholic population of 420,560, 81 parishes and 195 priests. The present bishop is Most Rev. Manuel Maria Polit, born at Quito in 1862; he attained distinction as a lawyer and publicist, became secretary to the Senate and deputy, entered the ecclesiastical state in 1890, made his studies at the Latin-American College, Rome, and at St. Sulpice, Paris, was ordained in 1894, elected bishop of Cuenca 11 January, 1907, consecrated 1 November following, promoted 17 June, 1918, in succession to Mgr. Frederico Gonzales y Suarez, d. 6 December, 1917. At the request of the Mercedarians the ancient and magnificent church of Our Lady of Mercy was erected into a minor basilica by a decree of 2 December, 1920. Under this title the Blessed Virgin is invoked for protection from earthquakes, which are so frequent and so violent in Ecuador.

R

Ragusa, DIOCESE OF (RAGUSINENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—633d), in Jugoslavia, suffragan of Lara, is still under the administration of Rt. Rev. Joseph Gregory Marcellie, b. at Preko, 1847, elected titular bishop of Tanis 1893 and transferred 18 May, 1894, succeeding Mgr. Vodopie, deceased. In 1916 there were in the diocese 72,285 Catholics, 500 Greek Schismatics, 5 deanships, 47 parishes, 11 filial parishes, 112 secular and 52 regular priests.

Rajpootana, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF. See AJMER, DIOCESE OF.

Rampolla del Tindaro, MARIANO, Cardinal, b. at Polizzi, on 17 August, 1843; d. at Rome on 17 December, 1913. The family of the Rampollas del Tindaro belong to the Sicilian nobility. The future Cardinal studied at the Capranica, which explains his great affection for that institution and its pupils. In 1875 he was appointed to be auditor of the nunciature at Madrid and returned to Rome two years later to be Secretary of the Propaganda for Oriental Affairs; he was Prothonotary Apostolic in 1878 and Secretary of the Latin Propaganda in 1880. In 1880 Leo XIII made him Archbishop of Heraclea and in 1882 sent him as nuncio to Madrid. During his stay there he won the affection of every one, and when the king asked the cardinal's hat for him, not only did the Pope grant the honor but in 1887 when his term expired he recalled him to Rome and appointed him Secretary of State in place of the deceased Cardinal Jacobini. As to whether he shaped the policy of Leo XIII or merely followed the Pope's guidance is still an open question, but his fidelity to the Pontiff was such that during his long fifteen years of office he never reserved for himself a single day of vacation. He was rich in his own right, but his liberality was princely, both in repairing churches and in assisting the needy and poor.

In the Conclave that elected Pius X, Rampolla would certainly have received the tiara had it not been for the veto power of Austria. As Archpriest of St. Peter, it was he who had to extend the official welcome to Cardinal Sarto, a duty which he performed with exquisite graciousness and tact. After the election of Pius, Cardinal Rampolla resumed the work of the various Congregations to which he belonged; that of the Holy Office had become extremely heavy after the resignation of Cardinal Scrafino Vanutelli as Secretary; but this did not prevent him from elaborating his splendid study of the Life of St. Melania the Younger which was welcomed by the enthusiastic approval of the learned men of all Europe. To allow him to continue his researches, Pius X in 1912 made him Librarian of the Holy Roman Church, besides bestowing other honors upon him. His position was of course an extremely delicate one in his relations with Pius X, but never a word of regret for having failed to receive the tiara ever escaped his lips, and never a word of hope that some future occasion would bring him the honor. He died suddenly in 1913. He will ever be regarded by the world as a great cardinal and a faithful servant of the Church.

Raphoe, DIOCESE OF (RAPOTENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—647b), in the province of Ulster (Ireland), is suffragan of Armagh, with residence at Letterkenny, Co. Donegal. His Eminence Cardinal Michael Logue, former bishop of Raphoe, was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Patrick O'Donnell, who fills the see since 1888. He was born at Riltaine, Glenties, 28 November, 1855, studied at Maynooth, and later served as a professor there; was prefect of Dunboyne, rector of the Catholic University of Ireland, and was appointed 26 February, 1888; he was made a member of the Irish Convention in 1917. Statistics for 1921 report 26 parishes, 57 churches, 90 secular priests, 2 monasteries for men, 5 convents for women, 45 Brothers, 60 Sisters; 1 college for boys opened in 1916, with 9 teachers and 90 students, 1 high school for women with 50 students, 221 elementary schools with 485 teachers and 16,532 pupils, 1 industrial school with 75 pupils, technical schools with attendance of 50 pupils for each, 5 workhouses, 1 county asylum for the insane; besides two workhouse hospitals there are 2 more maintained by public funds, and the Shiel hospital; the priests' ministry is unrestricted in all public institutions; primary and secondary schools receive government grants. One society is organized among the clergy for the support of disabled clergy, and several branch associations among the laity such as: the Apostolic Union, Father Mathew's Union, Pia Unia pro missionibus, Association of Clerical Managers of schools, temperance societies, reading rooms, clubs, confraternities and sodalities. The diocesan periodical, "The Crann," is published here. During the World War six priests served as army chaplains. Canon Maguire's History of the Diocese of Raphoe was published in 1920.

Ratisbon (REGENSBURG), DIOCESE OF (RATISBONENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—657a), suffragan of Munich-Freising. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Anthony von Henle, b. at Weissenhorn 22 May, 1851, ordained 23 November, 1873, elected bishop of Passau 3 April, 1901, consecrated 16 June following, transferred to Ratisbon 6 November, 1906, enthroned 6 February, 1907. He was also councillor for the Kingdom of Bavaria until 1918. During his administration he introduced the diocesan hymn book, improved the famous cathedral choir and also the International School of Music, catalogued the valuable library of music of Canon Proske, created a diocesan archive for Christian Art, remodelled the episcopal residence into a hospice for the clergy and laity, transferred the old Roman Porta Prætoria to the cathedral of St. Peter, established a central diocesan bureau of charities, disbanded fourteen undenominational churches, established many parishes in Ratisbon and other places. There are 889,951 Catholics in the diocese, of whom 600 are Austrians, 500 Poles, 150 Hungarians, 30 Jugoslavs, 20 Rumanians and 20 Russians.

and Wettensburg; Carmelites, 5 houses; Franciscans 5; Capuchins 2; Redemptorists 3; Augustinians 4; Minorites 2 hospices; Brothers of Mercy 5; School Brothers 4; Premonstratensians 1; Salesians of Don Bosco 1; Pallottini Fathers 1; Fathers of the Divine Word 1; Brotherhood of Hermits 1; The following orders of women are represented: Poor Clares 3 houses (104 Sisters); Dominicans 3 houses (166); Cistercians 2 houses (199); Ursulines 1 house (95); Sisters of the Good Shepherd 1 house (64); English Ladies 3 houses (120); Carmelites 2 houses (25); Elizabethines 1 house (28); Salesians 4 houses (314); 24 establishments of the Sisters of Mercy (127); 82 of the Poor School Sisters (576); 115 of the Third Order of St. Francis of Mallersdorf (939); 1 of the Daughters of the Divine Redeemer of Niederbronn; 1 of the Sisters of the Holy Cross (3); 12 of the Franciscans (49). In all there are 2662 Sisters in the diocese. The diocesan seminary is at Ratisbon with 165 seminarians and there are 3 preparatory seminaries with 559 students.

The following educational institutions for men exist in the diocese: 1 Hochschule with a philosophical and theological faculty at Ratisbon (13 professors, 220 students), 6 gymnasias, 1 Oberrealschule (9 years scientific course), 1 International School of Church Music (5 professors, 20 students), 5 Realschulen (6 years scientific course, 64 professors, 1607 scholars), 2 teachers' training schools (23 teachers, 351 students), 4 preparatory training schools (13 teachers, 168 students), 9 industrial schools (25 teachers, 650 students), 12 agricultural schools, 1 central agricultural association with a continuation school for 100 young farmers and a house-keeping school for farm maids. The following institutions exist for women: 11 Höhere Schulen for young women conducted by the Sisters, divided as follows: English Ladies (1 school, 15 teachers, 300 pupils), School Sisters (1 school, 16 teachers, 243 pupils), 3 training schools for teachers, 1 municipal school for young ladies (17 teachers, 457 pupils), 5 gymnasias, also 12 house-keeping schools. There are 2547 State elementary schools (10 years course) with 2547 teachers and about 190,000 pupils, 71 needle-work schools for girls, 10 private soup kitchens, 1 association for male teachers, 1 association for juvenile teachers, 1 association for women teachers, 11 societies for women teachers. The following institutions have been established for children: 18 homes, 45 orphan asylums, 4 institutions for imbeciles, 2 homes for the deaf and dumb, 5 shelters, 97 infant schools. The various religious and social societies are well organized. They are: 1 Archconfraternity of the Association of Christian Mothers which includes 4000 associations, 18 Women's Leagues, Association of the Holy Family, 500 Associations of Parents for the Support of Christian schools, 7 children's associations, 3 Women's Associations (13,000 members), 172 Young Women's Associations (40,000 members), 12 Young Men and Men's Associations (25,000 members), 1 anti-alcohol league, 50 sodalities for young men under the guidance of priests, 39 for women, 9 associations for merchants' employees (600 members), 54 apprentice associations with 10 hospices, 116 boys' sodalities (3370 rural members), 150 rural associations for servants (7000 members), 2 homes for servants, 3 associations for servants, 133 associations for workmen and workwomen, established since 1848 (10,000 members), 800 Farmers' Associations (25,000 members), Railroad Men's Union of Bavaria, the two last named established since 1897. The laity have formed Christian trade unions, a League for Metal-Workers and the Merchants' Hanseatic Union. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 65 hospitals, 37 infirmaries for the aged, 3 homes for invalids, 4 homes for servants, 4 homes for the aged, 6 poor-houses, 3 lunatic asylums, 1 house of correction at Straubing, 2 institutions for prisoners, 50 nursing stations. The following charitable organizations have been formed: Conference of St. Vincent de Paul, established 1848, 1 bureau of charities, 1 association for supplying poor churches with vestments, 1 Priests' Association, 1 branch of the St. Raphael Society for Catholic Emigrants.

Since 1911 the diocese has lost the following distinguished priests and laymen: Rev. Dr. Haberl, founder of the school of church music; Canon Mühlbauer, builder of the Erhardihaus, a hospice for apprentices; Dr. Schreiner, who planned and promoted the excavation of the Roman Castle Abusina Eining; Canon Michael Haller, composer of church music; Dean Sollner, builder of the basilica at Weiden; Privy Councillor Carl Pustet, printer to the Holy See; Joseph Habbel, merchant, publisher and public official; Count Dr. Hugo v. Walderdorff, historian; Eugenia Nentwig, Abbess of the Poor Clares, apostle of the poor. Since 1911 the following important events have taken place in the diocese: A new diocesan register was published (1916), also a diocesan hymn-book. Many churches were erected and new parishes were founded, numerous missions were given, Eucharistic congresses, Catholic congresses, and sodality conferences were held, pilgrimages were made to Amberg and Altötting, and 15,000 persons participated in the Farmers' Congress.

During the war the clergy most generously gave their services in caring for the spiritual and bodily wants of the soldiers. Twenty of them acted as field chaplains, 20 nursed the wounded, 160 seminarians joined the army. At the three large prisoners' camp at Grafenwöhr, Amberg, and Ratisbon, the clergy were actively engaged in ministering to the spiritual needs of the soldiers and prisoners. The Sisters of Mercy cared for the wounded in 30 hospitals: Count Albert and Countess Margareta of Thurn and Taxis nursed the soldiers; the Catholic Press Association provided reading matter for them. At the principal railroad station at Ratisbon 325,000 prisoners, including Germans, Austrians, Hungarians and Jugoslavs, were taken care of. Thirty thousand soldiers of this diocese fell on the field of battle, of whom 86 were seminarians. An association has been formed which looks after the graves of the fallen soldiers both at home and abroad.

Ravenna, ARCHDIOCESE OF (RAVENATENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—662b), in the province of Romagna, Central Italy. A consistorial decree of 3 January, 1917, modified the confines of the archdiocese. Ravenna, which claims metropolitan rights over all the province of Emilia, is governed by Most Rev. Pasquale Morganti, b. in the Diocese of Milan, 13 January, 1853, appointed bishop of Bobbio, 9 June, 1902, promoted to Ravenna 14 November, 1904, succeeding Mgr. Guido Maria Conforti, resigned for reasons of health, and appointed Bishop of Parma, 12 October, 1904, later Bishop of Cervia, 7 January, 1909; died 8 December, 1921. It has (1922) a Catholic population of about 220,000 souls, 60 parishes, 200 churches, 2 monasteries for women, 2 convents for men, 4 for women, 150 secular priests, 125 nuns, 1 seminary with 54 seminarians, 1 college for men with 8 teachers and 70 students, 3 for women with 15 teachers and 105 students. The institutions under the authority of the government are: 3 high schools with 40 teachers and 300 boys and 50 girls, 1 academy with 10 teachers and 40 boys and 10 girls, 1 normal school with 80 students, 1 professional school with 70 students. Charitable institutions include 14 asylums and 3 hospitals. A Mutual Aid Society and a society for deceased clergy are organized among the clergy, and three Circles among the laity. During the World War the clergy in cooperation with the laity helped the needy of the diocese and several of the clergy received citations. The sixth centenary of the death of Danke was observed with fitting solemnity under the auspices of the Catholic Committee led by the Archbishop.

Recanati and Loreto, DIOCESE OF (RECIN-TENSIS ET LAURETANENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—675d), in the Province of Ancona, Central Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Alfonso Andreoli, b. at Pergola, 1850, elected Bishop of Montefeltro 6 December, 1896, transferred 20 December, 1911, succeeding Mgr. Ranuzzi de Bianchi, promoted to the titular archdiocese of Tyre. On 12 September, 1920, took place the solemn consecration of the statue of the Blessed Virgin as patroness and protectress of aviators (q. v.) under the title of Our Lady of Loreto, in the presence of the military authorities and a vast throng. It was this statue that was destroyed in the fire which broke out in the Santa Casa during the night of 22 February, 1921. The late Holy Father, Pope Benedict XV, promised to assist in repairing the damage. Statistics for 1920 credit the diocese with 26,000 Catholics, 8 parishes, 40 secular and 30 regular priests, 35 churches or chapels in Loreto; 25,000 Catholics, 12 parishes, 42 secular and 20 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 40 churches or chapels in Recanati. By a decree of the Consistory (23 December, 1915), the Bishop of Loreto was accorded the privilege of the pallium.

Recife, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See OLINDA AND RECIFE.

Rector (cf. C. E., XII—676c).—A priest in charge of a church that is neither parochial nor capitular, nor annexed to the house of a religious community which holds its services there, is called its rector. Rectors are usually appointed by the local ordinary where there is a right of election or presentation, or where the church is under the control of an exempt religious order or congregation, the rector requires the ordinary's approbation. In all cases a rector may be removed by the ordinary at will for just cause, but if the rector is a religious his superior is to be notified of the removal. As a rule the superior of a seminary or college directed by clerics is rector of any annexed church. Rectors must refrain from acting as parish priests,—thus they may not hold funerals in their churches; they may be ordered by the local ordinary to say Mass at a convenient hour, to announce the feasts and fasts, and to explain the Gospel and the catechism, if the parish church is so far away that parishioners cannot attend it without great inconvenience.

Reformed Churches.—I. The Reformed (Dutch) Church in America is a member of the "Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the World holding the Presbyterian System," and of the "Council of Reformed Churches holding the Presbyterian System," which is the American branch of the former. In 1920 this church reported 727 churches, 769 ministers and 133,000 members (135,000 in 1922). In 1916 the foreign missions reported 29 stations, 343 out-stations, 141 missionaries, 61 churches and 6827 members.

II. The Reformed (German) Church in the United States, is also a member of the Presbyterian Alliance and Council. This church has recently sought, without success, to effect a union with the Presbyterians and with the Reformed Dutch Church. The Hungarian Reformed Church in 1922 entered into an agreement with the Protestant Episcopal Church, whereby its ministers may accept ordination from the latter, without repudiating their existing orders.

The Reformed German Church reported in 1916 on its foreign mission work in Japan and China, 6 stations, 70 American missionaries, 35 churches, 3768 members, 17 schools, 3 hospitals, 1 orphanage. In the United States the Church reported in 1920, 1767 churches, 1260 ministers, 330,000 members (331,369 in 1922).

III. Reformed Churches in the Union of South Africa, according to the census of 1918, had 800,178 European constituents (including adherents as well as communicants), and 204,702 non-European constituents.

Reggio di Calabria, ARCHDIOCESE OF (RHEGINENSIS, cf. C. E., XII—717a), in Calabria, Southern Italy, is still governed by Rt. Rev. Rinaldo Camillo, Rousset, O.C.D., who came to the see in 1909 in succession to Cardinal Portanova, deceased. He was born at Beaulard, Italy, in 1860, entered the Carmelites in 1877, ordained in 1884, held various posts in his order and was elected Bishop of Bagnorea in 1916, promoted to Reggio after having acted as administrator apostolic. The statistics for 1920 credit it with 89 parishes, 12 vicariates, 180 secular and 15 regular priests, 45 seminarians, 10 Brothers, 50 Sisters, 200 churches and chapels, and 200,000 Catholics.

Reggio dell'Emilia, DIOCESE OF (REGINENSIS), suffragan of Modena, in Central Italy. It is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Eduardo Brettoni, born in the diocese of Florence, 1864, who was appointed bishop 12 October, 1910. In 1912 a Eucharistic Congress was held in this diocese. In 1913 the diocese lost its vicar general by the death of Mgr. Campano. In 1920 the Catholic population numbered 175,600, and by 1921 statistics there are: 247 parishes, 300 churches, 3 monasteries for men and 3 for women, 407 secular priests, 20 seminarians, about 75 seminarians, 200 Sisters, 1 secondary school for girls, 1 normal school and 1 professional school. Among the charitable institutions are the diocesan congregation of missionaries, 1 poor house, 2 communal asylums, 3 hospitals, and dispensaries for the care of babies. A mutual aid society is established among the clergy and three Catholic periodicals are published.

Regina, ARCHDIOCESE OF (REGINENSIS; cf. C. E., XII—718b), in Saskatchewan, Canada, erected 4 March, 1910, was raised to metropolitan rank 4 December 1915, with Prince Albert as its suffragan, and Most Rev. Olivier-Elzéar Mathieu, appointed at the consistory of 9 December, 1915, as its first archbishop. Born at St. Roch, Quebec, 24 December, 1853, he received his degree as doctor of theology in Quebec in 1878, was ordained 2 June following, served as professor of philosophy at the seminary from 1878 to 1911, made doctor of philosophy in Rome in 1882, prothonotary apostolic 17 June, 1902, appointed first Bishop of Regina, 21 July, 1911, consecrated 5 November following and accorded the privilege of the pallium 21 June, 1916. In 1911 Bishop Mathieu was appointed fellow of the Order of St. Michael and St. George by Edward VII; he had been previously honored in 1902, by being named an officer of public instruction and chevalier of the Legion of honor.

According to 1922 statistics there are in the archdiocese, 79 parishes, 130 churches, 140 missions, 90 stations, 20 parishes served by religious, 20 convents for women, 71 secular and 50 regular priests, 3 brothers, 235 nuns, 10 seminarians, 2 classical colleges for men with 60 teachers and 160 students, 20 higher schools for boys and girls with 110 teachers and 825 students, 5 academies with 125 pupils, 3 industrial schools with 375 pupils and 1 boarding house for girls; missionary work is done among the Indians; there are 3 hospitals which receive a government allowance for every patient. Societies organized among the clergy are: League of Priests Adorers, Pious Union for a Happy Death, and the Association of the Maas; among the laity: Knights of Columbus, the French Canadian Association, Volksverein, and various parochial confraternities. The Catholic population of 85,000 is made up of French, German, English and other nationalities. In 1918 two classical colleges were built at Regina; Campion College, an English college conducted by the Jesuit Fathers, and "Le Collège Mathieu" at Gravelbourg, a French college under the direction of the Oblate Fathers.

Registers, PAROCHIAL (cf. C. E., XII-721c).—Registration of a baptism must be made by the parish priest without delay, he may not leave the registration to the priest who administers the sacrament, or to nuns or laymen. The Ritual directs that the entry should be made before the child leaves the church or the sponsors leave the baptistery. When baptism has been administered neither by the parish priest nor in his presence the minister is bound to inform the parish priest without delay so that the record may be made in the parochial register; the parish priest referred to is the proprius parochus of the subject baptized, that is the pastor of the place of domicile of the infant's parents. The decree "Ne Temere" made it obligatory to note opposite one's name in the baptismal register the fact of his or her marriage; the Code confirmed this practice and ordered further that a similar record should be made when the party was confirmed, solemnly professed, or ordained subdeacon. The detailed facts of confirmation must be noted in a special confirmation book, in addition to the annotation in the baptismal record mentioned above; if the confirmed party's own parish priest was not present he is to be notified by the minister of the sacrament as soon as possible. MURPHY, Parish Records in Eccl. Rev., LXV (Philadelphia, 1921), 1-12.

Registro do Araguaya, PRELATURE NULLIUS in the province of Matto Grosso, Brazil, erected 12 May, 1914. It is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Antoine Malan, O. S. F. S., b. in 1862, ordained 1889, superior of the Salesians of Matto Grosso in 1901 and elected titular bishop of Amisus and prelate nullius 25 May, 1914. The prelate was enlarged 29 October, 1920, by the addition of territory taken from Belem do Para. According to 1920 statistics there are 100,000 Indian inhabitants in 10 tribes, of whom 15,000 are civilized, 1 parish, 3 sub-parishes, 3 chapels, 8 convents, of which 4 are Salesian and 4 of the Sisters of Mary-Auxiliatrice.

Reims, ARCHDIOCESE OF (RHEMENSIS), comprises the district of Reims in the department of the Marne and the whole department of Ardennes in France. The present incumbent, His Eminence Louis Cardinal Lúçon was born at Maulévrier in 1842, ordained 1865, appointed Bishop of Belley, 1887. During his administration in that see he terminated the process of beatification of the Curé d'Ars and was presented at the festivities attending this event in Rome. He was promoted to the Archdiocese of Reims 21 February, 1906, and created a cardinal priest 16 December, 1907.

This territory, which saw some of the fiercest fighting during the World War, has suffered severely, and irreparable damage was done to some of its finest buildings. Notable among these is the cathedral of Notre Dame, built during the thirteenth century, one of the most famous examples of Gothic architecture. For two and a half years it was subject to constant though intermittent bombardment, its tall spires always in view of the German army. In 1917, during a three days' siege more than 1500 shells fell in the city itself, while 40,000 more fell on the cathedral or around during May. The roof of the choir collapsed upon the beautiful marble altar and today the gaping roof and broken windows and statues stand as a constant reminder of the war. Among the other churches of the diocese 66 were totally destroyed, 84 suffered severe damage and 177 others received slight injury. The Abbey d'Igny, founded by St. Bernard, was totally destroyed by the explosion of a mine; a house of scholastics for the African Missionaries, at Binson, was destroyed, the Carmelite Convent, burned during the siege; the monastery of the Visitation, destroyed; the monastery of the Good Shepherd, 1 house of the Congregation of Notre Dame; mother house of the Congregation of the Holy Child Jesus, 2 houses of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul destroyed and 1 damaged; 1 house of the Little Sisters of the Poor; house of the Sisters of Adoration and Reparation, in Reims the house of the Helpers of the Holy Souls damaged; the upper seminary burned and the lower seminary damaged. The demoralizing effect of the war has been particularly serious for the educational institutions: all the elementary schools were closed and have not yet been opened, the greater number having been destroyed. The College of St. Joseph at Reims, with 350 pupils, suffered severely; boarding schools under the Sisters of Notre Dame and Sisters of the Infant Jesus were burned, and all the normal schools were destroyed or burned, but these latter have been reconstructed. The property of the professional school of arts and crafts of St. John Baptist de la Salle, having been destroyed the school is now transferred to other quarters. All the asylums, 1 for the aged under the Augustinians and 2 under the Little Sisters of the Poor, 1 at Reims and 1 at Glaire, have been destroyed. The only charitable institutions remaining are the institutions of the diocesan Missionary Society at Charleville which has only 4 members; and spiritual retreat houses for men and young men, 1 under the Jesuits and 1 under the Christian Brothers.

Before the war there were 634 priests in the diocese; now there are about 520. Two hundred priests and seminarians were mobilized and of these 5 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 6 with the médaille militaire, 57 with the croix de guerre, 9 with the médaille des épidémies, 1 with the Cross of Serbia, 1 with the Cross of St. George and 1 with the Eagle of Serbia; this list testifies to the bravery and devotion of the clergy, at the front and in the occupied territory.

There are at present (1921) 41 parishes, 550 succursal parishes, 105 missions and 663 churches. There are two houses of priests of the Society of Jesus and 1 Capuchin convent with 7 religious. Besides the Sisters mentioned above as having suffered the ravages of the war, there are the Augustinians, the Sisters of the Holy Saviour, who visit the poor in their homes, the Ladies of Nazareth, the Sisters of the Holy Family, 1 branch of which (Branch of Hope) maintains two houses and 1 clinic, and the Tertiary Franciscans. The Institute of St. Remi at Charleville is still flourishing, with an enrollment of 250 pupils and a boarding school under the Sisters of Nazareth is successfully conducted. Among the clergy there is an Association of St. Joseph for deceased clergy, an Association of Priest-Adorers, and an altar society. Among the laity a great number of societies are organized for the young, both boys and girls; circles of study, patronages and sodalities; the conference of St. Vincent de Paul and the Third Order of St. Francis for men; the association of Christian Mothers, the Third Order of St. Francis, Ladies of Mercy and various societies for good works among the women. Before the war there were many foreigners, mostly Belgians and Germans, found in this diocese, but since then the foreign element has been composed chiefly of the workmen engaged in reconstruction. The population now numbers about 524,340.

Relations, Jesuit.—What are commonly styled the "Jesuit Relations" are transcripts of letters written by the first Jesuit missionaries among the Algonquins, Abenakis, Iroquois, Hurons, Illinois, and other Indian tribes of North America. These letters were sent down to Quebec when the opportunity presented itself, and after being carefully collated and edited were transmitted to France and issued annually in book form from 1632 to 1672. There they were stopped by an order from Rome forbidding all descriptions of missionary work in any part of the world. The reason of this injunction was the fact that the discussion about the licity of the Malabar Rites in India had become so animated that it was thought wise to resort to this drastic measure in order to prevent similar controversies elsewhere. The suspension of the "Relations" incensed Louis XIV and was not therefore due to the enmity of Frontenac, who would not have dared to set himself in opposition to His Majesty. Unfortunately the letters and maps of Marquette arrived in 1673 and could not be made public until circumstances arose which made their publication imperative.

The "Relations" are invaluable as historical documents. Indeed they are almost the only source of our knowledge about the aboriginal inhabitants of what is now the United States and Canada. From them we learn, at first hand, all about their mode of life, their traditions, their superstitions, their religious practices, their funeral rites, their dress, their dwellings, their wars, their habits in time of peace, their government, their tribal relations, their language, etc. There is an added value to them inasmuch as they were written under the most adverse conditions; in canoes, in fetid wigwams, on rocks or fallen trees; often at the risk of the life of the chronicler; amid drunken or crazy Indians, for whom note-taking by those mysterious white strangers was like witchcraft, whose spell they dreaded and which they had a right to ward off by a blow of the tomahawk. The writers themselves were often overcome with fatigue or hunger or disease, or were crippled by the wounds received at the hands of their neophytes. Apart from their scientific value these "Relations" are also, at times, personal psychological revelations of the highest order. The letters of de Brébeuf and Jogues, for instance, are of intense interest in this respect; and it would be difficult to find anything to surpass Brébeuf's study of his emotions before, during, and after the terrible tortures inflicted on him by the savages. Besides their contributions to ethnology, sociology, and the aboriginal religion, they have made the geographers of the world their debtors. It was Marquette who first traced the course of the Mississippi and first saw the Missouri and Ohio rivers; de Brébeuf mapped out the whole north shore of Lake Erie from Niagara to Detroit; Alloues and Dablon made the circuit of Lake Superior and located the copper deposits; Le Moyne found the salt springs of Syracuse; du Quen discovered Lake St. John, etc.

Over and above this, almost all of them set to work at making dictionaries and elaborating grammars of these unknown tongues, which had no cognate connection with any of the European languages; while all of them differed from each other in their forms of speech.

The composition of these "Relations," says Thwaites, "excites wonder that they could be written at all. Nearly always the style is simple and direct. Never does the narrator descend to self-glorification. He never complains of his lot, but sets forth his experience in the most matter of fact phrases. Not only do these devout missionaries, whose personal heroism has never been surpassed in any field, live and breathe in these "Relations," but we have in them our first competent account of the red Indian at a time when relatively uncontaminated by contact with Europeans." Seven of these great contributors to science were butchered by the Indians, and one of them survived torture almost miraculously. They were Jogues, Brébeuf, Chabanel, Garnier, Daniel, Buteux, and Bressani.

The first 40 volumes of the "Relations" that were published in France, were known as the "Cramoisy," reprints of which followed later in Paris and Lyons. There were issues in Rome and other cities of Italy, and also partial ones in the "Mercure Français" and "Litteræ Annuæ Societatis Jesu." In the United States interest in the "Relations" was excited by D. O'Callaghan's "Documental History of New York." Shea's various histories were based on the three large octavo volumes printed by the Canadian Government, at the instance of Father Martin, S. J., the founder of St. Mary's College, Montreal. Parkman drew on these copiously. The publication of 72 volumes by the Burrowes Brothers of Cleveland surpasses and sums up the work of all others. This edition is in alternate pages of French and English, and has had the advantage of the vast fund of information of the old archivist of St. Mary's, Montreal, Father Arthur E. Jones, who contributed to each volume several pages of precious notes and explanations of the text, which for many readers would have been otherwise unintelligible. The whole is completed by two volumes of marvellous indexes, which enable the student to find immediately every item contained in the vast work.

Relationship (cf. C. E., XII—731c).—Spiritual relationship arises now only in three cases: (a) between the baptizer and the person baptized; (b) between the sponsor and the person baptized; (c) between the sponsor and the person confirmed. It is now a matrimonial impediment (minor) only when arising from baptism; formerly the relationship existed also between the sponsors and the recipient's parents and was a bar to marriage.

Religious Life (cf. C. E., XII—748d).—Expressions like "religious life," "religious order," or "nuns" are frequently used in ordinary conversation or writing in a wider sense than is customary with theologians or canonists. As might be expected the Code in the preliminary canons dealing with religious lays down the meaning to be given to those and kindred terms when used in canon law as follows: A religion, or religious institute in general, is any society approved by legitimate ecclesiastical authority, whose members according to the special laws governing their society make public vows, whether perpetual or temporary, to be renewed, if temporary, after the lapse of a specified time, and thus tend after evangelical perfection. An order is a religion in which solemn vows are made; a monastic congregation is a union of several self-governing monasteries under one superior; an exempt religion is an institute with solemn or simple vows, withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the local ordinary; a religious congregation, or simply a congregation, is a society with simple vows only, whether perpetual or temporary. A pontifical religion or institute (religio juris pontificii) is a religious organization which has received approbation or at least a commendatory decree (laudis decretum) from the Holy See; a diocesan institute is a religious organization erected by an ordinary and as yet without the commendatory decree. A religious organization is termed clerical if its members generally receive the priesthood; otherwise it is called lay. A religious house is the residence of any religious organization; a regular house is one belonging to an order; an established house (domus formalis) is a religious house in which there are at least six professed religious, of whom, if the institute is clerical, four must be priests. A province is a union of several religious houses belonging to one religious organization and under the same superior.

Religious are those who have made vows in any religious organization; religious with simple vows are professed members of a congregation; regulars are professed members of an order; sisters (sorores) are women religious with simple vows; nuns (moniales) are women religious with solemn vows, or if the very nature of things or the context does not imply otherwise, women religious whose vows by rule should be solemn, but which for certain localities have been declared simple by the Holy See. By higher superiors are meant the abbot primate, abbot superiors of a monastic congregation, abbots of monasteries sui juris, even if the monastery belongs to a monastic congregation, the general or supreme ruler of a religious society, the provincial superiors, their vicars and all others having the same jurisdiction as provincials.

Bishops, but not vicars capitular or vicars general, can erect religious congregations; however, they must neither do so nor forbid their erection, without consulting the Holy See; moreover, where there is question of tertiaries living a common life, they must be aggregated by the supreme ruler of the first order. A diocesan congregation, even though it has spread through several dioceses, remains diocesan and subject to the various local ordinaries until it obtains the papal approbation or commendatory decree. The name or habit of a constituted religious organization may not be assumed either by those not belonging to it or by a new religious body. No legally established religious organization, even if it is diocesan and has only one house, can henceforth be suppressed except by consent of the Holy See, to which in case of suppression the disposal of the property is reserved, due respect, however, being shown for the wishes of the donors or benefactors of the organization. It is the exclusive prerogative of the Holy See to divide, unite or modify provinces of a pontifical order or congregation or to found or suppress new provinces thereof, or to separate independent monasteries from a monastic congregation and unite them to another. If a province is suppressed the general chapter, or, if it is not in session, the supreme ruler with his council, has the right to dispose of its property, unless the constitutions provide otherwise, due regard being had for the claims of justice and the wishes of founders. A diocesan religious congregation cannot establish a house in another diocese without leave of the local ordinaries both of the mother-house and of the other diocese; the first-named ordinary, however, is not to refuse permission without grave cause. If the congregation exists in several dioceses none of its laws may be changed without the consent of each of the ordinaries into whose diocese it has been introduced. (N. B. The Acta, 1921, p. 313, gives the new rules governing the approbation of religious congregations; cf. C. E. XII—758).

The approval of the Holy See and the local ordinary's written consent are required for the erection of an exempt religious house, whether fully established or not, or of a monastery of nuns (moniales), or of any religious house in a territory subject to the Congregation of Propaganda; in all other cases the ordinary's leave suffices. Permission to erect a new house authorizes clerical religious to have a church or public oratory annexed to the house, though before building it in a specified place they must obtain the ordinary's leave, and to exercise their sacred ministry within the limits of the law; it also authorizes both clerical and lay religious to carry on the pious works proper to them, unless they are restricted by the terms of the permit. To erect and open schools, hospitals or other such buildings apart from a religious house, even exempt, it is sufficient but necessary to get the ordinary's leave in writing; formerly these institutions needed the same authorization as the religious house. To convert a religious house to other purposes permission must be obtained from the same authorities as authorized its erection, unless the change is merely a matter of internal discipline and in accordance with the laws of the foundation. A religious house, whether fully established or not, belonging to an exempt religion, cannot be suppressed without leave of the Holy See; if it belongs to a non-exempt pontifical congregation, it can be suppressed by the general, with the local ordinary's consent; those belonging to a diocesan congregation can be suppressed by the mere authority of the local ordinary, after hearing the moderator of the congregation, unless it is the only house of the institute, but an appeal with suspensive effect may always be made to the Holy See.

SUPERIORS.—Exempt clerical superiors have ecclesiastical jurisdiction over their subjects in both the internal and external fora. However, the abbot primate or abbot superior of a monastic congregation does not enjoy all the power and jurisdiction conferred by the common law on higher superiors, but is limited in accordance with the constitutions and with special papal decrees.

Higher superiors should hold office temporarily, unless the constitutions provide otherwise: minor local superiors must not be appointed for more than three years, though they may be reappointed for a second term, if the constitutions so permit, but not for a third consecutive term in the same house. What is here said of minor local superiors applies to superiors and directors of schools, hospitals, and other pious houses, if they are superiors of religious, having power over other religious even in matters of religious discipline. Superiors are to reside in their own house and not to leave it, except as permitted by the constitutions. All superiors must see that their subjects are informed about papal decrees relating to religious and that the decrees are observed. Local superiors are to have the constitutions and certain prescribed papal decrees read publicly on stated days at least once a year; they must also cause to be given, at least twice a month, an instruction in Christian doctrine, adapted to the capacity of the hearers, to the lay-brothers or lay sisters and the domestic servants, and a pious exhortation to all the members of the house, especially in non-clerical religious. Abbot primates, superiors of monastic congregations and generals of pontifical orders and congregations must transmit to the Holy See every fifth year (formerly every three years), or oftener if the constitutions so provide, a report on the religious condition of their order or congregation, signed by themselves and their councils, and in case of congregations of women, signed also by the ordinary of the place of residence of the mother-general and her council. In religion there must be no merely honorary titles of offices, or dignities; however, those who have been higher superiors may retain their title, if the constitutions of their religion so permit.

ADMINISTRATION OF PROPERTY.—To invest or reinvest money the consent of the local ordinary must be obtained by (a) mother superiors of nuns (moniales) or of diocesan congregations, in all cases—formerly the ordinary's approbation was not required; if the monastery is subject to a regular superior his permission also is needed; (b) mother superiors of pontifical congregations for the investment of dowries of professed religious; congregations approved by the Holy See were until the promulgation of the Code completely exempt from episcopal jurisdiction in the administration of their temporal property; (c) superioresses of houses belonging to religious congregations, if money has been given by will, or otherwise, to be spent in the service of God; (d) any religious, even a regular, if the money has been given for the benefit of a parish or mission. Important changes in regard to the alienation of property and the contracting of debts were made by the Code. To contract debts now amounting to more than 30,000 francs ($6000 or £1200) or to alienate property exceeding that sum the consent (beneplicitum) of the Holy See is required; for smaller amounts it is sufficient but necessary to have the written permission of the superior according to the constitutions of each organization, with the consent of his chapter or council given by secret ballot; but nuns or sisters of diocesan institutes must have the written consent of the local ordinary, and of the regular superior if the nuns are subject to a regular superior. Formerly the consent of the Holy See was required to alienate property valued over $250 or £50, or to contract debts exceeding $2000 or £400, the consent of the bishop being unnecessary where smaller values were involved. In a petition for leave to contract debts or obligations it is necessary to set forth all the other debts or obligations incurred to date by the moral person, order or congregation, province, or house; otherwise the permission if granted would be invalid.

In all monasteries of nuns (moniales), even exempt, an accounting must be made once a year, or oftener, if the constitutions so provide, by the reverend mother to the local ordinary, and to the regular superior also, if the monastery is subject to one. Should the accounting be unsatisfactory the ordinary can apply suitable remedies, and should circumstances demand it may even remove the oconomus and other administrator, if the monastery is subject to a regular superior the ordinary should notify him in the first instance and if he neglects to act the ordinary may then take measures to correct the evil. In all other female religious orders or congregations, an accounting is to be made to the local ordinary during visitation, or oftener, if he judges it necessary, concerning the administration of the dowry investments. The local ordinary, moreover, is entitled to be informed of the economic condition of houses of diocesan institutes, and of the administration of funds and legacies for the welfare of a parish or mission to be spent locally in the service of God.

If an institute, province, or house, contracts debts or obligations even with the superior's leave, it incurs the responsibility; if a regular incurs obligations with his superior's consent, the responsibility devolves on the moral person whose superior granted permission; a religious of a congregation with simple vows who contracts debts is responsible, unless he was acting on behalf of the congregation with the superior's leave. However, if the religious contracts without his superior's leave his institute, province, or house incurs no responsibility. Religious superiors are warned not to run into debt, unless it is certain that their ordinary revenues are sufficient to pay the interest and extinguish the debt by amortization within a reasonable time. It may be noted here that the Code does not renew the prohibition contained in the Instruction "Inter ca" (1909), against erecting new monasteries or houses or even from enlarging or changing those already built unless the necessary funds were already in hand. Donations may not be made from the property of a house, province, congregation or order, except as alms or for another just cause, and then only with the superior's leave and according to the constitutions.

STUDIES.—Every clerical religious should have a scholasticate: common life must be followed therein, otherwise the students are ineligible for ordination. If the religion or province have no house of studies the students are to be sent to the scholasticate of another province or religion, or to the episcopal seminary, or a public Catholic atheneum. Religious who study at a distance from their own house must reside in a place approved by the Holy See and not in private houses. During their studies, scholastics must be under the special guidance of a spiritual father or prefect, who has the qualifications prescribed in canon law for masters of novices; they must be granted ample time for study and the general, or in special cases other superiors, can exempt students, if necessary, from certain community duties, such as choir, especially at night. Religious are to devote at least two years to the study of philosophy and four years to theology according to the method, principles and doctrines of St. Thomas Aquinas. After completing their studies they are to be examined annually for five years by some of the learned members of the order or institute. In every fully established house there must be at least once a month a discussion of a case of moral theology or liturgy, at which all members of the house who are studying or have studied theology must attend, unless the constitutions provide otherwise.

DIVINE OFFICE.—In accord with the hitherto commonly accepted view, the Code prescribes that choral recitation of the Office is obligatory in houses in which there are at least four religious or even less, if the constitutions so prescribe, who are bound to choir and who are not lawfully impeded.

CORRESPONDENCE.—All religious, male or female, can freely send letters, exempt from all inspection, to the Holy See or its legate in the country, to their cardinal protector, to their higher superiors, and to the superior of their own house, if absent, to the local ordinary to whom they are subject, and, in case of nuns under the jurisdiction of regulars, to the higher superiors of the order; furthermore, the religious can receive from all of these letters which nobody has the right to inspect. Formerly communication to or from the local superiors and papal legates were not guaranteed privileged, while correspondence with the cardinal was only doubtfully privileged.

OBLIGATIONS AND PRIVILEGES.—The obligations of clerics are as a rule binding on religious: they must make an annual retreat, attend daily Mass if possible, meditate daily and perform the works and devotions prescribed by their rules; they are to go to confession weekly and receive Holy Communion frequently, even daily; but provisions in their rules regarding the reception of the sacraments on certain days have only a directive force. On the other hand all religious, even lay religious and novices, enjoy the clerical privileges of the canon, the forum, immunity and competence. In certain cases the ordinary is authorized to interfere with exempt religious. Not to mention the election of superioresses, and the administration of convent property, he may punish a regular for a fault committed outside of his house, if the regular superior, after being informed, fails to do so; he must notify the Holy See about abuses in exempt houses if the regular superior, after being warned, takes no steps to reform conditions; and finally he is bound to give special attention to houses not fully established, to see that no abuse creeps in and in case of necessity he can apply provisional remedies. In the case of non-exempt institutes approved by the Holy See, the ordinary cannot make any change in the constitutions, nor inquire into the administration of property except as stated above, nor interfere with the internal government and discipline, except as authorized by the canons, yet in lay institutes he may inquire regarding religious discipline, morality, the law of enclosure, the reception of the sacraments, and provide a remedy for abuses, if the superior on being notified does not do so. but in matters of grave import must notify the Holy See about his action. Any indult granted legitimately by the local ordinary, dispensing from an obligation of the common law, avails likewise for all religious living in the diocese, as far as their vows and constitutions allow.

COLLECTION OF ALMS.—Regulars belonging to mendicant orders strictly so-called (not, however, Dominicans and others who are loosely termed mendicants) may collect alms in the diocese where their house is situated with the sole authorization of their superior; outside of the diocese, however, they require the written consent of the ordinary of the place in which they would collect. All other religious of pontifical congregations are forbidden to collect alms, unless they have a special indult, in which case, however, they need the written consent of the local ordinary, if the indult does not excuse them from obtaining it; while members of diocesan congregations require the written consent of their own local ordinary and of the ordinary of the place of collection. The local ordinary must not grant leave to collect to the religious just mentioned except in case of real necessity, which cannot be met in any other way; if a sufficiently large collection can be made in the district in which the religious live he must not permit them to collect outside of it.

LEAVING AN INSTITUTE.—No religious can pass to another, even a stricter, institute, or from one independent monastery to another, without leave of the Holy See. When anyone is authorized to make such a change he has to make his novitate again in the new institute; during this time he is bound by his vows (by the vow of obedience to his new superior and his master of novices), but his other religious rights and obligations are suspended. On the completion of his novitate he is to be admitted to perpetual profession or else he must return to his former institute. If the vows in the first institute were solemn and those in the second simple, the religious who has been transferred is bound henceforth only by simple vows, unless the Apostolic indult expressly provides for the contrary. Religious life on the other hand may be entirely abandoned, either temporarily or perpetually. For good reasons a religious might obtain an indult of exaustration (permission to reside outside of a religious house) from the local ordinary if his institute is diocesan, or in any other case from the Holy See. In virtue of such an indult the religious remains bound by his vows and other obligations of his profession compatible with his new condition, but he may not wear the religious dress; while he is thus away from the institute he has no voice in its affairs, though he enjoys its privileges, and is bound by the vow of obedience to the ordinary of the diocese in which he resides, not to the superior of his institute. Again, a religious might obtain an indult of secularization; in virtue of such an indult, the religious is entirely free from his vows and rule, but one in major orders remains bound by the obligations annexed to them. Those who have made only temporary vows are quite free to leave when the term of their vows has expired; their institute, too, might dismiss them at that time, for a just and reasonable cause, but not on the score of ill-health, unless the religious had fraudulently hidden or dissimulated the illness before his first profession. These methods of changing one's condition are lawful; on the other hand an attempt to abandon religious life by apostasy or by flight would be unlawful. An apostate from religion is one who having made perpetual vows leaves his religious house unlawfully with the intention of not returning or who to withdraw himself from religious obedience, does not return after he has left the house with permission. This intention is legally presumed when the religious does not return or notify his superior within a month of his intention to return. Apostates and fugitives remain bound by their vows and must return at once; their superiors should endeavor to have them come back; if they return penitently they are to be received; in the case of an apostate or fugitive nun the local ordinary is to pursue the matter prudently, while the regular superior is to act if the nun belongs to an exempt monastery.

DISMISSAL.—There are three crimes for which a religious is ipso facto dismissed from religious life: public apostasy from Catholicism; flight with a person of the opposite sex; and attempted marriage, even so-called civil marriage. For the canonical dismissal of religious bound by temporary vows there must be grave reasons, such as the absence of the religious spirit to a degree causing scandal, when admonition and penance have failed to reform him. If the religious belongs to a pontifical order or congregation the dismissal is effected by the general with the consent of his council, obtained by secret ballot, or in the case of nuns (moniales) by the local ordinary and the regular superior, if any, but they may act only after the superiress with her council have stated in writing. To dismiss any professed religious, the religious must have been guilty of a serious fault or have lost the religious spirit to such a degree that neither admonition nor penance has been able to effect an amendment of life. If the vows are temporary and the party belongs to a pontifical institute the superior general and his council effect the dismissal; in the case of a nun (monialis), the local ordinary and regular superior, if any, dismiss at the written request of the superiress and her council, finally, a diocesan sister would be dismissed by the local ordinary with the knowledge and acquiescence of her superiress. In all these cases the religious must be notified of the accusations; he may reply and his answer must form part of the records of the case. He may appeal to the Holy See against the dismissal, which, pending the answer, remains ineffective. If finally dismissed, the party is ipso facto released from all his vows of religion.

When the vows are perpetual: if the religious belongs to a non-exempt clerical or lay institute of men, and having been guilty of three serious offences, has failed to amend after being admonished twice, the general and his council, if they favor dismissal, refer the case to the local ordinary for action, when the institute is diocesan; or they issue the decree themselves if the institute is pontifical, though in this case the decree to be effective must be approved by the Holy See. To dismiss a nun or sister, there must be grave external reasons combined with hopeless incorrigibility; if the religious is a diocesan sister she can be dismissed by her local ordinary; if she is a nun, the local ordinary sends the record of her case with his own decision (and that of the regular superior, if any) to the Holy See for action; if the religious belongs to any other pontifical institute, the mother general sends all the documents in the case to the Holy See for decision.

In case of serious scandal and imminent risk of very grave danger to the community a religious with perpetual vows in a non-clerical institute may be sent back into the world by the local superior with the consent of his council and of the local ordinary, but the ordinary or one of the higher superiors must put the matter before the Holy See without delay.

An exempt cleric professed perpetually cannot be dismissed without a canonical trial or investigation; he must have been guilty of three offenses, of the same kind or at least indicative of a permanent evil will, the first and second each being followed by a formal admonition and threat of dismissal given by his immediate higher superior, or guilty of continuous offence despite two warnings given at least three months apart. The immediate higher superior reports to the general, who with his council (of at least four assistants) form the tribunal with power to order dismissal; the sentence, however, cannot become effective till it has been approved by the Sacred Congregation of Religious. In an extraordinary case where there is grave scandal and imminent danger of very serious injury to the community the religious may be sent back to the world by a local superior with the consent of his council when there is not time to have recourse to the higher superior, but the regular canonical investigation must be instituted without delay. A religious professed perpetually, on being dismissed, remains bound by his vows of religion unless the contrary is provided by the constitutions of the institute or by an Apostolic indult. If he is in sacred orders and his offence was very serious he may be deprived perpetually of clerical dress; if his fault was less grievous, he is under suspension until he is absolved by the Holy See; he may be ordered by the Sacred Congregation to remain in a certain diocese, the ordinary of which can send him to do penance in a religious house or place him under the care and supervision of a priest; if he is unable to support himself the institution is to do so through the local ordinary, on condition that he lives a good life; the ordinary may after the lapse of a year ask the Holy See to remove the suspension and may admit him, if he is a priest, to say Mass and engage in some remunerative pastoral work. If he is still bound by his vows of religion he is under an obligation to return to religion; if he has given proof of real amendment during those years his order must take him back, unless the Holy See decides otherwise; if the vows were dissolved he may be accepted by any benevolent bishop; otherwise the matter is to be referred to the Holy See.

Renaissance.—By the term Renaissance is generally understood the vast intellectual movement of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. This movement manifested itself first in Italy, afterwards successively in the other countries of Western Europe. It was marked by a wider and deeper knowledge of Greco-Roman antiquity, and a passionate love for its literature and art. The scholars who devoted themselves to the study of the Greco-Roman civilization were called Humanists, and the epoch in which they lived is known as the Renaissance. The term Renaissance or re-birth, as applied to the above mentioned intellectual movement, is a misnomer. It wrongly implies that the knowledge of the literature and art of Greece and Rome had been dead and buried for centuries and that suddenly it was born again, and developed during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Against this false contention is the fact that Humanism was but the natural development of the learning of the Middle Ages, a flowering out of the knowledge of the preceding centuries.

Already in the time of Charlemagne we note a widespread revival of classical learning. Everyone recalls how this powerful patron of letters, notwithstanding continual wars, established schools throughout his empire, how he invited from England the celebrated Alcuin, a distinguished scholar and disciple of the Venerable Bede, under whose direction academies were established where the sons of the more wealthy were taught Latin, Greek, Hebrew, philosophy, theology and mathematics. This new impulse thus given to letters was continued by the successors of Charlemagne and stimulated anew, successively, by such scholars and apostles of learning as Dante (1265-1321), Petrarch (1304-1474), Pope Nicholas V (1397-1455). During the centuries which separated the Humanists from Charlemagne, scholarly monks had been preserving, copying, studying, teaching the writings of the ancient Roman and Greek poets, historians, and philosophers. Alongside the scientific language which the modern tongues had developed, popular poetry had come into being, the great epics had seen the light of day, the unprecedented philosophical and theological progress of the twelfth century had astounded the world, and experimental science had appeared on the scene of history with the English philosopher, Roger Bacon (1214-94). The Crusades had given a new impulse to learning, the first encyclopedias had summarized the knowledge of their times, the splendor of plastic arts had covered Europe with monuments which are the admiration no less than the despair of our age, voyages of exploration had extended the geographical knowledge of the learned, and basic inventions had made further discoveries possible to mankind.

Since the wider diffusion of classical learning in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries is but the gradual outgrowth of the learning of the Middle Ages, how unscholarly is the gratuitous assertion of many writers that the Renaissance sprang into existence over night with the arrival in Europe of some Greek professors driven from the Orient by the advancing Turk. These professors, they claim, brought to Western Europe the knowledge and love of the literary masterpieces of antiquity. But the fact is that, when these professors appeared, the monks of the Middle Ages had for a thousand years been spending themselves to preserve and make known many of these treasures of mankind. Whatever additional writings Western Europe received at that time it had learned to appreciate by its own centuries-long literary studies.

The leading characteristic of the Renaissance was a general infatuation with the writings and the art of pagan antiquity. From the admiration of the ancient literary and artistic forms there was, with some of the Humanists, but one step to the imitation of pagan morals and manners, and but another step to the consequent contempt of Christianity and the further attempt to paganize the modern world. This extreme led some well-meaning but narrow-minded persons to the opposite, perhaps not less dangerous, extreme. Seeing that the study of pagan art, pagan literature, and ancient science led to the rejection of the Christian faith and Christian morals, these extremists contended that this study should be abandoned and that Christians should confine themselves to the acquisition of the divine sciences. But this extreme runs counter to the ancient axiom, Propter abusum non tollitur usus, the abuse of a thing does not do away with its use. Again, others, the rigorists of the moral order, attributed the corruption of their time to luxury, and dreamed of forcing people back into the simple living of former times, at the expense of man's noblest prerogative, his individual liberty, as later happened in the cases of the Puritans in America, and of Calvin in the Commune of Geneva. These, too, were extremists, because Christianity does not condemn any human faculty, not even the faculty of lawful enjoyment, nor demand of civilization the surrender of any of its legitimate conquests.

What stand did the Church take at this momentous crisis in history? The Catholic Church did not follow the lead of either kind of extremists. She took the sane middle way. In medio virtus, in medio tutissimus ibis, safety lies in a middle course. In the midst of the great movement of the Renaissance which had well-nigh swept Europe off its feet, she remembered her perpetual mission to teach all nations, the Greek as well as the barbarian, the enlightened as well as the ignorant, the rich as well as the poor. Far from hurling anathemas at the progress of science and the opulence of arts (though she often saw them misused) she invoked heaven's blessing upon them, inspired them with Christian principles which permeated their whole mass, and thus made of them instruments to promote the glory of God and the salvation of souls. And with this true Christian broad-mindedness, confident in the unfailing presence of Christ the Savior and of the Divine Paraclete, she wisely directed the unparalleled intellectual, artistic, and scientific movement, and, beaming with a new hope, took the road of the future. There was a revival; she made it truly Catholic.

In all lands there were men not less eminent for their Christian piety than for their classical learning who, though given to the passionate study of pagan antiquity, remained thoroughly Christian, who, appropriating the good there was in pagan antiquity, nevertheless remained conscious of their own Christian superiority; who made pagan art, literature, and science not mistresses but humble handmaids of Christianity.

Among these Christian humanists it will suffice to quote Rudolph Agricola (Huysmann) of Holland, who zealously promoted the study of classics in Germany; Vittorino da Feltre, who organized a school of classical learning at Mantua, Italy, and desired his pupils to receive Holy Communion every month; Aleandro Girolamo, professor and later rector of the University of Paris, and afterwards papal nuncio in Germany; Cardinal Sadoleto, who as poet, orator, theologian, and philosopher was in the foremost rank of his time; Vida, the author of the Christian epic "Christias" and of "De Arte Poetica"; Pico della Mirandola, poet and Christian apologist; Alexander Hegius of Westphalia, priest and founder of a classical school in Holland; Blessed Thomas More, knight, Lord Chancellor of England, author and martyr; Blessed Cardinal Fisher, Chancellor of the University of Cambridge, Bishop of Rochester, and martyr; Vives, the Spanish philosopher, author of a great variety of works; Cleynaerts, the Belgian priest, Orientalist, and missionary among the Mohammedans.

But it was in Rome, about all other places, that Catholic leaders guided the intellectual movement in the right direction, making the Renaissance an auxiliary of Christianity. The names of Pius II, Nicholas V, Julius II, and Leo X summarize the history of the most powerful patronage accorded to literature, art, and science in the history of our race. These pontiffs were surrounded by the most glorious phalanx of artists with the peerless Bramante, the world-renowned Michelangelo, and the divine Raphael at their head. These names recall the Dome of St. Peter's, the Sistine Chapel, the Stanze and the Loggia of the Vatican, productions unsurpassed in the history of art. The Popes of the Renaissance kept Christianity abreast of the enlightenment of their age, and placed on the brow of the Church a new tiara, a threefold crown of science, art, and poetry, whose lustre is not likely to fade.

VICTOR DAY.

Rennes, ARCHDIOCESE OF (RHEDONENSIS), comprises the department of Ile-et-Vilaine in France. His Eminence Auguste-René Cardinal Dubourg, who came to this see 7 August, 1906, died 22 September, 1921. Born at Loguivy-Plougras, 1842, he was ordained in 1866, served as professor in the lower seminary of Tréguier, was appointed Bishop of Moulins, 19 January, 1893, which see he filled until his promotion to Rennes. He was created cardinal priest 4 December, 1916, being the first cardinal of Breton origin. To Cardinal Dubourg's activity is due the construction of the beautiful college of St. Vincent de Paul for secondary education and the complete restoration of the upper and lower seminaries and the episcopal residence as well as the reconstruction of the diocese from the demoralized condition caused by the separation of Church and State. The Cardinal was succeeded by his auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Alexis Charost, the present incumbent.

During the World War 600 priests from this territory and 200 seminarians were mobilized and of these 18 were decorated with the Order of the Legion of Honor, 2 became officers and 2 served as navy chaplains, 274 students preparing for the college of St. Cyr, fell on the field.

By 1921 statistics the total population of this diocese is 608,100; there are 43 parishes, 319 succursal parishes, 396 churches, 6 convents of men and 65 for women, 1100 secular priests and 50 regulars, a number of Brothers who have become secularized since the law of 1901, numbers of Sisters, secularized also, 1 lower seminary with 250 students, 4 secondary schools for boys with 120 teachers and 1600 pupils, 14 boarding schools for the secondary education of girls with 150 teachers and 1200 pupils, 140 elementary schools for boys with 260 teachers and 41,000 pupils, 266 elementary schools for girls with 800 pupils. The charitable institutions include: 5 retreats, 7 asylums, 55 clinics, sanitariums and hospitals, 2 refuge homes and 2 nurseries. All public institutions permit the ministry of priests and all the hospitals, except the military hospital at Rennes, are conducted by religious. The "Semaine Religieuse," "Nouvel-iste de Bretagne," and various parish bulletins are published.

Renunciation (cf. C. E., XII—774a).—A renunciation of an ecclesiastical office to be valid must be made in writing, or orally in presence of two witnesses, personally or by proxy; if it is made to a local ordinary it must be accepted or refused by him within a month. If the renunciation has been lawfully accepted the office becomes vacant as soon as the person renouncing is informed of the fact. A cleric is considered by the law to have renounced his office tacitly: (a) if he becomes a professed religious; benefices, however, in this case are not vacated immediately; (b) if he neglects to take up his post within the time appointed by law, or by the ordinary if the law is silent on the point; (c) if he comes into peaceful possession of a post incompatible with a former office; (d) if he apostatizes publicly; (e) if he contracts marriage even civil; (f) if without just cause he becomes a soldier voluntarily; (g) if he unjustifiably and of his own accord leaves off his clerical dress and after being warned by the ordinary does not put it on again within a month; (h) finally, if when he is bound by the law of residence he absents himself unlawfully and, when not legitimately excused, neglects to obey or to answer the ordinary within a suitable time prescribed by the latter.

Rescripts (cf. C. E., XII—783c; V—691d).—Concainment of the truth or subreption in a petition for a rescript does not necessarily render it invalid, nor does a falsehood or obreption, provided the sole reason, or at least one of those alleged, is true. The use of the clause motu proprio in a rescript validates what would otherwise be void through subreption, it would not, however, validate obreption except in a petition for a dispensation from a minor matrimonial impediment. A rescript granted motu proprio to a person who by canon law is disqualified from obtaining the favor in question, or if it is contrary to a legitimate local custom, private statute, or acquired right is ineffective, unless it expressly contains a derogating clause. The words of a rescript are to be taken in their common acceptation; in case of doubt a wide interpretation is allowed, except where the interests of third parties or of the public are involved, or in reference to lawsuits, or when the petition was made to secure a benefice. A rescript if revoked by a superior is still valid until revocation has been made known to the person who obtained it; it is not revoked by a contrary law, unless the law provides for this or unless the law has been enacted by a superior of the grantor of the rescript.

Resurrection Sisters.—This Congregation was founded in Rome in 1891 by Mother Celine Borzecka. The community has as its chief aim the education of girls, although other works fall also within the scope of its activities. Besides the mother-house in Rome and a novitiate in Austria the community has also established a novitiate at Norwood Park, Ill., U. S. A.

Retreat of the Sacred Heart, CONGREGATION OF THE (cf. C. E., XII—795b).—There are twenty-three houses belonging to the institute: 16 in France, 2 in Brussels, and 5 in England. The house at Clevedon was closed in 1920, and a new house opened at Clifton with a hostel for Catholic women students, studying at the Bristol University. The Life of Victoire de St. Luc, French Revolutionary martyr, has been written by Mother St. Patrick, a religious of the institute.

Retreats for Laymen.—In January, 1909, Mr. Sidney J. Finley, of New York, called a small meeting of Catholic laymen to consider the establishment of a House of Retreats for Laymen in or near New York City, similar to those which had been founded in Belgium and in England. As a result of this meeting request was made of the provincial of the Society of Jesus that the Society undertake direction of the work. This request received the cordial assent of the provincial and the approval of Archbishop Farley of New York, and Father Terence

J. Shealy, S. J., was appointed director of the movement, which in May, 1909, was tentatively organized. It was decided that, pending the actual acquisition of a suitable house for retreats, an inaugural "week-end" retreat should be held in the summer months at Fordham University, during the vacation season, and on July 9th eighteen men composing, for the most part, the organized group, made the first retreat under Father Shealy's direction. From the inception of the movement it was recognized that to meet the exigencies of modern business conditions the "week-end" retreats could not begin before Friday evening and must terminate early on Monday morning, and this has been the rule since that time.

The success of the first retreat led to the holding of three more retreats at Fordham University before the end of the vacation, and in the autumn six more "week ends" were held at Keyser Island, South Norwalk, the total attendance at the ten retreats in 1909 being 179 men. In November, 1909, a public meeting in aid of the movement was held at Cathedral College in the presence of Archbishop Farley. Early in 1910 "week ends" were resumed at Keyser Island, and once more Fordham University was used during the summer vacation, return being made to Keyser Island in the autumn, and the total results for 1910 were nineteen retreats attended by three hundred men. Active search for a suitable house was made during 1910 and many houses were inspected. None of them, however, met the combined requisition of adaptability and price—the latter being a very formidable limitation. In January, 1911, it was decided to incorporate what had up to that time been known as the "Laymen's Retreat Movement" and the "Laymen's League for Retreats and Social Studies" was founded, the name being later changed to that of the "Laymen's League for Retreats and Social Service."

In March, 1911, Father Shealy's search for a house was finally rewarded by the discovery of an estate on Staten Island known as "Fox Hill Manor." This consisted of a large double house standing in twenty acres of ground near Fort Wadsworth. The house had been built some forty years before by Mr. L. H. Meyer for the occupancy of his own family and that of a married daughter. It contained twenty-seven large rooms and was admirably suited for a Retreat House, as it stood well secluded from the public roads. The grounds had been lavishly improved by Mr. Meyer in his lifetime but on his death the property suffered considerable neglect and when discovered by Father Shealy both house and grounds were in a state of deplorable disrepair. It was purchased in April, 1911, for $50,000. At that time the funds actually at Father Shealy's disposal were less than $13,000, laboriously collected in the preceding two years. With the aid of the Emigrant Savings Bank, which lent $30,000 on the property and of two friends who advanced $7,000 more, Father Shealy paid $50,000 cash to the executors of Mr. Meyer's estate and the first House of Retreats for men in the United States was an accomplished fact.

Announcement was made of this achievement at a public meeting held in May at Carnegie Hall in the presence of Archbishop Farley and the provincial of the Society of Jesus, and again the emphatic approval of the archbishop was publicly accorded to the work. The Laymen's League was busily at work obtaining members for the League and retreatants for the week-end bands, and a committee was at work organizing the School of Social Studies. In the intervals of his work as Lecturer on Jurisprudence in the Law School of Fordham University and his work as director of the week-end retreats (which were being held at Keyser Island and later at Fordham University), Father Shealy was busied throughout the spring and early summer with the details of making Fox Hill Manor ready for retreats. The house had to be largely refurnished and running repairs on a large scale were necessary. It was decided to rechristen it as "Mount Manresa" and to hold the first retreat therein beginning on September 8th—a most appropriate date. Some idea of the obstacles to be overcome may be gleaned from the fact that the last of the beds and the chairs arrived and were placed in position at 5 P.M. on that day. At 7 P.M. on September 8th, however, the provincial of the Society of Jesus, Father Joseph Hanselmann, S. J., presided in the dining room where some seventy men were assembled for the first retreat and at 8:30 P.M. Father Shealy gave the "Points" in the chapel.

An important feature of the retreat work of Mount Manresa has been the Extension Retreats given by Father Shealy each year at Philadelphia, Ogdensburg and other centres. These retreats have been largely attended. The movement begun so successfully in New York is spreading rapidly throughout the United States, and special houses have been opened in Albany (N. Y.), Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, St. Mary's (Kan.), Syracuse (N. Y.), and Trenton (N. J.), and other cities. The Passionist houses as a rule have accommodations for retreats for laymen as well as priests. The English Jesuits have six houses of retreat: at Stamford Hill, Osterley, Roehampton, Romiley, St. Asaph (Wales), and Bothwell (Scotland); while the Irish Jesuits have one at Rathfarnham Castle, Dublin.

Rhætia, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (RÆTHORUM; cf. C. E., XIII—18b), in the Canton of Grisons, Switzerland, is bounded on the South by Lombardy, on the West by the cantons of Tessin, Uri and Glarus, on the East by the Tyrol, and is entrusted to the Capuchins. It reports (1920) a total population of 10,000 inhabitants of whom 6541 are Catholic; 3621 Zwinglians; 22 churches, with resident and 27 with non-resident priests, 22 Capuchins, 36 schools with 1116 pupils, and 1 orphanage with 12 inmates. The prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Giovanni Santini, O. S. F. C., b. in Rieti, 5 August, 1867, professed 8 December, 1890, missionary in Rhætia, 14 August, 1892; prefect apostolic of Rhætia, 2 January, 1905, resigned in 1912, chaplain to the Austrian prisoners of war in January, 1916, re-elected prefect apostolic of Rhætia, 13 September, 1918. He resides at Sagens (or Thiefen Kastell).

Rhode Island, (cf. C. E., XIII—20a).—The area of the State of Rhode Island is 1248 square miles. In 1920 the population was 604,937, a gain of 11.4 per cent since 1910. Of this, 97.5 per cent was urban; 2.5 per cent was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 566.4 as against 508.5 in 1910. The largest cities are Providence, with a population of 237,595; Pawtucket 64,248; Woonsocket 43,496. According to the Federal Census (1920) the number of foreign born in Rhode Island is as follows: born in Italy 32,241; in Canada 36,412; in England 25,782; in Ireland 22,253; in Sweden 6542; in Scotland 5692; in Portugal 8624; in Russia 8055; in Germany 3126; in Poland 8158; this classification does not distinguish the Jews, who are rapidly increasing, and who in 1918 numbered 20,512. There were besides 593,980 whites, 10,036 negroes, 110 Indians and 225 Chinese. Of the population of 10 years of age and over (483,788), there were 31,312 illiterates or 6.5 per cent. Of these the foreign born numbered 171,032 (16.5 per cent).

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Manufactures.—In 1919 there were 2466 establishments (a gain of 12.6 per cent since 1914), with a total capitalization of $589,937,000; employing 155,547 workers with a payroll of $168,675,000, and an output to the value of $747,323,000. Cotton spinning and dyeing are the principal industries, also the manufacture of rubber and elastic goods. The State has deposits of graphite, lime, and building stone, the value of the stone quarried in 1917 being $518,785; of other minerals, $198,338.

Agriculture.—The general trend of agriculture is revealed in the latest agricultural census (1920), which shows a decrease in the number of farms from 5292 in 1910 to 4083 in 1920. The farmland area is 331,600 acres, of which 132,855 is in improved land. The value of all farm property is $33,636,766; of the livestock, $4,840,279; of the crops, $5,340,000.

The direct foreign commerce is still small, the exports in 1919 were valued at $426,741; the imports, $5,456,800. The total assets of the banks and trust companies in June, 1919, were $356,030,000. The State bonded debt in January, 1921, was $9,200,082, with a sinking fund of $1,397,428; the assessed value of real property, $600,000,000; of personal property, $390,000,000.

In 1919 the railroads of the State comprised 209 miles of single track and 351 miles of electric railway.

RELIGION.—The federal census of 1916 gives the following statistics of religious denominations:

Body	Members	Churches
Catholics.....	261,312	102
Protestant Episcopalians.....	20,176	60
Baptist.....	20,180	117
Methodist Episcopalians.....	7,801	41
Congregationalists.....	10,531	48
Lutherans.....	2,783	9
Free Baptists.....	514	2

Value of property: Protestant Episcopalians $1,775,430; Congregationalists $1,263,572; Baptist $1,777,880; Unitarian $257,500; Universalist $380,500; Free Baptist $35,000. For Catholic statistics see PROVIDENCE, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: Parochial schools must maintain approved standards and are subject to inspection. The State Board of Education may visit, inspect, and examine private schools at pleasure. The conditions for approval are: The term must be substantially equal to that required by law. (2.) The instruction must be in English. (3.) Thorough and efficient teaching must be given. (4.) A register must be kept and reports furnished to school committees and truant officers. The instruction in private schools must be in the subjects taught in public schools and in the English language. On designated holidays no session of any school in the State shall be held.

According to the U. S. Census (1920) there were 173,404 children of school age and 108,817 attended school (62.8 per cent.)

The number of pupils enrolled in the 2093 public elementary schools in 1919 was 83,300; of teachers, 2585; in the 163 high schools, 381 teachers and 8756 pupils. The total expenditure on education was $3,503,091. The number of school buildings is 509; the valuation of school property $12,439,076. The parochial school children in the State numbered 18,481; the attendance of the children in the parochial schools and academies was 20,066 in 1918. These schools cost in 1919 $3.79 per month for each pupil. Allowing ten months of the school year on the basis of that cost, the 18,481 parochial school children, in attending the public schools would have cost the State $699,610. Open-air schools were established in 1912. In 1917 the maximum school age was increased to sixteen years. In 1918 the national

Smith-Lever Act in relation to vocational education was passed, and another, granting State aid to towns which established courses in vocational education. Provisions were made the next year for State aid to crippled and injured children under the supervision of the Commissioner of Public Schools.

At the same time a division of Child Welfare was created in the State Board of Health and the cause of Americanisation promoted by the establishment of free night schools for the purpose of teaching English. Bible reading is neither permitted nor excluded in the public schools. There are enrolled in Brown University 89 professors and teachers and 1349 students. The appropriation for teachers' salaries for both elementary and secondary schools in 1918 was $2,159,668; for graded and high schools, $33,000.

SUNDAY LAWS.—Sunday concerts of a serious, classical, or musical nature are allowed. Milk, fruit, confectionery, and tobacco may be sold on Sunday. Amateur athletic games can be played in the open air between the hours of noon and six o'clock in the afternoon on Sunday. In 1919 laws, were passed licensing professional athletic games, thus eliminating the trouble caused by the defunct Sunday laws.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1912 a Public Utilities Commission was created, also a Board of Control and Supply to take charge of the regulation and control of State institutions. An Employer's Liability Act was passed. In 1913 the hours and conditions of working women and children were regulated. On 17 April Rhode Island granted presidential suffrage to women, the first state in the East to do so. It was decided at the same time that a person over twenty-one years of age could not unreasonably neglect to support parents who were destitute without fault of their own. The lease of prison labor to private contractors was forbidden. The State Board of Labor was created in 1919. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 6 January, 1920; the State refused to ratify the Federal Prohibition Amendment, June, 1919.

During the European War Rhode Island contributed 16,861 soldiers to the United States Army (.45 per cent). As in the case of all men from New England, the Rhode Island soldiers joined either the 26th or 76th Division at Camp Devens, Massachusetts. The summary of casualties of Rhode Island members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 15 officers, 340 men; prisoners, 35 men; wounded, 42 officers, 1130 men. At the end of the war a bonus was granted to all veterans of the war by the legislature.

Rhodes, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (RHODIENSIS; cf. C. E., I—791c; XIII—24c), comprises the Island of Rhodes and adjacent islands, and is the seat of a titular archbishopric united to the see of Malta (q. v.). The prefecture is confided to the Franciscans. The first prefect apostolic was Rt. Rev. Andrea Felici, O.F.M., who died in 1911. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Ignatius Beaufais, O.F.M., and in 1920 Rt. Rev. Bonaventura Rossetti was named prefect, succeeding Beaufais. The prefecture is now vacant, Rt. Rev. Rossetti having died 12 August, 1921. Statistics for 1921 report: 2 churches, 3 convents for men, 1 for women, 4 regular priests, 2 lay brothers, 1 college for boys with 10 teachers and 200 students, 1 for girls with 7 teachers and 155 students, 1 elementary school with 5 teachers and 102 pupils, 1 commercial school with 5 teachers and 70 pupils, 1 orphanage, 1 refuge in the course of construction, and a Catholic population of 1000 souls. The island came under the Italian dominion in 1912; they erected Italian schools both elementary and technical in charge of the Christian Brothers. During the World War 2 priests and one lay brother served at the front in the Italian army.

Ribeirao Preto, DIOCESE OF (DE RIBEIRAO PRETO; cf. C. E., XIII—31a), in the state of São Paulo, Brazil, is suffragan of São Paulo. It is governed by Rt. Rev. Alberto-José Gonçalves, first bishop, b. 20 July, 1859, ordained 17 September, 1882; he served as rector of Curitiba where he constructed the church now used as the Cathedral, became vicar general of the diocese, a deputy and president of the Chamber of Parana, federal senator for Parana, secretary to the Brazilian Senate from 1895-1906, prothonotary apostolic 23 August, 1897, decorated with the cross Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice, appointed 5 December, 1906, consecrated 2 February, 1909. There are in the diocese (1920), 45 parishes, 85 churches and chapels, 50 secular priests, 12 seminarians, 5 communities of men with 18 religious, and 10 of women with 60 nuns; 6 Catholic schools with 600 pupils; a total population of 800,000 of whom only 1000 are non-Catholic.

Richmond, DIOCESE OF (RICHMONDIENSIS), comprises an area of 34,808 square miles in the States of Virginia and West Virginia, U. S. A. Rt. Rev. Augustine Van De Vyver died 16 October, 1911, and was buried on the twenty-second anniversary of his consecration as Bishop of Richmond. He was succeeded by the present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Dennis Joseph O'Connell, a priest of this diocese who had been consecrated titular Bishop of Sebaste and auxiliary to the Bishop of San Francisco, 24 December, 1908, and who was installed as Bishop of Richmond, 19 March, 1912, in the presence of Cardinal Gibbons, several archbishops and bishops, the Governor of Virginia, the Mayor and other notables. Bishop O'Connell was born in Donoughmore, Ireland, 1849, ordained 1877, appointed a prelate of the Holy See 1887, served as rector of the American College, Rome, and later of the Catholic University at Washington which position he filled when called to the episcopacy. The diocese has made remarkable progress under the able administration of Bishop O'Connell; additional religious have been brought into this territory, many new churches have been built, parishes established and schools erected, notable among these, the Sacred Heart Cathedral School which is in keeping with the majestic cathedral itself.

Upon the entrance of this country into the World War the bishop placed every diocesan and parish organization at the disposal of the President, and before the draft was ordered the flower of Catholic youth was enlisted in the service. The priests stationed at or near the various army and navy posts, did valiant work as volunteer chaplains; particular mention should be given to the work of the Oblate Fathers, who, upon the invitation of Bishop O'Connell and financed by the Knights of Columbus, established headquarters for five chaplains who attended Jamestown naval base, St. Helena Training Station at Berkley, Virginia Beach rifle range, the Naval hospital and the Marine barracks at Portsmouth as well as various warships and transports in the Hampton Roads district. The Knights of Columbus of Virginia did splendid work both at home and abroad, and a home established by them in conjunction with the McGill Catholic Union, in Richmond, became the centre of patriotic activities for all Richmond Catholic societies. As an example of the consistently fine work done throughout the diocese we may take the records of the Catholic Club of Portsmouth which show that on New Year's day, 1919, dinners were served to 3500 uniformed men.

By 1921 statistics the diocese comprises 45 priories, 7 convents of women, 80 secular priests and 16 regulars, 65 Brothers, 305 Sisters, 30 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 100 students, 15 high schools with 60 teachers and an attendance of 275 boys and 425 girls, 24 academies with 120 teachers and 1000 boys and 1400 girls, 35 elementary schools with 170 teachers and 6000 pupils, and 3 industrial schools with 46 teachers and 380 pupils. The charitable institutions include 1 home for the aged, 3 orphan asylums, 1 hospital, 1 refuge home for boys and 1 refuge home for girls. The Richmond Clerical Fund Association and the Eucharistic League are organized, and among the laity the Knights of Columbus, Holy Name, and Junior Holy Name Societies, Hibernian and St. Vincent de Paul Societies with women's auxiliaries, Boy Scouts, Children of Mary, Angels of the Blessed Sacrament, Alumnian Association and local parish societies of men, women and children are established. The Catholic population numbers 44,000 of whom 700 are negroes; the whites comprise Americans, Irish, German, Italians, English, a few French and small numbers of Bohemians, Poles, Slovaks and Syrians.

Ridolfi, FORTUNATUS, Regular Cleric of St. Paul, b. at Zenano, in the Diocese of Brixen, on 8 November, 1777; d. 8 April, 1850; son of Joseph and Angela (Tonni) Ridolfi. In 1887 he was sent to study in the College at Monza, conducted by the suppressed Jesuits. Some years later he manifested his desire to become a religious but the revolutionary troubles of that time prevented him from carrying out his purpose. In 1799 he was compelled to join the army at the time of the establishment of the Cisalpine Republic, but he remained untouched by the corruption around him. On 30 September of that year he entered the Barnabite novitiate, after which he studied theology at Milan and took his solemn vows in 1802. He was a professor of literature at Cremona and elsewhere, but when the decrees of the French Government, which then ruled Lombardy, suppressed all religious orders, he found refuge in the house of his uncle who was an arch-priest of Brixen. In 1816, during which what was almost a famine desolated Lombardy, Ridolfi appeared like an angel of charity in aiding the distressed. As the religious orders had been re-established in Italy in 1815, he made haste to join his brethren in the college of Carrobrole, where he concerned himself chiefly in the work of inaugurating and directing oratories for the youth of both sexes. The cause of his beatification and canonization was introduced on 12 November, 1919.

Rieti, DIOCESE OF (RIETINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—54a), in the province of Perugia, Southern Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. Rt. Rev. Bonaventura Quintarelli, who came to the see in 1895, died 31 October, 1915, and was succeeded 9 Dec., 1915, by Rt. Rev. Tranquillo Guarneri, b. at Castelnovo in 1871. He resigned and was transferred to the titular see of Europus 16 June, 1916, and is now bishop of Acquapendente. He has been succeeded by Mgr. Francesco Sidoli, b. at Ceresota, Diocese of Piacenza, 2 Nov., 1874, elected 20 June, 1916, and consecrated 25 July following. According to 1920 statistics there are 160 parishes, 142,100 Catholics, served by 200 secular and 40 regular priests, 50 seminarians, 20 Brothers, 100 Sisters, 402 churches or chapels.

Riga, DIOCESE OF (RIEENSIS), in Lettonia or Latvia, depending directly on the Holy See, revived on 22 September, 1918, by separation from the Archdiocese of Mohileff. It is governed by Mgr. Antonius Springowic, b. at Rositten, Latgale in Lettgalia, in the Diocese of Riga, 31 October, 1876. He studied in the ecclesiastical seminary at Petrograd, was ordained in 1901, and was named dean of Lixna in April, 1920, in succession to Mgr. O'Rourke, who resigned. The Diocese of Riga comprises the Republics of Lettonia and Esthonia. It has: 130 parishes; 175 churches; 145 secular priests; 412,356 Catholics (330,574 Letts; 39,244 Poles; 23,036 White Russians; 16,338 Lithuanians; and 3164 of German, Esthonian and other nationalities); 1 seminary, 36 students; 1 boys' college, 5 teachers, 50 pupils; 2 elementary schools, 5 teachers, 200 pupils; 1 home for the aged; 3 orphanages. There are about 1000 state primary schools, 50 gymnasias, and 3 prisons, in all of which ministrations of the clergy are permitted. The clergy have a cooperative society for the purchase of church supplies. Among the laity there are: a Catholic Association of Lettish Farmers, a general Lettish Catholic Association, and a society for the publication of Catholic works. Catholic periodicals published are a weekly, "Latgolas Words," and a monthly, "Wairogs." Among those who died are Father Casimir Skrynda and Antonius Skrynda, a physician, who for years devoted themselves to the religious and patriotic education of the Lettish youth and the promotion of Catholic and Lettish writings. Five priests, Fathers Marcinjan, Biksis, Kerovic, Tukiss, and Petrus Osien were put to death in the religious persecution carried out by the Russian Maximalists. On 18 November, 1918, the Letts proclaimed their independence of Russia and were at once attacked by the Maximalists, whom they fought until 1920. During the European War the clergy and laity made every effort to alleviate suffering especially among the refugee poor. They raised over 2,000,000 Russian roubles for that purpose. During the war when the Letts were conscripted to fight for Russia, they quietly organized themselves into cohorts, which later formed the nucleus of the first national army. In 1920, two years after the erection of the Diocese of Riga, Mgr. Antonius Springowic was consecrated at Aglona in Lettgalia, before the miraculous image of the Blessed Virgin, in the presence of the civil authorities, 50 priests, and about 60,000 of the faithful.

Rimini, DIOCESE OF (ARIMINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—57d), in the province of Forli, northern Italy, suffragan of Ravenna. It is still under the administration of Mgr. Vincenzo Scozzoli, who came to the see in 1900. Statistics for 1920 credit it with 124 parishes, 125,400 Catholics, ministered to by 336 secular and 56 regular priests, 64 seminarians, 15 Brothers, 183 Sisters, 254 churches or chapels.

Rimouski, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI GERMANI DE RIMOUSKI; cf. C. E., XIII—58d), Canada, suffragan of Quebec. Mgr. André Albert Blais, who came to the see in 1891, died 23 January, 1919, and was succeeded 18 Dec., 1919, by Mgr. Joseph-Romuald Léonard, b. at St. Joseph de Carleton in 1876, ordained 1899, consecrated 25 Feb., 1920. The Catholic population of the diocese is 145,758. There are 198 secular priests, 11 regular priests, 5 religious communities of men and 10 of women. There are 105 parishes and 135 churches and chapels, 1 upper seminary with 30 seminarians, 1 lower seminary with 338 students, 12 convents and academies, 1 home for the aged and infirm, 1 orphanage, 1 hospital.

Rioabamba (OR BOLIVAR), DIOCESE OF (BOLIVARENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—61d), suffragan of Quito, Ecuador. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Carlos-Maria Xavier de la Torre, b. at Quito, 12 November, 1873, ordained 19 December, 1896, appointed Bishop of Laja, 30 December, 1911, consecrated 26 May, 1912, transferred to the Diocese of Riobamba 21 August, 1919, to succeed Bishop Ulpiano Perez y Quinones (b. 4 August, 1863; d. 27 December, 1918). Statistics for 1921 give: 37 parishes, 44 churches, 1 mission in Macos, 1 monastery for women, 3 convents for men, 7 convents for women, 10 Christian Brothers, 19 Sisters, 11 seminarians at the Seminary of Mayor de Quito, 8 colleges for men with 260 students, 6 for women with 40 teachers and 700 students, 1 normal school, 80 elementary schools, 2 asylums, 2 hospitals, 2 charitable centres. One Catholic periodical is published. The fiftieth anniversary of the diocese was celebrated in 1915, and the Basilica of the Immaculate Conception of Jesus was consecrated in the same year. On 11 November, 1920, the centenary of the independence of Riobamba was celebrated.

Ripatransone, DIOCESE OF (RAPANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—62d), in the Province of Ascoli-Piceno, Central Italy, suffragan of Fermo. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Luigi Boschi, b. 1853, appointed bishop 5 May, 1902, nominated administrator apostolic of Montalto 25 July, 1910. There are (1922) in the diocese: 15 parishes, 70 churches, 65 secular and 6 regular priests, 2 convents for men, 2 for women, 20 Sisters, 1 seminary with 28 seminarians, 3 colleges for women, 1 normal school, 12 elementary schools, 1 orphanage for girls, 6 asylums for children, 6 hospitals, and a Catholic population of 43,000 souls. The Popular Union is organized among the laity.

Ritualists.—The influence of the Ritualists in Anglican church life is evident in many ways in recent years. Numerous wayside shrines or "Calvaries," instead of the bronze tablets in the vestibules, are found today in England, to commemorate the fallen soldiers, while occasionally prayers are offered for the dead. In religious communities particularly are found doctrine and practice difficult to distinguish from the true Catholic deposit: masses are said for the repose of the souls of the dead; the saints are invoked and honored and relics venerated; the Blessed Virgin is to be worshipped with hyperdulia and belief is inculcated in her Assumption and Immaculate Conception; the Sacrament is reserved in chapel for the adoration of the religious, and in 1916, 1000 ministers petitioned that reservation for adoration by the people be legalized. The growth of religious life itself is significant: since the Oxford movement about thirty-five Anglican sisterhoods have been founded in England among which are found such titles as the "Sisterhood of St. Mary the Virgin," the "Community of the Blessed Virgin Mary," that of the "Holy Name of Jesus," and in 1907 there was founded at Cowley, Oxford, an enclosed Order of the Love of God. There were about twelve orders of men founded in the same period, but with far less success. According to the "Dictionary of English Church History" there were more women in (Anglican) religious orders in England in 1912 than at the time of the suppression under Henry VIII; this work claims 1300 Sisters in 1912, and places the number at the suppression as 745; Gasquet (Henry VIII and the English Monasteries, p. 360), lists 1560 nuns at that period; naturally we must admit a notable increase of religious in the Anglican Church, but in comparing the present state to that at the time of Henry VIII we must not forget the vast difference in population at the two periods specified.

A significant event in Anglican religious circles was the submission to Rome in a body in February, 1913, of the Anglican Benedictine monks of Caldey Island, and the community of nuns at St. Bride's Milford Haven, affiliated with the former. The former were a foundation in 1898, directed by Aelred Carlyle, under the special sanction of Archbishop Temple, to revive the strict rule of St. Benedict. The community began in the Isle of Dogs, moved later to Painsthorpe, and finally to Caldey. The nuns were originally the Community of St. Mary and St. Scholastica, founded by Father Ignatius in 1868 to observe the strict rule of St. Benedict. They separated from his community later, moved in 1893 to Malling Abbey and in 1911, to St. Bride's Abbey, Milford Haven, after having in 1907 become affiliated with the Caldey Island Benedictines. The founder of the Caldey community, Dom Aelred Carlyle, O.S.B., was 10 Aug., 1914, appointed by the Holy See the first abbot of the new Catholic community.

Despite what Catholics may consider Catholic tendencies in Anglicanism there is a decidedly strong current of opposition to the Ritualistic or "Catholic" party in the English Church today. The Kikuyu incident and its outcome (see ANGLICANISM), and various decisions, almost uniformly against the High Church party, show this. In 1909, in the case of the Bishop of Oxford v. Henly, the reservation of the blessed sacrament and the service of benediction were held unlawful, and the defendant, who did not appear, was deprived. Again in the Open Letter of the Bishop of Zanzibar, regarding the Kikuyu Conference, there is cited the case of Dr. Langford James, who was "inhibited from ministering" in the diocese of St. Albans (the very diocese to which the editor of "Foundations" was attached), because "he had invoked our Lady and two other saints." Furthermore the bishop announced his "refusal both of ordination and jurisdiction to any who practice these invocations." Finally the greatest weight behind the movement to revise the Book of Common Prayer (q. v.) is probably that of those who wish so to word the Ornaments Rubric and other passages that in no way can it be held that there is any official Anglican sanction for such Catholic practices as those mentioned in this article. The conclusion seems inevitable that whatever may be the sentiments and private beliefs of many good Anglicans in the "Catholic" party today, the almost uniform trend of official decision is against them and on the side of the Low Church or "Protestant" party.

GERALD SHAUGHNESSY.

Rochester, DIOCESE OF (ROFFENENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—102d), in New York, U. S. A., covers an area of 7081 sq. miles, and is suffragan to New York. It has 62 parishes, 111 churches with resident priests, 42 missions with churches, 19 chapels, 218 secular and 6 regular priests, 1 theological seminary for secular priests with 208 seminarians, 1 preparatory seminary with 107 seminarians, 2 academies, 3 high schools with 1524 students, 3 orphan asylums with 480 inmates, 1 home for the aged with 159 inmates, 4 hospitals, and a Catholic population of 185,876. The diocese is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Thomas Francis Hickey, D.D., b. at Rochester, New York, 4 February, 1861, ordained 25 March, 1884, vicar general and rector of the Cathedral of Rochester, appointed titular Bishop of Berenice and coadjutor to the Bishop of Rochester, 18 February, 1905, consecrated 24 May following, succeeded to the see 18 January, 1909, upon the death of Bishop McQuaid.

Rochet (cf. C. C., XIII, 104).—by a motu proprio of 25 April, 1920, the Holy See granted all regular bishops the right to wear the rochet, but when they are in the Eternal City they must always have a mantellette over the rochet.

Rockford, DIOCESE OF (ROCKFORDIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—105c), in Illinois, U. S. A., covers an area of 6867 sq. miles, with a Catholic population of 61,043. It is suffragan to Chicago. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. Peter James Muldoon, D.D., b. 10 October, 1863, ordained 13 December, 1886, appointed titular Bishop of Tamassus and auxiliary Bishop of Chicago 10 June, 1901, consecrated 25 July of the same year, transferred to Rockford 28 September, 1908, proclaimed 29 April, 1909, refused transfer to Monterey and Los Angeles at the Consistory of 22 March, 1917. Statistics for 1922 report: 77 churches with resident priests, 22 missions with churches, 3 stations, 10 chapels, 214 secular priests, 21 ecclesiastical students, 1 academy for boys with 30 pupils; 1 for girls with 60 pupils, 4 high schools with 450 students, 33 parochial schools with 6473 pupils, 1 orphan asylum with 206 inmates, 2 homes for old people, and 6 hospitals. Educational and charitable institutions are in charge of the religious communities established in the diocese.

Rockhampton, DIOCESE OF (ROCKHAMPTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—105c), in Queensland, Australia, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Brisbane. Rt. Rev. James Duhig, who came to this see in 1905, was created titular Archbishop of Amida and coadjutor with right of succession, to the Archbishop of Brisbane, 26 February, 1912. He was succeeded by the present incumbent Rt. Rev. Joseph Shiel, born in Meath, Ireland, 2 February, 1873, ordained at Maynooth, 19 June, 1898, volunteered for the Australian Missions and served in the archdiocese of Melbourne and the diocese of Rockhampton and Ballarat; consecrated Bishop of Rockhampton 26 January, 1913. In September, 1912, the golden jubilee of the diocese was celebrated and the following year on 11 May, the enthronement of Bishop Shiel took place. The apostolic delegate, Mgr. Cattaneo visited the diocese 22 June, 1918, and the following day the foundation was laid for the new St. Patrick's church which replaces the first church in Rockhampton. During the World War three priests of this diocese and a full quota of the Catholic young men served at the front. Through the death of Rev. Julien Plornel, 15 March, 1921, the diocese lost one of its pioneer priests who had served in this territory for thirty-five years. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers about 40,000, the majority of whom are of Irish origin. By 1921 statistics there are: 20 parishes, 1 convent for men (Marist Fathers), 38 secular priests, 200 sisters, 7 high schools with 14 teachers and attendance of 150 boys and 100 girls, 17 boarding schools with 250 boys and 430 girls, 35 elementary schools with 150 teachers and attendance of 5700, 1 orphanage receives one shilling day from the government for each child.

Roman Colleges (cf. C. E., XIII—131). Under Pius X certain changes were made affecting the Seminario Romano: the philosophical and theological faculties were transferred to the Lateran and renamed Seminario maggiore; the faculty of law is in the Piazza S. Apollinare, 49; and the classical school or Seminario minore at St. Peters. The Seminario Pio has been incorporated in the Seminario maggiore at the Lateran. There are two new colleges: the Collegio Pontificio Etiopico, for the Abyssinians, which was founded on 1 October, 1919, in Piazza S. Martin, and is under the care of the Capuchin Friars; and the Collegio Pontificio per le Missioni Estere Italiane, for the Italian foreign missions, founded on 13 March, 1914, and enlarged in 1921; which is in the via della Scrofa. The Collegio Beda, in the via Pietro Cavallini, which was founded in 1892, was separated from the English College in 1917.

Roman Congregations (cf. C. E., XIII—136a).—The congregation of the Holy Office (C. E., XII—137) is now charged with the duties of the Congregation of the Index, which was suppressed on 25 March, 1917; it alone is competent to deal with questions relating to the Eucharistic fast of priests celebrating Mass. On the other hand, what relates to the use and concession of indulgences, except dogmatic pronouncements regarding new prayers and devotions, has been transferred from the Holy Office to the Apostolic Penitentiary.

The Congregation of the Consistory (C. E., XIII—139) has now a third cardinal ex-officio member, namely the prefect of the Congregation of Seminaries and of Universities of Studies, and a new ex-officio consultant, the secretary of the last-mentioned congregation. It no longer decides questions of competency arising between the various congregations, tribunals, and offices of the Roman Curia, these being settled by a body of cardinals selected by the pope each time a dispute arises.

The Congregation of Propaganda (C. E., XII—456; XIII—143) has jurisdiction also over societies of ecclesiastics and seminaries founded exclusively for the training of missionaries for foreign missions, particularly in connection with their rules and administration and the granting of concessions regarding the ordination of the alumni. It has, no longer, any jurisdiction over Catholics of Eastern Rites, even in questions involving Latins. For them the Congregation of the Eastern Church has been established with the same power over the subjects and churches of the Eastern Rites as the other congregations have over those of Latin Rite, respecting, however, the jurisdiction of the Holy Office.

The Congregation for Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs (C. E., XIII—145) is charged with the formation or division of dioceses and the filling of vacant sees, when civil governments have to be consulted on these matters; it deals, moreover, with affairs entrusted to its examination by the pope through the cardinal secretary of State, when foreign civil law or papal concordats are involved.

On 4 November, 1915, the Congregation of Seminaries and of Universities of Studies was formed to have jurisdiction over everything pertaining to seminaries, which previously had been controlled by the Congregation of the Consistory; it supervises the government and course of studies in Catholic faculties or universities, including those directed by religious; it grants permission to confer academic degrees and may itself confer them on men distinguished for their attainments. The cardinal secretary of the Consistory is an ex-officio member, and the consistorial assessor an ex-officio consultant of this congregation. During a papal vacancy the sacred congregations retain their ordinary powers; they may exercise these freely in matters of minor importance; in more serious affairs they should await the election of the new pope, but if the matter is very urgent it may be settled provisionally by the prefect and a few of the cardinals of the congregation to whom the pope would likely have entrusted it. They may not, however, deal with matters which during the lifetime of the pope they cannot decide without consulting the sovereign pontiff or in virtue of special and extraordinary faculties, which the pope is accustomed to grant the prefects or secretaries of the congregations.

Roseau (or CHARLOTTETOWN), DIOCESE OF (ROSENENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—191b), Island of Dominica, British Antilles, is suffragan of Port-of-Spain. Rt. Rev. Philip Schelfhaut having died 22 May, 1921, the see is still (1922) vacant. There are in the diocese 17 parishes, 24 churches, 9 chapels, 19 priests, 39,600 Catholics, 4 convents for women, 3 high schools with 13 teachers and 160 pupils, 6 elementary schools with 24 teachers and 1200 pupils. There are charitable institutions but not under Catholic control. The ministry of priests is admitted in public institutions. A grant is given to some of the parochial schools, but the three convent high schools receive nothing from the Government. The "Ecclesiastical Bulletin" of Roseau (monthly), and the "Dominica Chronicle" (twice a week) are published in the diocese. Mgr. P. Sivienné after laboring for forty-nine years as secular priest, died in 1912; Gustave S. Delisle, a man remarkable for his devotedness to church and religion, died in October, 1918. On 1 April, 1917, the Danish Islands were transferred to the United States. In 1919 the Redemptorist Fathers extended their mission work outside the diocese of Roseau to St. Lucia, Guadeloupe, and as far as Haiti. There is great enthusiasm everywhere for the missions. During the World War 170 Catholic men enlisted for active service, of whom 10 fell on the battlefield. The clergy, in co-operation with the laity, endeavored to raise several thousands of dollars, which amount was sent to the British Red Cross especially, also to the French and Belgian Red Cross.

Rosenau, DIOCESE OF. See ROZNAVA.

Ross, DIOCESE OF (ROSSENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—201d), in Ireland, includes a part of Cork and is suffragan of Cashel. Rt. Rev. Denis Kelly, consecrated 9 May, 1897, still fills the see. He resides at Skibbereen. Diocesan statistics for 1920 report a Catholic population of 31,801 (1911 census), 3026 non-Catholic. There are 11 parishes, 28 priests and curates, 22 parochial and district churches, 3 convents, 71 primary schools with 6800 pupils. The Societies of St. Vincent de Paul are organized in the diocese.

Rottenburg, DIOCESE OF (ROTTENBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—207), includes Wurtemberg and is suffragan of Freiburg im Breisgau. The diocese is divided into 715 parishes, 146 chaplaincies, 19 mission stations and 122 vicariates; there are 1158 active and 102 pensioned secular clergy, and 771,811 Catholics. After the abdication of the King in 1918, the bishop demanded the provisional government to re-admit the Franciscans at Weggental, to reinstall the Redemptorists in the former house of the Jesuits on the Schönberg, near Ellwangen and the Recollects in the old abbey of Weingarten. At a meeting of the council of the provisional government, held 23 Dec., 1918, it was unanimously voted to permit the return of the religious orders of men who had been banished since the Secularization Act in 1803. There are now in the diocese the following orders of men: Benedictines at Neresheim, 16 priests, 16 Brothers, 8 novices; and branches of the following orders who have houses outside of the diocese: Franciscans at Weggental near Rottenburg, 4 priests, 3 Brothers; Franciscans at Weingarten, 5 priests, 3 Brothers; Redemptorists at Schönberg, near Ellwangen, 6 priests, 1 brother; Jesuits at Ulm, 1 priest; Jesuits at Stuttgart, 2 priests; Society of the Divine Savior (Saviorians) at Wurzach, 3 priests; Oblates of the Immaculate Conception at Aufhofen, 4 priests, 2 Brothers; scholasticate of the Congregation of the Sacred Heart at Schreheim, 1 priest, 2 Brothers; Pallotini Fathers at Gmünd; Capuchins at Laudenbach, Christian Brothers at Dietenheim. In 1921 the following orders and congregations of women had establishments in the diocese; Congregation of the Third Order of St. Francis at Bonlanden, 150 Sisters, 2 branch houses; Sisters of St. Francis from Heiligenbronn, 228 Sisters, 3 branch houses; School Sisters of Our Lady with a mother-house at Ravensburg, 50 Sisters and a house at Wurzach, 30 Sisters; Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis from Reute, 1136 Sisters, 182 branches, and at Siessen 480 sisters, 34 branch houses; Sisters of Mercy of St. Vincent de Paul at Untermarchtal, 1680 Sisters of Charity, 215 branch houses; Congregation of the Salesians at Obermarchtal, 16 Sisters; branch-house of the Sisters of the Holy Cross from Strasburg in Donsdorf, 14 sisters; branch house of the Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus of Vienna in Kirchheim (16 Sisters), branch of the Sisters of Charity of the Holy Cross of Strasburg at Donsdorf (14 Sisters); branch of the Servants of the Most Sacred Heart of Jesus of Vienna at Kirchenheim (3 Sisters).

In 1921 the diocese had the following institutions: 208 day nurseries, 216 needlework schools, 8 cooking schools, 3 asylums, 4 asylums for children, 4 reformatories, 8 homes for girls, 3 homes for working girls, 27 hospitals, 1 home for the aged, 1 institution for the blind, 2 institutions for the deaf and dumb 3 for idiots, 3 for the insane, 1 for incurables, 2 for epileptics, 4 houses of retreat, 4 sanitoriums. For the priests the following associations have been established: Association for the support of sick priests, Marian Congregation of Priests, Unio Apostolica, Unio Cleri pro missionibus, Association for Priestly Perseverance, Association of the Eucharistic League. The laity have established the following associations: 95 boys and young Mens' Associations, 60 Marian Congregations for young women, 220 Young Womens' Sodalities, 45 Journeymen's Unions (Gesellenvereine) 7 Merchants' associations, 13 Civil employees associations 164 workmen's associations, 56 working women's associations, 236 mothers' associations, Third Order of St. Francis with 18,600 members.

During the war 110 priests were employed in caring for the soldiers in the following capacities; 32 were active at the front, 31 were stationed at sub-headquarters and in field hospitals, 47 were employed in sanitary service. Several hundred sisters of various charitable orders were also active in sanitary service. The present incumbent of the diocese of Rottenburg is the Rt. Rev. Paul William de Keppler, b. at Gmünd, Swabia, 28 Sept., 1852, ordained, 2 Aug., 1875, professor of Exegesis and Scripture at Tübingen 1883, and of moral theology in 1889, also professor of moral theology at Freiburg in 1894, elected bishop of Rottenburg 11 Nov., 1898, consecrated 18 Jan., 1899, made a prelate assistant to the Pontifical Throne, 28 April, 1918.

Rouen, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ROTHOMAGENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—208d), includes the Department of Seine-Inferieure, France. The archdiocese is governed by Most Rev. Andre du Bois de la Villerabel, who also bears the title of Primate of Normandy, b. 28 June, 1864, of a very old family of the diocese of St. Brieuc, ordained in 1887, director of the Semaine Religieuse from 1891-1902, vicar-general in 1906, appointed Bishop of Amiens 1 June, 1915, consecrated 29 July, promoted at the Consistory of 16 December, 1920, to the Archdiocese of Rouen, took possession 25 January, 1921, succeeding Cardinal Louis-Ernest Dubois, promoted to Paris. In March, 1921, Mgr. Villerabel took possession of the old episcopal palace of his predecessors. Statistics for 1920 report: 63 curacies, 599 succursal parishes, 53 vicariates, 30 vicariate chapels, 17 communal chapels, and 2 parish chapels. On 16 October, 1921, took place the celebration of the erection of Notre Dame de Bon-Secours into a minor basilica, accorded by the brief of 28 March, 1919.

Routhier, ADOLPHE, Canadian lawyer, b. 1839 at St. Placide, Quebec, d. 19 June, 1920. He received the degrees of LL.D. and Lit.D. from Laval University. He was admitted to the Canadian bar 1861, became Professor of International Law at Laval University, Judge of the Superior Court of Quebec (1873-1904) and Chief Justice (1904-6), President of the Court of Admiralty for the Province of Quebec from 1904 and was knighted 1911. He was made Knight Commander of St. Gregory by Pius IX and a Grand Commander of St. Gregory by Leo XIII. He wrote a number of volumes in prose and verse under the pen name of "Jean Picquefort."

ROSNAVA (OR ROSENAU), DIOCESE OF (ROSENAVIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—192b), suffragan of Eger.—The diocese suffered greatly from the ravages of the war, and moreover was called upon in 1919 to fight against the invading Bolsheviks. The schools devoted themselves to making warm clothing for the soldiers, and various associations were formed among clergy and laity for tending the needy. The creation of the new republic of Czechoslovakia divided the diocese into two parts—Hungarian and Slavonic; the episcopal see remains in Czechoslovakia and 19 parishes in Hungary fall under its administration, the Apostolic See having refused to dismember the diocese. Of special note are the following recently deceased: Bishop Louis Balas de Sipek (d. 1920), who ably governed the diocese through the crucial period of the war; Rev. Anthony Szuszai (d. 1917), pastor of Dobsina and ecclesiastical author of merit; Paul Vener and Martin Gobl, cathedral canons; Adalvert Serenyi (d. 1919), minister of agriculture and commerce during the war.

The statistics of 1910 give the total population of the diocese as 372,914, divided as follows: Catholics 204,076; Greek Uniate 10,140; Greek Orthodox 747; Lutherans 100,571; Calvinists 45,308; Jews 11,921; Unitarians 2; Baptists 38; Nazarenes 111. There are 165 secular and 22 regular priests; 99 parishes and 180 churches; 1 monastic house for men; 3 convents for men and 4 for women; 1 seminary; 151 normal schools with 202 teachers and 14,000 students; 1 asylum and 1 orphanage; 4 hospitals; 4 religious organizations among the clergy and 6 among the laity; 1 Catholic periodical. The Government supports the Catholic institutions.

Rumania; (cf. C. E., XIII—224d).—A monarchy in Southeastern Europe which has an area of 122,282 square miles and a population of about 8,631,000. The present state includes Moldavia (14,170 square miles), Grand Wallachia (29,810 square miles), Oltenia and Dobrudja (8969 square miles); the departments of Durostor and Caliacra (2969 square miles), ceded by the Treaty of Bucharest in 1913, Bessarabia (17,146 square miles), joined in March, 1918; Bukovina (4030 square miles), joined in November, 1918, and Transylvania (22,312 square miles) in December, 1918. The largest cities are Bucharest, with a population in 1917 of 308,987; Chisinau, 114,100; Cernauti, 87,128; Ismail, 85,600; Iasi (Jassy), 76,120; Galatz, 73,512; Timisivara, 72,223; Braila, 65,911. In 1918 there were 103,072 births, 297,310 deaths, 57,345 marriages, and in 1919, 865 divorces were granted.

RELIGION.—Of the total population of Rumania in 1918, 9,695,714 belonged to the Orthodox Church; 1,456,147 were Greek Catholics, 1,483,929 were Roman Catholics, 1,344,970 Protestants, 17,596 Armenians, 834,344 Jews, and 44,087 Mohammedans. The government of the Orthodox Church rests with 4 archbishops, the first being called the Primate of Rumania, the second, the Archbishop of Moldavia; the third, of Transylvania, and the fourth of Bukovina; besides these there were 10 bishops of the National Church. Transylvania has a Greek Catholic archbishop and 3 bishops. The clergy of the National Orthodox Church are paid by the State; those of other denominations, subventioned by the State. Religious liberty prevails throughout the country. The Catholic population is divided among the Archdiocese of Jassy and the dioceses of Bucharest, Csanad, Nagy-Várad, Transylvania and Szathmar.

ECONOMICS.—In 1921 extensive agrarian reforms, foundations of which were laid in 1917, were taken in hand by the government. It was ordered that all estates of 500 hectares in Rumania proper, and of over 100 hectares in Bessarabia, Bukovina, and Transylvania, should be distributed to the peasantry, who were required to pay 65% of the pre-war value, the State paying the remaining 35%; time for payment to extend over a period of 45 years. In 1920 a series of paralysing strikes culminated in an attempt to overthrow the government. The scheme was defeated by the Premier, General Averescu, who caused the arrest of all Socialist and Syndicalist leaders who had endorsed the Third International. By his order all technical workers were called to the colors and placed under military discipline. The chief crops with their area and production for 1920 were: Wheat, 2,095,890 acres, 630,000 tons; rye, 183,675 acres, 52,000 tons; barley, 1,053,736 acres, 460,000 tons; oats, 971,102 acres, 425,000 tons; maize, 4,051,494 acres, 1,773,000 tons; tobacco, 11,250 acres, 5000 tons. In 1919 the imports were valued at £143,317,825; the exports, £4,115,647. The revenue for 1921-22 was estimated at £208,800,000, and the expenditure, £199,250,035.

EDUCATION.—Education is free and compulsory, as far as possible. In 1918-19 there were 5764 elementary schools with 11,088 teachers and 692,896 pupils. The same year educational institutions were as follows: for boys, 56 lyceums, 13 gymnasiums and 7 seminaries, with a total of 1287 teachers and 44,983 pupils; for girls, 66 (12 state and 54 private) high schools with 1051 teachers and 9584 pupils; 12 normal schools for men and 4 for women; 75 professional schools for boys and 54 for girls; 25 commercial schools, 25 agricultural schools, and 4 universities at Bucharest, Cluj in Transylvania (founded in 1919), Iasi (Jassy), and Cernauti (Cernowitz) in Bukovina, (founded in 1920). In Transylvania extreme bitterness resulted from a Government decree in 1921 requiring Magyar children to attend Rumanian schools.

DEFENCE.—Military service in Rumania is compulsory and universal, from the ages of 21 to 46. The Rumanian losses in killed and missing during the war amounted to 335,706. In January, 1921, the approximate strength of the army was 250,000 men. The public debt of Rumania amounted on April 1, 1921, to 20,311,293,312 lei (1 lei = $1.93 normal exchange), of which 3,733,862,452 lei constitutes the consolidated debt, and 121,500,000 lei the floating debt. This is exclusive of the proportions of the debts of Austria-Hungary and Russia, which have been assumed by Rumania, the total of which is about 10,000,000,000 lei.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Notwithstanding the efforts of the government, railway transportation at the end of 1920 was still almost as impossible as in 1914. The bridge at Cernavoda (over the Borea) connecting the interior of the country with Constanta, the only all-year port of Rumania, was not repaired in 1921. Motor transport has been attempted with little success. The railway mileage in 1920 was 7240, all worked by the State, which also supervises the navigation on the Danube and Black Sea.

GOVERNMENT.—In 1920 the national Cormals of Transylvania, Bukovina, and Bessarabia, were dissolved and the entire state was subdivided into departments, with prefects nominated directly from Bucharest. In the reduction of the number of deputies in the chamber from 548 to 324 the Transylvanians lost more seats in proportion than the old kingdom, and charged discrimination. The present ruler is Ferdinand I, who succeeded King Carol on 11 October, 1914:

WORLD WAR.—At the outset of the struggle Rumania preserved a strict neutrality, awaiting the outcome of the struggle before she cast her lot with either party. In April, 1916, when Teuton fortunes appeared most favorable, the Rumanian minister at Berlin signed a convention with Germany providing for free exchange of domestic products. However, on 16 August, she signed a secret treaty with the Entente, agreeing to break off all economic relations with Germany, to declare war, and to begin an offensive in 10 days; in return, the Allies promised her military support and Bukovina, Transylvania, and the Banat of Temesvar. On 27 August, 1916, war was declared on Austria-Hungary. To crush Rumania, the German commander, Field Marshal Paul von Hindenburg, collected a composite Bulgar-Turco-Teutonic army. Meanwhile, the Rumanian General Staff, counting on General Sarrail in Macedonia to engage the attention of Bulgaria (in alliance with Austria), and upon Russia's promise to inaugurate an offensive in Bukovina and thereby prevent the shifting of Austro-German troops from Poland and Galicia, threw the bulk of its available forces into Transylvania, with little regard for the possibility of counterattacks. The Rumanians pressed heavily on the Wallachian and Moldavian fronts, and from Moldavia, they swiftly penetrated into eastern Transylvania. Passing into Wallachia, they took Orsova and marched to Mehadia. In three weeks they had delivered one-fourth of Transylvania from Magyar rule. Another Teutonic army under Field Marshal von Mackensen invaded the Dobrudja and captured Constanza on 22 October, 1916, in spite of Russia's sending one of her ablest generals, Vladimir Sakharov, with reinforcements to stiffen the line. In the west, von Falkenhayn captured Vulcan Pass on 25 October, defeated the Rumanians in a bloody battle, and on 21 November captured Craiova, thus winning one-third of Wallachia. Advancing down the slopes of the Transylvanian Alps, the Teutons marched into Rumania and on 6 December, 1916, von Mackensen entered Bucharest. By January, 1917, the Rumanians had lost all of Wallachia, all the Dobrudja, and part of southern Moldavia; their king was in Jassy, and their armed remnants, supported by the Russians, were at bay along the Sereth River from Galatz westwards. General Sarrail attempted an offensive, but was driven back. The collapse of Russia in 1917 completed Rumania's downfall and on 7 March, 1918, she signed the Treaty of Bucharest with Germany, giving up all the Dobrudja, the Petroseny coal basin, and the Carpathian passes. Subsequently the Central Empires consented to the incorporation of Bessarabia into Rumania, which had been voted by a Bessarabian Council on 27 March, 1918. After the collapse of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy in 1918 the Rumanians ousted the pro-German Marghilonian Ministry. Following a short military administration under General Coanda, parliament was dissolved and a new election held. The new Government immediately declared for the incorporation within the kingdom of the Rumania-speaking parts of Transylvania, Hungary (Banat), Bukovina and Bessarabia. On 1 December, 1918, the National Assembly of Transylvania voted to unite with Rumania on the basis of universal manhood suffrage, liberty of language, religious and civil reforms. During 1919 a continuous warfare was waged with Soviet Russia and Bolshevik Hungary. By royal decree on 28 May, 1919, all Jews of Rumania were emancipated and given every right of citizenship.

The arrangement of her Western boundary was unsatisfactory to Rumania, and, in the summer of 1919, she sent troops to the river Theiss to establish boundaries in keeping with her national aspirations. So successful was this little invasion that the troops advanced beyond the river and on 4 August, 1919, occupied Bucharest, contrary to the explicit orders of the Peace Conference, and demanded the reduction of Hungary's army and the surrender of part of her supplies; Bessarabia was annexed. Repeated warnings of the Supreme Council forced Rumania to sign the Treaty of St. Germain in December, 1919, and to withdraw her troops from Hungary in February, 1920. On 28 October, 1920, Rumania, Britain, France, Italy and Japan signed a treaty giving Bessarabia to Rumania, the permission of Russia being considered unnecessary. Rumania joined the "Little Entente," a defensive alliance entered into by Czechoslovakia and Jugoslavia, on 14 August, 1920. Each country pledged itself to support the others in case of unprovoked attack by Hungary. Rumania, however, stipulated that Adriatic questions should not concern the alliance. Under the inspiration and guidance of France, a formal "defensive" alliance against Soviet Russia was entered into by Rumania, Poland, and Hungary on 2 March, 1921.

Russia (cf. C. E., XIII—231d), Soviet republic, has an area of about 1,867,737 square miles (excluding Poland and Finland, but including the new States. A census taken throughout the territories of the Russian Soviet Republic on 20 August, 1920, showed a population of 136,000,000 of whom 47 per cent were males and 53 per cent were females. About 22 millions (16.2 per cent) were settled in cities and towns.

RELIGION.—The Soviet Government disestablished the Church and declared for freedom of worship. The prevailing religion is Greek Orthodox. In 1922 the Soviet Government decreed the confiscation of all Church property, and ordered the arrest of any Orthodox Church officials who resisted, as it was felt that the wealth of the Russian Church, hidden in monasteries and churches, was sufficient to feed thousands of starving Russian peasants. The Catholics are in a majority in the former Polish provinces, the Mohammedans are scattered throughout Eastern and Southern Russia, while the Jews are settled in the towns of the western and southwestern provinces. Before the Revolution, Russia was divided into 66 bishoprics, under 3 metropolitans, 14 archbishops, and 50 bishops, and the management of the Church was in the hands of 62 consistories.

AGRICULTURE.—Up to 1905 the Russian peasant had no political significance, although he constituted 87 per cent of the population and his labors produced 43 per cent of the world's corn supply. The war took away many of the peasants, and brought the mobilized peasantry for the first time in contact with the industrial workers. In 1917 the peasants sided with the revolutionists almost to a man. After the inauguration of the Soviet régime, the decree went forth that "the private possession of land, of natural wealth, waters and forces of nature" was abolished, and that these were handed over to the working classes. The land properties were immediately divided up and handed over to the peasants. The unequal division of some estates caused local committees to be established to divide an estate in mathematical proportion to the number of souls on it. So great was the distrust of the system which caused large quantities of land to be uncultivated in thinly-populated districts and intensely cultivated in thickly populated districts, that in 1920 the Government forbade any repartition of the land for twelve years and abolished the Committees. The State proclaimed also a monopoly of wheat, paying for it in worthless paper and in promises of manufactured goods and agricultural implements which it could not fulfill. The lack of initiative on the part of the peasants resulted in the decrease of 18 per cent in the total quantities of land cultivated in 1918, as compared with 1916.

Economics.—The principal industries are nationalized, and are concentrated under the various departments of the Supreme Economic Council. Organized labor in Russia is by no means overwhelmingly Bolshevik, as many of the trade unions are Social Revolutionaries and Anarchists, or belong to the Mensheviks, or minority faction of the Marxists. Owing to the enormous depreciation of the ruble, due to colossal emissions of paper money, payment is generally being made in kind. Industrial production has depreciated greatly; the production of the coal mines in 1920 being only 20 per cent. of their normal pre-war output; of cast-iron 2 per cent.; textiles 5 per cent.; paper 21 per cent; sugar 6 per cent. In the Ural the mines yielded only half of their pre-war output. The sole cause of this deplorable state of affairs is to be found in the Communist Government, which balks at every turn, the activities of labor and has brought the country to ruin. The membership of the Russian labor unions in January, 1921, aggregated 6,970,000, of whom 30 per cent. were specialists, 7 per cent. were clerical workers, and 63 per cent. manual workers. The struggle between the labor unions and the Soviets for supremacy was so grave that in March, 1921, it was announced that the purely communistic state was an impossibility and that for the sake of economic development Russia must compromise with the capitalistic bourgeoisie. More concessions were made at the same time to which the more radical Communists objected. These included more freedom in exchange of goods, abandonment of compulsory requisitioning of farm produce, more liberty for private initiative, and lastly greater freedom for co-operative societies. There is hardly any faith in the Soviet Government's ability to pay its financial obligations. In February, 1918, the Soviets repudiated all the debts of Russia contracted up to 1917, confiscated the banks, and maritime enterprises, and on 23 April, nationalized foreign trade. The French, who had loaned the State about 1,300,000,000 rubles, were for that reason reluctant to recognize the present Government of Russia. In 1920 French credit in Russia was about 13,540,000,000 rubles. The total indebtedness of Russia on 1 September, 1917, amounted to 32,300 million rubles, made up as follows: pre-war debt 8800 million rubles; seven internal war loans 10,500 million rubles; loans contracted abroad 8000 million rubles; short-dated loans 5000 million rubles. At the Economic Conference at Genoa there were negotiations on the part of Russia for a loan of three billion gold rubles to be used for the reconstruction of the country. In October, 1917, the railway mileage was 34,000, but at present the railroads are operating at 7 per cent of their former capacity. After three years in which there was hardly any foreign trade, due to the allied boycott of Russia, it picked up again in 1920, following the peace with Esthonia, where most of Russia's port outlets are situated. A trade agreement between the British Government and Soviet Russia was signed on 16 March, 1921.

Education.—The highest educational authority is centered in the Commissariat for Education which has jurisdiction even over the art schools, theatres, labor schools, music, and libraries. The unified labor school has been introduced by the Soviets to replace the various types of the elementary and secondary schools of the pre-revolutionary period. Education is compulsory and free; children are provided with lunches and necessary books. In 1919 there were in the Soviet republic, 63,317 schools and 4,796,284 pupils. All the schools have been secularized. New universities have been established at Jaroslavl, Smolensk, Kozroma, Tambov, Astrakhan, Tashkent, Samara, Simbirsk, Orel, Ekaterinburg, Ekaterinodar, and Veliki Ustvig. The number of students, which was 117,000 in 1919, has risen to 120,000 (1920). In 1921 there were 3,758 technical schools with 298,263 students. In 1919 the education budget was 17,244 million rubles; in 1920, 100,049 million rubles.

GOVERNMENT.—The Russian republic is a Federal Socialist community Government under the constitution of 19 July, 1918, adopted in the fifth All-Russian Soviet Congress. All central and local authority is vested in Soviets of workers, soldiers, and peasants; all private property is abolished, all mines, factories, and means of production belong to the State. There is compulsory military service, freedom of conscience, and universal obligation to labor. The centre and source of executive power is the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, consisting of representatives from the town Soviets on the basis of one for every 25,000 electors, and from provisional congresses on the basis of one for every 125,000 inhabitants. The executive authority is entrusted to the All-Russian Central Executive Committee of not more than 200 members, elected by Congress. This is called the Council of the People's Commissioners and at present has 18 members. The government was removed on 14 March, 1918, from Petrograd to Moscow. (See BOLSHEVISM; SOVIET.) Sabadel, ARMAND (well-known as Père Pie de Langogne), theologian and canonist, b. at Langogne, France, on 16 November, 1850; d. at Rome on 4 May, 1914. He entered the Capuchin order in 1873, was ordained two years later, and, after teaching theology at Crest, was called to Rome as secretary to the definitor-general of his order. In that position he revealed himself as a theologian and canonist of high rank. His ability was recognized, and he was appointed successively by the Holy See consultant to five of the more important congregations. He was instrumental in bringing about some of the reforms in the marriage procedure included in the decree "Ne Temere." He was named titular Bishop of Corinth in 1911, and died just as Pius X was about to raise him to the cardinalate. He was a favorite director of many of the leading Catholic laity in Rome. He is the author of lives of Blessed Crispin of Viterbo (Paris, 1899) and Venerable Philomène de Sainte-Colombe (Paris, 1893); he succeeded Mgr. Chaillot as editor of the "Analecta," and published the "Diurnal de Marie," a collection of olden hymns and poems in honor of Our Lady.

S

Sabina, DIOCESE OF (SABINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—290d), a suburbicarian see in Italy, with the perpetual title of Abbot of Farfa. The chapter and clergy of St. Blaise and St. Giles at Palombara Sabina, were given new laws by consistorial decree of 3 February, 1918. The present bishop is Cardinal Gaetano de Lai, b. 1853, ordained 1876, created cardinal deacon 1907, chose the suburbicarian see of Sabina 27 November, 1911, consecrated by Pius X at the Vatican 17 December, and enthroned 31 December following. Rt. Rev. Antonio Nicozzi, titular Bishop of Casarea Philippi, is auxiliary bishop of Sabina. The Catholic population of the diocese is 54,200. There are 35 parishes, 56 secular priests, 52 regular priests, 27 seminarians, 72 churches and chapels.

Sabotage, a term derived from the French word sabot, meaning foot-wear carved out of wooden blocks, Spanish zapato. This kind of foot-wear is used in some French rural districts. The root of the French word sabot is probably derived from the Iberian dialect. The term sabotage has different meanings but commonly it signifies a dishonest act committed by a workman while performing his work for the purpose of injuring the interests of his employer, in which sense the word is frequently used in French Syndicalist literature. The use of the term in its present sense may be explained by the alleged fact that at the time of the introduction of mechanical processes into industry, the workers, disappointed with the installation of machines, which decreased the number of workers employed, threw their sabots into the wheels, thus causing the stoppage of the work and the destruction of the machines. In our day, the word sabotage is widely used in official decrees of the Soviets in Russia. Its meaning implies opposition to or interference with orders issued by the Bolshevik authorities. The first public document in which the word sabotage was officially used by the Soviets dates back to 8 December 1917, when the notorious "Decree for Combating the Bourgeoisie and their Agents, as well as those who are Engaged in Sabotage of the supply of the army," was issued. On this date another decree, No. 30, was issued pertaining to the measures for "Combating the sabotage among the employees of higher rank in postal and telegraph institutions." Therein the same term is used in connection with organized opposition to the wealth-owning classes in general. The decree urges the combating of "sabotage of the bourgeois coalition," and it suggests to the workers that they themselves get rid of "every kind of sabotage of the people's power." Later the term sabotage has been found repeatedly in the Soviet press.

In practice the term sabotage is applied in Soviet Russia to any kind of opposition to the Soviet authorities. Thus, the stoppage of work in industrial concerns for improving the living conditions of the workers is classed as sabotage. The same term is used for describing desertions from the Red Army. The full title of the "Cheka" is "Extraordinary Committee for Combating Counter-revolution, Speculation and Sabotage." The penalty for sabotage varies from imprisonment for short terms to capital punishment. The term sabotage is frequently applied by the Bolsheviks to the passive resistance of the peasants to the Soviets, especially as regards their refusal to grow more wheat than they need for themselves; also in connection with the marked tendency of the peasants to decrease the area of land under cultivation. Thousands of Russians have been shot on the charge of sabotage, which, in many instances, is used as a synonym for the word "counter-revolution."

Sacramentals (cf. C. E., XIII—292d) are things or actions made use of by the Church after the manner of the sacraments to obtain spiritual blessings, especially through the prayers of the Church, which alone has power to constitute, interpret, change or abolish them. The only legitimate minister of the sacramentals is a cleric authorized for that purpose; however, the term sacramental is sometimes loosely used to include holy water and the like, which may be used by the laity themselves. No one but a bishop can consecrate unless he is authorized by canon law or by an Apostolic indult. A priest can give any blessing, however, except those expressly reserved to bishops or others; if he gave a reserved blessing it would ordinarily be valid but unlawful. Deacons and lectors can give only the blessings specified in the law. If a minister neglects to employ the formula prescribed by the Church for blessings of consecrations they are invalid. Though blessings are intended specially for Catholics, they may be given to catechumens, and, if the Church has not forbidden it, to non-Catholics also, in order that they may obtain the light of faith or even health along with faith. A cleric under personal interdict may not administer the sacramentals, nor, as a rule, may he if excommunicated, though sometimes this is allowed if he is requested by the faithful when no other priest is available. Finally the sacramentals may not be used by excommunicates ritandi or tolerated excommunicates after condemnatory or declaratory sentence.

Sacramento, DIOCESE OF (SACRAMENTENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—294a), comprises territory in the States of California and Nevada, suffragan of San Francisco. The Catholic population of the diocese includes: 22,000 Americans, 15,000 Italians, 5000 Portuguese, 4000 Germans, 3000 Slavs, 3000 Irish, 1000 Mexicans, 500 Syrians and Armenians, 500 Spaniards, and 2500 others. During the World War 2500 young men joined the colors, and two priests were chaplains. The Catholic societies took active part in the Liberty Bond drives, Red Cross work, etc. The late bishop, Rt. Rev. Thomas Grace, celebrated his episcopal silver jubilee 16 June, 1921. He died 27 December, 1921, and at present the diocese is in care of the auxiliary Bishop, Rt. Rev. Patrick J. Keane, who was elected vicar capitular by the diocesan council. Bishop Keane was born 6 January, 1872, in Co. Kerry, Ireland, educated in St. Patrick's College, Carlow, Ireland, and the Catholic University, Washington, D. C., where he was ordained priest 20 June, 1895. He was consecrated auxiliary Bishop of Sacramento 14 December, 1920.

Statistics for the diocese for 1922 give: 50 parishes, 107 churches, 57 missions, 43 stations, 73 secular priests, 4 regular priests, 9 lay brothers, 254 Sisters, 1 college for men with 9 teachers and 210 students, 1 high school with an attendance of 200 boys, 7 academies with an attendance of 650 girls, 11 elementary schools with an attendance of 1600, 1 home, 1 asylum, 4 hospitals, and 1 day nursery. Rev. J. Cunha is pastor of the church for Indians at Mason, Nevada. All county hospitals admit the ministry of priests. Organizations among the clergy are the Priests' Eucharistic League and the Diocesan Aid Society; among the laity, the Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Institute, and National Catholic Councils for Men and Women. The "Catholic Herald," published in Sacramento, is the official organ of the diocese.

Sacred Heart, BROTHERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XIII—305b).—In 1912, the Province of Canada had acquired such an extension, that the General Council of the Congregation deemed advisable to divide it into two provinces: the Province of Arthabaska, P.Q., and that of Montreal. The former has its postulate, novitiate, and scholasticate at Arthabaska, and the latter at St. Hyacinth, P.Q. To the Province of Montreal are attached four houses established in French-Canadian parishes of New England. The constitutions of the congregation were approved by the Holy See in 1914. A general chapter held in 1919, at Renteria, Spain, re-elected Brother Alberic as superior general for a third term of six years. In 1921 the Brothers celebrated the centenary of the foundation of their order. The congregation numbers at present (1921) 1260 Brothers and 350 postulants and novices, 137 colleges and schools, of which 68 are in Europe and 69 in America, with a total of 30,000 pupils from 40 dioceses; in the United States and Canada there are 18,000 pupils under the instruction of 650 Brothers. The congregation is divided into 7 provinces, with the mother-house at Renteria (Guipuzcoa), Spain. Like all religious orders in France, the Brothers furnished their contingent in defense of their country during the World War. Of the 121 religious mobilized, 22 were killed, 12 wounded, and 33 cited. The congregation has a total of 800 deceased members.

Sacred Heart, COLLEGE OF THE, Manhattanville, New York City, was established by provisional charter on 1 March, 1917, and given the right to issue the usual academic degrees. Their charter was made absolute on 29 May, 1919. The college is under the direction of the Religious of the Sacred Heart who established the Academy of Manhattanville in 1847, which they still conduct in connection with the college. The college buildings include a well-equipped museum, gymnasium, laboratories and library. The college is governed by 11 trustees and a faculty of 18.

Sacred Heart, MISSION HELPERS OF THE (cf. C. E., VIII—55a).—The mother-house of this institute is in Baltimore, Md., and there are branch houses in Irvington, Md.; Trenton, N. J.; New York, N. Y., and Pittsburg, Pa. There are 92 Sisters, 13 novices, and 13 postulants.

Sacred Heart, SONS OF THE (INSTITUTE OF VERONA), an institute founded in 1867 at Verona by Mgr. Daniel Comboni as a society of secular priests for the African missions. In 1885 the society became a religious congregation, and its members were named Sons of the Sacred Heart. They were under the direction of the Jesuit Fathers until 1900, when a member of the new congregation was elected superior general. The congregation has been finally approved by the Holy See. At present this institute, besides small residences in Italy, has the mother-house at Verona for students of theology and philosophy, the novitiate at Venegono near Milan, and an apostolic school at Brescia. A novitiate for German speaking members is at Brixen (Tyrol) and a house at Gratz (Austria). The field for the mission work of the institute is the whole of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan and the northern part of the Uganda Protectorate. At present there are two vicariates apostolic, the Vicariate Apostolic of Khartoum and the Vicariate Apostolic of Bahr-el-Ghazal and Uganda, with more than 20 residences of missionaries. Priests of this congregation are also at Cairo, Helouan, and Assuan in Egypt.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, MISSIONARY SISTERS OF THE (cf. C. E., XIII—305d).—This congregation, with mother-house at Rome, received the decree of praise from the Holy See, 17 July, 1921. The Sisters conduct homes for the aged and the sick, orphanages, industrial schools, academies, sewing classes; they visit hospitals and prisons and give religious instruction in their convents, which are open to women desirous of making retreats. The present superior general is Mother Antoinette Della Casa, who succeeded Mother Frances Xavier Cabrini (d. 22 Dec., 1917). The Sisters came to America in 1889, and have convents in the archdioceses of New York, New Orleans, Chicago, and Philadelphia, and the dioceses of Brooklyn, Denver, Los Angeles, Newark, Scranton, Seattle, and Nicaragua. Among new foundations are: the Sacred Heart School at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., overlooking the Hudson; a home for young girls, with accommodations for private boarding pupils; an orphanage in Philadelphia; "Mother Cabrini Memorial," one of the best educational institutions in Denver; "Mother Cabrini Proventorium" at Burbank, Los Angeles, Cal.; Columbus Sanitarium, Seattle, Wash.; Columbus Hospital Extension, Chicago, Ill.; Columbus Hospital Extension, New York, formerly the St. Lawrence Hospital at West 163d Street. At the present time the Sisters have in the United States alone, 500 sisters, 8 orphanages, many parochial schools in various States, day nurseries, 5 hospitals with training schools for nurses, and a dispensary.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, PRIESTS OF THE (BETHARRAMITES).—Betharram, situated in the Diocese of Bayonne, only twelve miles from Lourdes, is a very old pilgrimage, the history of the origin of which is partly legendary. Before the apparition of Our Lady in the famous grotto, Betharram was by far the best known and most frequented of the miraculous shrines of the Pyrenees. Some regular priests were for centuries the chaplains of the church. This church and the monastery were closed and partly destroyed during the French Revolution. Fr. Garicoits, born in the Basque country, 15 April, 1797, was sent to Betharram as professor in the school which had been opened in the old monastery in 1812. The school was closed in 1832 and Fr. Garicoits remained at Betharram as chaplain. It was in this year that he associated himself with some priests and began to preach to the surrounding populations which, during these stormy times, had grown up in total ignorance of religion. The number of these priests soon increased and they became the first members of the new congregation. The religious teaching of youth was as urgent as the missions to the old, and a first college was opened near the shrine. Fr. Garicoits thus became the founder of a preaching and teaching congregation. Many colleges were built by them or passed into their hands, and some of the priests went to the Argentine, where there was a great Basque population. Fr. Garicoits died 14 May, 1863, renowned for his sanctity. Since his death his tomb has been venerated and many miracles induced the Bishop of Bayonne to investigate these facts and begin the process of canonization. The cause was introduced at Rome, 15 May, 1899, and the heroicity of his virtues was declared 28 Nov., 1916. The Congregation received the decree of praise, 30 July, 1875, and final approbation 5 Sept., 1877. The constitutions were approved provisionally 28 April, 1890, and definitively 6 Sept., 1901. The congregation has increased in members and extended the works of preaching and teaching. The persecution of late years has obliged them to close many of the colleges in France, but others have been opened in South America: in Buenos Aires, Rosario, La Plata, Montevideo, Asuncion. The missions of the Yun-nan have been lately transferred to the Priests of the Sacred Heart. They have in Spain a house of studies for the young members, another at Bethlehem (Palestine), where they were called in 1877 as chaplains to the Carmelite nuns, and another at Nasareth.

Sacred Heart of Jesus, PRIESTS OF THE (OF ST. QUENTIN), a congregation of priests founded in 1877 at St. Quentin (France) by Canon Leo Dehon, their first and present superior general. They received the decree of praise 25 February, 1885, and definitive approbation 4 July, 1906. There are now over 500 members, with 4 novitiates for various nationalities. The special object of the congregation is to offer to the Sacred Heart a worship of love and atonement, by lives of zeal and piety. The works of zeal are: the education of youth, preaching, missions, and the evangelisation of native populations of Africa and America.

The congregation has 4 provinces (French Belgian, German, Dutch and Italian), and numbers about 18 large and 20 small establishments in the European countries. There are 304 priests, 155 seminarians, 124 lay brothers and 73 novices. At present the priests have seven missions: two in Africa, at Stanley Falls (Congo) and Adamaua (Kamerun); three in America, in the north and south of Brazil and in Canada; one in London; and one in Finland. New mission work will be taken up very soon in the Dutch colony of Celebes, Asia, and in the near future also in the United States. The Vicariate Apostolic of Stanley Falls was erected in 1908, having been established as a mission by the Priests of the Sacred Heart in 1897, and erected into a prefecture apostolic in 1904. The congregation has eleven mission posts within the vicariate: St. Gabriel Falls, two at Stanleyville, Ponthierville, Lokandu, Beni, Bafwalaka, Avakubi, Banalya, Basoko, Yanonge. The Prefecture Apostolic of Adamaua, erected 28 April, 1914, had been confided as a mission to the Priests of the Sacred Heart in 1912, was interrupted in 1915 and taken up again in 1920. There are 4 mission stations in the prefecture, with the usual works attached. More than 20 members of the congregation labor in the Diocese of Santa Caterina in the southern part of Brazil; 4 priests are in the dioceses of Olinda and Recife Maceio in northern Brazil; while 7 other priests conduct the diocesan seminary in Taubate (São Paulo). In Canada they have 7 priests in the Archdiocese of Edmonton with 5 mission stations established: Chauvin, Wainwright, Viking, Tofield, and Elm-Cark, the residence of the superior of the mission. The congregation has 5 priests with the care of four parishes in Sweden. For four years the priests labored among the native Catholics, Poles and Germans, scattered through schismatic Finland, until in 1911, under the intolerant government of the Czar, and for the usual pretexts they were obliged to leave Russian territory. They now have 4 priests in Helsingfors, Finland.

More than 500 students attend the five flourishing apostolic schools which each year give a certain number of subjects to the novitiate. The congregation has also four houses of philosophy and theology with an annual number of twenty priests. But many more are needed for the vast work of the missions. In the houses of studies at Rome, Bologna, Louvain, Luxemburg, and Breda are received young men who have concluded their studies at one of the apostolic schools or at other private and public schools, have finished their novitiate, and wish to continue their philosophical and theological studies. There they perfect themselves in the life to which they are called. Many of the European houses propagate the devotion to the Sacred Heart by preaching and by numerous publications.

Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, CONGREGATION OF THE (cf. C. E., XIII—308c).—The founder of the Congregation, Fr. Mary Joseph Coudrin, died 27 March, 1837, and was succeeded as superior general by Mgr. Bonamie who was previously Archbishop of Tyre and Chalcedon. He was followed in 1853 by Fr. Euthyme Rouchouse, who was superior general until 1869, when Fr. Marcellin Bousquet undertook the government of the congregation. This was just before the outbreak of the Commune in Paris, during which Fr. Bousquet's four assistants were martyred. They were: Fr. Ladislas Radique, prior of the mother-house, b. at St. Patrice-du-desert, Orne, 8 May, 1823; Fr. Polycarp Tuffier, procurator of the mother-house, b. at Malsieu, Lozère, 14 March, 1807; Fr. Marcellin Rouchouse, secretary, b. at St. Julien-en-Jarrets, Lozère, 14 Dec., 1810; Fr. Frézal Tardieu, councillor, b. at Chasserades, Lozère, 18 Nov., 1814. All four were massacred by the communists, 26 May, 1871, after having been imprisoned since 12 April, 1871. Fr. Bousquet was ordered to dissolve his congregation throughout French territory, and immediately evacuate the mother-house. This he refused to do, and for twenty-six months he and six companions remained, in spite of many privations. On 19 June, 1905, he was dragged from his retreat and forced to seek refuge in Belgium. All the houses in France were confiscated, and the communities dispersed. Fr. Bousquet died in exile at Braine-le-Comte, Hainaut, Belgium, 10 Sept., 1911, and was succeeded, 14 Jan., 1912, by the present superior general, Fr. Flavian Prat. Another distinguished member of the congregation was Fr. Damien de Veuster, who went as a missionary to Hawaii in 1864, and in 1873 began his sixteen years of labor among the lepers of Molokai, dying a victim to the disease.

England erected a monument to him on Molokai, the place of his sacrifice, and Belgium erected a statue of him at Louvain.

Until 1909 the congregation admitted a novice to perpetual vows after eighteen months. Since then the novitiate lasts only one year, after which temporal vows are made for three years, and then perpetual vows are taken. The Belgian province formerly comprised all the houses of the order in Belgium, Holland, and Germany. On 15 August, 1920, a German province was formed and a Dutch province is to be erected in Holland. A novitiate for the French province was opened at Montgeron, 11 Sept., 1920, and the same province took over a school at Sature, Spain, and a parish at Gibara, Cuba, in October, 1918. New foundations of the Belgian province are: a house at Ginneken (Holland), founded in 1916 as the national centre for the work of the Enthronement in Holland, and a novitiate and scholasticate for Dutch students opened at Valkenburg (Holland) in September, 1920. New foundations of the German province are: novitiate and scholasticate (philosophy) at Arnstein (1919); apostolic school (upper classes) at Niederlahustein (1920); apostolic school (lower divisions), at Waldernbach (1920); residence and general secretariate for the Enthronement in Germany, at Aachen (1916); boarding school at Herzogenrath; mission at Christiania, Norway (1920). A college and novitiate for the South American province was opened at Vina del Mar, Chile, and blessed 4 Nov., 1920. The apostolic school of Grave, Holland, which was destroyed by fire in 1920, will be reopened at Saint Oederode in North Brabant, Holland. The congregation has a total of 661 professed religious, of whom 6 are bishops, 387 priests, 144 students, 2 choir brothers, and 123 lay brothers. The present number of foundations is 34. There are 15 almonries or chaplainships with the Sisters of the Sacred Heart; 6 apostolic schools, with 345 students; 6 colleges, with 1908 students; and 1 boarding school with an attendance of 25.

Saint Agnes, SISTERS OF.—The Congregation of the Sisters of Saint Agnes of Rome, whose mother-house is at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, was founded at Barton, Wisconsin, in 1846, by the pioneer missionary priest, Rev. Caspar Rehl, who conceived the idea of founding a community of Sisters for the education of children. The location first selected, proving undesirable, the community was transferred, with ecclesiastical approval, to its present location at Fond du Lac, Wisconsin, the first home being a small frame dwelling. Here are now located the mother-house, the novitiate and postulate, the training schools for the young members of the community; St. Mary's Springs Academy, a boarding-school for young girls; St. Agnes Hospital, connected with which is a training school for nurses; the Henry Boyle Catholic Home for the Aged. The young community was guided through many hardships and difficulties by its superior general, Mother Mary Agnes Hazotte. Their spiritual guide and adviser was Francis Haas, O. M. Cap., one of the founders of the Capuchin Order in the United States. On 7 Dec., 1875, the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda issued to the community a decree of praise and on 16 August, 1880, the institute and its constitutions were approved by Pope Leo XIII. The congregation is governed by a superioress general and a council of four members, elected every six years. There is no distinction of dress or rank among members of the community, each being employed according to her fitness and aptitude. The time of probation consists of a juniorate for young girls and a pos-tulate of not over one year, after which, if accepted by the council, the candidate is clothed with the religious habit and begins her novitiate year. Vows are made for three years, at the expiration of which time, the religious is admitted to perpetual profession, according to the rules and constitutions of the Sisters of St. Agnes. From the small colony in 1870, the congregation has grown to a flourishing community of 611 professed members, 22 novices, 35 postulants, and has under its direction 42 schools, 1 academy, 2 hospitals, 1 training school for nurses, 2 orphanages, 1 home for the aged, and 1 house for emigrants. These establishments are distributed throughout the States of Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Kansas, in eleven archdioceses and dioceses.

Saint Andrews and Edinburgh, ARCHDIOCESE OF (S. ANDREÆ ET EDINBURGENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—330c), in Scotland. The present bishop is the Most Rev. James Augustine Smith, who has administered the diocese since 1900. According to the statistics of 1922 the archdiocese contains: 99 churches, chapels and stations, 59 missions, 22 convents, 92 secular priests including 6 retired, 14 regulars (5 Oblates, 9 Jesuits), 49 congregational day schools. The Catholic population in 1920 numbered, 77,804.

Saint Augustine, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI AUGUSTINI; cf. C. E., VI—118c), in Florida, suffragan of Baltimore. The area of the diocese is 46,959 square miles and the Catholic population is 51,014, including about 10,000 Italians, 20,000 to 25,000 Cubans and Spaniards, and about 2500 colored. On 15 December, 1910, Maurice P. Foley, rector of the cathedral, was consecrated bishop of the newly-erected Diocese of Tuguegarao, P. I. At the death of Bishop Kenny of St. Augustine on 23 October, 1913, the diocese was administered by Very Rev. John O'Brien, V. G., who died 8 July, 1917. On 30 June, 1914, Michael J. Curley was consecrated bishop to succeed the late Bishop Kenny. In 1915 the first Catholic hospital was opened by the Sisters of Charity. Bishop Curley was appointed Archbishop of Baltimore 26 July, 1921. During his seven years as bishop much progress was made in every feature of the Church, a number of churches and chapels were built and several new parochial schools erected, the total value of buildings under construction being over half a million. Florida became noted for its bigotry during the administration of Governor Catts (1916-20), who was elected on an anti-Catholic platform. The present Bishop of St. Augustine is Rt. Rev. Patrick Barry, appointed 22 February, 1922. In January, 1920, occurred the death of Rev. Stephen Langlade, a pioneer priest, who for over forty years labored among the Catholics in Moccasin Branch and Bakerville, building churches and doing most of the work himself. Over 700 Catholic young men were in active service during the World War and 21 died for their country. Rev. John F. Conoley and Rev. A. C. Baczyk served as chaplains. The laity were active in all war work.

Statistics for the diocese for 1922 give: 28 parishes; 75 churches; 45 missions; 150 stations, 1 abbey for men; 29 secular priests; 28 regular priests; 18 lay brothers (16 Benedictine and 2 Jesuit); 16 convents for women with 189 Sisters (Sisters of St. Joseph, Sisters of the Holy Names, and Benedictines); 1 Benedictine seminary with 10 seminarians; 2 colleges for men with 19 teachers and 195 students; 13 academies; an attendance of 4318 pupils in academies and parochial schools; 1 orphan home for girls in Jacksonville, with 75 orphans; 1 hospital (St. Vincent's) in Jacksonville. The priests have missions which they attend regularly. The Priests' Eucharistic League is established among the clergy, and among the laity are organized the Knights of Columbus, Catholic Daughters of America, Holy Name Society, and Knights of St. John among the colored.

Saint Bonaventure, COLLEGE OF (cf. C. E., XIII—339a), at Quaracchi, near Florence, Italy, has long been famous as the center of literary activity in the Order of Friars Minor. Of late the staff of editors has been increased and now consists of 12 Fathers, 5 for the theological and 5 for the historical section, and two managers. The theological section has brought out a second volume of "Questiones Disputatae," by Cardinal Matthew of Aquasparta (1914), and a new critical edition of "Libri IV Sententiarum" by Peter the Lombard, in two volumes (1916). Olivia "Questiones in II Sententiarum," edited by B. Jansen, S. J., is in print and will comprise three volumes of the "Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica." The first part of the long announced new edition of the "Summa Theologica" of Alexander of Hales is almost ready for print. The historical section has published two more volumes of "Analecta Franciscana": vol. V (second part of "Bartholomew of Pisa") in 1912 and vol. VI (Necrologia) in 1917; whilst vols. VII (Franciscan documents of Bologna) and VIII (Process of Canonization of St. Louis of Toulouse) will shortly appear. Volume XIX of the continuation of the "Annals Minorum" by Wadding was reprinted in 1914. The most important work of the historical section in recent years, however, is the publication of the "Archivum Franciscanum Historicum," an international quarterly review for original research in the field of Franciscan history. The contributions to this paper are published either in Latin or in English, French, German, Italian, or Spanish. Since 1908 fourteen large volumes have been published. Many minor publications have been made both by members of the college and outsiders. In 1920 the new Breviary was printed at Quaracchi on behalf of the Franciscan Order.

Saint Boniface, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI BONIFACII; cf. C. E., XIII—339), Manitoba, Canada, is governed by Mgr. Arthur Beliveau, who succeeded Mgr. Langevin, O. M. I., who died on 15 June, 1915. Mgr. Beliveau was born at Mt. Carmel, in the diocese of Three Rivers, on 2 March, 1870, studied at St. Boniface and later at Rome, where he graduated doctor of theology, was ordained on 24 September, 1883; appointed auxiliary and titular Bishop of Dumitopolis on 24 March, 1913; consecrated at St. Boniface 25 July following; promoted at the Consistory of 9 December, 1915, receiving the pallium on 7 June, 1916. On 4 December, 1915, the erection of the new Archdiocese of Winnipeg necessitated changes in the limits of that of St. Boniface, which is now bounded on the east by 91 degrees long., on the south by the international boundary, on the west by the meridian dividing ranges 12 and 13 west of the principal meridian, by the line separating townships 9 and 10, and by the Red River and Lake Winnipeg, and on the north by the line dividing townships 44 and 45, protracted eastward to its intersection with the 91 degrees long. The Catholic population within the present area, excluding the Ruthenian Catholics, who have been under the jurisdiction of a bishop of their own Rite since 1912, is 35,000; French 21,525; English 2372; Poles 2079; Flemish 1699; Indians, 689; German, 257; Hungarian, 119; other nationalities, 321. There are 105 priests, 53 secular and 52 religious. The religious orders are: Oblates of Mary Immaculate, 24 priests; Jesuits, 7; Trappists, 10; Canons Regular of the Immaculate Conception, 2; Sons of Mary Immaculate, 3; Redemptorists, 4; Clerics of St. Viator, 2. There are 77 religious teaching or lay brothers, belonging to the orders just mentioned; and 16 American Marist Brothers and 10 Brothers of Our Lady of Mercy. The institutes of women are: Grey Nuns, 189; Sisters of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, 55; Sisters of Notre Dame des Missions, 13; Daughters of the Cross, 20; Sisters of Mercy, 9; Sisters of the Five Wounds of Our Savior, 42; Sisters of Providence, 9; Carmelite Sisters, 12; Adorers of the Precious Blood, 12; Sisters of St. Joseph, 7; Presentation Sisters, 8; Belgian Ursulines, 8; Sisters of the Holy Family, 20; Oblate Sisters of the Sacred Heart and Mary Immaculate, founded in 1904 by Mgr. Langevin, 53; total 456 Sisters. The institutions of the archdiocese are: 1 Jesuit College, 400 students; 1 minor seminary (founded 1909), 60 pupils; 1 Oblate juniorate, 50 students; 21 convents; 2 general hospitals, and 1 for contagious diseases; 2 orphan asylums, 1 home for the aged; 1 agricultural college, 3 Indian boarding schools. The State-supported Catholic schools or separate schools in the Catholic homogeneous parishes continue to be conducted along Catholic lines as far as possible. The same condition obtains in two large schools in the City of St. Boniface, the Marist Brothers Boys' school, and the Holy Name of Jesus and Mary girls' school. Being legally public schools inspected by the civil authorities, they are administered by trustees elected by the parents and are sustained by the ordinary school taxes and the money grant of the provisional Government. In the mixed centres this system cannot work, and in such places these are parochial schools, which involves double taxes. Among the persons deceased in recent years may be mentioned in addition to the late Archbishop Langevin, Mr. Louis Arthur Prud'homme, historian, and for thirty years judge of County Court; his son who has been recently consecrated Bishop of Prince Albert and Saskatoon, is the first bishop born in Western Canada.

Saint-Brieuc and Tréguier, DIOCESE OF (BRIO-CENSIS ET TRECORENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—340b), comprises the department of Côtes-du-Nord (Brittany), France, and is suffragan of Rennes. The present bishop is Mgr. Jules-Laurent-Benjamin Morelle, b. at Plessier-Rozainvillers, Diocese of Amiens, 16 May, 1849, ordained 1873, elected 13 July, 1906, to succeed Mgr. Falières, deceased. On 9 August, 1919, Bishop Morelle was made a commander of the Order of Leopold II, by the King of the Belgians. About 600 priests were mobilized during the war, 50 priests and 39 seminarians died in the army, 5 were decorated with the Legion of Honor, 14 with the médaille militaire, 125 priests, 44 seminarians with the croix de guerre, and 15 with the médaille des épidémies. The Catholic population numbered (1919) 605,523. There are 48 deaneries, 404 parishes, 977 secular priests (1921) and 150 seminarians.

Saint Casimir, LITHUANIAN SISTERS OF, founded by Rev. Anthony Staniukynas, with the help of Bishop Shanahan of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. The first three members were under the care of the Sisters of the Holy Cross in Ingenbohl, Switzerland when it was decided that they come to America and be trained for religious teachers. Mother M. Cyril, then Superior of the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, at Mount Saint Mary's, Scranton, Pa., undertook their training and the Lithuanian postulants arrived at Mt. St. Mary's, 2 Nov., 1905. Rather than form a branch of a well organized community, they were desirous of establishing a Lithuanian Sisterhood for the needs of the Lithuanian people. Permission for this was given by Pius X, 19 April, 1907. The first three postulants received the religious habit 30 August, 1907, at Mount Saint Mary's Seminary Chapel. They were Sister Maria (Casimira Kaupas), Sister M. Immaculata (Judith Dvaranauskas) and Sister M. Concepta (Antoinette Unguraitis). Their habit was designed by Casimira Kaupas (later Mother Maria). On 7 Oct., 1907, the first house of the Sisters of St. Casimir was opened at Mount Carmel in the Diocese of Harrisburg, Pa. In 1909 Bishop Quigley of Chicago took the small congregation into his archdiocese, and the mother-house was transferred from Harrisburg to Chicago in 1911. Rev. A. Staniukynas took charge of the community until his death, 15 December, 1918, when Rev. Francis Bucys became their chaplain and spiritual director. On 5 Oct., 1920, four Sisters of St. Casimir opened a novitiate in Pazaislis, Lithuania. The special work of the congregation is teaching and taking care of orphans. At present the Sisters conduct Saint Casimir Academy at the mother-house, and Lithuanian parochial schools in the archdioceses of Chicago, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, and the dioceses of Harrisburg and Scranton. There are 170 members in the community.

Saint Charles Borromeo, MISSIONARIES OF (cf. C. E., X—368a). In the general chapter of August, 1919, held in Rome, Most Rev. Pacifico Chenuil, formerly superior provincial of the western province of the United States, was elected superior general. The western and eastern provinces of the United States were united into one province, with headquarters at Buffalo, N. Y. Since 1911, five new missions have been established in the United States and in some the church has already been erected; 4 new kindergartens and 6 new parochial schools have been built. The present number of foundations in the United States is: 26 parishes, 5 chapels, 12 parochial schools, 8 kindergartens, 2 St. Raphael societies. These are under the care of 62 priests and 2 lay brothers.

Saint Clara College, in Sinsinawa, Wisconsin, was founded as St. Clara Academy in 1852 by the very Rev. Samuel Charles Mazzuchelli, O.P. The institution was entrusted to the Sisters of St. Dominic for the higher education of Catholic women and in 1901 it was empowered by the State to confer degrees. In connection with the college is a high school known as St. Clara Academy. St. Clara College has had a steady growth since its foundation and now (1920-21) has a student enrollment of 336; college 149; training school 20; Sister students 70; academy 97. The St. Thomas Aquinas Library contains some 10,000 volumes and the college faculty numbers 31. Plans are made to transfer the college department in the fall of 1922 from Sinsinawa to River Forest, Illinois a suburb of Chicago, and the institution will then be known as Rosary College.

Saint-Claude, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI CLAUDII; cf. C. E., XIII—341b), in France, suffragan of Lyons. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. François-Alexandre Maillet, b. at Bourges, 12 Jan., 1854, elected 24 March, 1898, took possession of the see, 18 June, consecrated 29 June, following, made assistant to the pontifical throne, 16 April, 1921. In 1920 there were in the diocese 252,713 Catholics, 34 parishes, 356 succursal parishes, 23 vicarages formerly supported by the state.

Saint Cloud, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI CLODOALDI; cf. C. E., XIII—342d), suffragan of St. Paul, Minnesota. On account of his age and failing strength the venerable and saintly Bishop Trobec on 15 April, 1914, transmitted his resignation to Rome, and was named titular Bishop of Lycopolis. His successor was Rt. Rev. Joseph F. Busch, second Bishop of Lead, South Dakota. During the tenure of that see Bishop Busch had upheld the observance of Sunday as a day of rest despite much adverse criticism and the greed of a powerful corporation. The decree of his translation to the See of St. Cloud was dated 19 January, 1915, and on 18 March of the same year he took solemn possession, being installed by the late Archbishop John Ireland. From the beginning he directed his attention to systematizing the business of the diocese, and took up the thorough organization of his people to carry on charitable and welfare work as the needs of the times demanded. To knit his people more closely together he began in June, 1916, the holding of an annual Diocesan Convention. The delegates composing this convention were the pastors, trustees of the various parishes, and representatives of the different parish societies. Parish Committees organized on the same principle were ordered to be formed in every parish with a view of taking care of all situations that might arise, and of cooperating with the central Executive Committee in all diocesan problems. In all this he was years ahead of the rest of the country and his position and action have since been splendidly vindicated by the program of action adopted and urged by the united hierarchy of the country. Hence, when the National Councils of Catholic Men and Women were called into being by the National Catholic Welfare Council, the Diocese of St. Cloud proved a well prepared field for immediate action. Under his direction the Holy Name Society was established in every parish and mission.

Under the administration of Bishop Busch the diocese has been registering a steady growth. The Catholic population is now nearly 65,000 and the number of parishes and missions has increased to 135. There are 105 secular priests and 56 regular priests, 2 monasteries for men and 3 convents for women numbering 28 lay brothers and 350 Sisters. To the jurisdiction of the Benedictine Abbey of St. John the Baptist belong 113 Fathers and 25 Brothers. Under the authority of St. Joseph's Convent of the diocesan Benedictine Sisters stand 800 Sisters. The diocesan Franciscan Sisters number 49. The educational system, always good, has been much improved. It counts at present 1 university and college for men with 465 students, 1 college for women, 2 academies for girls with an attendance of 270, 1 normal school with about 60 pupils, 1 seminary with 46 students, 4 high schools and 37 elementary schools in which 258 nuns teach 6669 children. Other institutions in the diocese are as follows: 4 hospitals, 1 orphan asylum, 1 infants' home, 3 homes for the aged. Three State institutions admit the ministrations of the priest. The Clerical Benefit Association largely assumes the care of infirm and aged priests. For the laity there are the Central Verein, the Knights of Columbus, the Catholic Order of Foresters, the A. O. H., the L. C. B. A., the Holy Name Society, the Holy Childhood, the Woman's Missionary Association, the different Women's Guilds for social welfare and charitable work, and notably the National Councils of Catholic Men and Women.

During a period of little more than a year, death has claimed six personages who contributed in a notable degree to the upbuilding of the works of the diocese. The first of these was the Rev. Dr. Leo Gans, who died 26 November, 1920. Born in St. Cloud, he received his elementary education in the cathedral school. His college course was made under the Capuchins of Mt. Calvary, Wisconsin, and his seminary training was completed at the American College in Rome, where he received the degree of J. C. D. Upon his return to his native country he taught for several years at the Seminary of St. Paul and was then recalled to his diocese as pastor of the Pro-Cathedral of the Holy Angels in St. Cloud. His chief pastoral care was the work of the schools. He built and brought to the highest point of efficiency the Cathedral High School, which has been affiliated with the State University.

To Rev. Cornelius Wittmann, O. S. B., the diocese owes the establishment of its first elementary school; in fact he is the founder of the first school of any kind that existed within the territory now comprised in the St. Cloud jurisdiction. In his honor a commemorative bronze tablet has been erected in the new St. Cloud High School of Mechanics and Arts. Born in Bavaria on 11 October, 1828, he came to St. Vincent's Abbey in Pennsylvania at the age of twenty-four. Two years later he came to Minnesota at the request of Bishop Cretin of St. Paul, by whom he was ordained priest. In 1850 he established the first school in Stearns County and in October of the same year he erected a building, in what is now the city of St. Cloud, that was to serve the twofold purpose of church and school. In 1857 he became one of the incorporators and the first professors of St. John's Seminary, which has since developed into St. John's University at Collegeville. He was actively engaged in parochial and educational work until failing eyesight compelled him to return in 1904 from Washington, whither he had gone as a volunteer to help establish the new Benedictine Abbey at Lacey. He continued to reside at St. John's Abbey, Collegeville, until his death on 22 September, 1921.

The cause of charity suffered a great loss when Mother Mary Rose, O. S. F., died at the hospital in Breckenridge, in 1921. She was born in Canada in the little village of Assumption, near Montreal, 8 April, 1857. Her parents were French Canadians and her name in the world was Rose de Lima Ethier. She was eighteen years old when she entered a convent of Franciscans. At the end of her term of religious probation she labored for several years in the negro missions of Georgia, and then, with a little band of courageous Franciscan Nuns, came to the Diocese of St. Cloud, where they founded the diocesan Franciscan Congregation. For many years Mother Rose directed the destinies of the little community, whose mother-house and novitiate she established at Little Falls, Minn. The Sisters are now in charge of 5 hospitals, 2 homes for the aged, an orphan asylum, and an infants' home.

On 27 November, 1921, occurred the death of Right Rev. Peter Engel, O. S. B., fourth Abbot of the Abbey of St. John the Baptist, at Collegeville, Minn. Born 3 February, 1856, at St. Nicholas, Wisconsin, he received his early education in the parochial schools of that locality. Taking up his collegiate course in St. John's University as an aspirant for the order, he made his religious profession 19 July, 1875, and was ordained priest, 15 December, 1878. After the demise of Abbot Bernard Locnikar, he was elected abbot 28 November, 1894, and solemnly blessed 11 July, 1895. Under his able and paternal administration the work and influence of his monastery were very widely extended, and from St. John's sprang the monastery of Lacey, Washington, and the Abbey Nullius of St. Peter, Saskatchewan, Canada. Himself a ripe scholar, he bent every effort to raise the standard of studies at St. John's University, and in this he succeeded wonderfully. Many of his young Fathers were sent to the different universities at home and abroad, and returned amply equipped to take up the many different departments newly created to extend the usefulness of the educational establishment under his direction, so that from a small college St. John's has taken on the dimensions of a university. So widely known and fully appreciated did his personality become among the other Benedictines in the United States that for twelve years Abbot Engel was the President of the American Cassinese Congregation.

The death of Bishop Trobe occurred 15 December, 1921. The venerable prelate was born in Billiggratz, Carinthia, 16 July, 1838. He received his elementary education in the schools of his home village, and his college course in the gymnasium at Laibach. Upon the completion of his collegiate studies he entered the Seminary of Laibach. While there he met the saintly Bishop Baraga of Northern Michigan, to whose eloquent appeal for workers in the American mission field he gave eager and generous response. He arrived in New York 4 April, 1864, whence he proceeded to St. Vincent's Seminary at Beatty, Pa. Having completed his studies, he came to St. Paul, where Bishop Thomas L. Grace ordained him to the priesthood 8 September, 1865. The first pastoral charge assigned to him was at Belle Prairie, Minn., the earliest parish within the limits of the present Diocese of St. Cloud. In 1866 he was sent to Wabasha, to which a large number of missions were attached. Many parishes in Southern Minnesota owe their existence to his untiring zeal. In 1887 he was called to St. Paul, where he founded and developed St. Agnes' parish. After the death of Bishop Marty he was consecrated third Bishop of St. Cloud by the Most Rev. John Ireland, 26 September, 1897. During seventeen years he administered the affairs of the diocese with the same holy zeal and quiet ability that he had so constantly shown in his pastoral work.

Monsignor Bernard Richter of Melrose died 18 December, 1921. Born in Westphalia in 1853, his first clerical studies were made at the seminary of Münster, in his native province. These studies were completed at St. Francis Seminary, Milwaukee, whither he came in 1874. He was ordained in 1877. His first field of priestly labor was at White Lake, South Dakota. He was then made pastor of the cathedral of St. Cloud by the first bishop, Zardetti, upon whose resignation Fr. Richter was appointed to Melrose. There he spent twenty-seven years of his pastoral activities. He was appointed a Domestic Prelate of His Holiness in 1912.

In common with their brethren throughout the United States, the Catholics of the Diocese of St. Cloud bore their fair proportion of the burden imposed by the country's participation in the World War. Six of the priests saw service with the army. Four were overseas and the other two were employed in camps in the United States. The graduate nurses of all the hospitals were prompt in offering their services to the Government, one hospital having the distinction of one hundred per cent. of its graduates accepted for war work at home and abroad. Catholic young men enlisted in both branches of the service, and priests and people in their respective localities were active in every kind of war and welfare work. In this they followed the example of their bishop, who has the proud distinction of having been publicly eulogized in the United States Senate Chamber by the senior Senator from Minnesota, the Honorable Knute Nelson.

Saint-Denis (or Réunion), DIOCESE OF (SANCTI DIONYSII; cf. C. E., XIII—344b), includes the island of Réunion in the Indian Ocean, 350 miles east of Madagascar. The diocese was formerly a suffragan of Bordeaux, but is now directly dependent on the Holy See. The present bishop is Mgr. Georges-Marie de la Bonnière de Beaumont, C. S. Sp., b. at Idron, diocese of Bayonne, 12 December, 1872, studied at the French Seminary in Rome, ordained there 1897, volunteer chaplain, 65th Division, Infantry, 1914, then chaplain-in-chief, 16th Army Corps until August, 1917, elected titular Bishop of Paphos and coadjutor of Saint Denis 22 March, 1917, consecrated at Pau 14 October, and sailed for Réunion. He succeeded Mgr. Fabre, 26 December, 1919. Mgr. de Beaumont was cited in the orders of the Army in 1916 for "courage and abnegation under intense fire" and was awarded the croix de guerre avec étoile d'argent. His predecessor, Mgr. Jacques-Paul Antonin Fabre, was born in Nîmes (Gard) 16 October, 1837, ordained 1863, chaplain in the war of 1870, named Bishop of St. Denis 1892, arrived there June, 1893, left for France May, 1915, and died 26 December, 1919, at Pessac (Gironde). Mgr. Fabre was a Doctor in Letters, and published many books and numerous articles. Influenza caused great trouble at Saint Denis in 1919, as many as 250 persons dying in one day in the episcopal city of 20,000 inhabitants. All the priests called to the front during the war returned to the diocese decorated with the croix de guerre. A very large proportion of young men of the island were killed, a great number decorated for bravery. The bishop is occupied in creating a native clergy and he has established a presbyterial school at Cilaos. The diocese contains 49 parishes, 66 churches, 2 convents of men and 39 of women, 35 secular and 14 regular priests, 14 lay Brothers, 190 Sisters, 1 seminary, 15 seminarians, 1 high school with 14 professors and 180 girls, 41 elementary schools, 134 instructors and 3788 pupils, 2 refuges, 11 asylums, 3 hospitals, 7 organizations among the laity. Two papers are published. The government aids four of the institutions. The Catholic population numbers 171,979, all French.

Saint-Dié, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI DEODATI; cf. C. E., XIII—344d), comprises the department of the Vosges, France, and is suffragan of Besançon. The episcopal city was occupied August-September, 1914, by German troops and part of the diocese was laid waste and occupied (1914-18), by the invaders. The present bishop is Mgr. Alphonse Gabriel Foucault, b. at Senoches (Eure-et-Loire), 24 March, 1843, named Bishop of Saint-Dié 3 January, 1893, consecrated at Chartres, 20 March, and made solemn entry into Saint-Dié, 6 April. Mgr. Foucault was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor 27 July, 1919, was presented with the silver medal of souvenir français, celebrated his sacerdotal (fifty years) and episcopal jubilee, upon which occasion he received the personal privilege of the pallium.

During the war 240 of the 525 priests of the diocese were mobilized, 44 of the 48 seminarians in the upper seminary in 1914 and 17 of the 25 there from 1915 to 1918. Of this number 10 priests were killed on the battlefield, 5 died in the army, 3 were shot by the enemy, 1 was killed by bombardment, 8 seminarians were killed and 2 died; 11 were severely wounded; 28 were decorated (7 with the Legion of Honor, 8 with the médaillon militaire, 1 with the Order of St. George (English), 1 with the Order of St. George (Russian), 1 with the Cross of Rumania, 1 with the croix de guerre belge, 6 with the médaillon des epidemies, 2 with the Médaillon argent du souvenir français, more than 50 with the croix de guerre. There were 129 citations. Thirty-four priests were taken as hostages. There are two minor basilicas in the diocese, that of St. Peter Fourier at Mattaincourt and that of St. Joan of Arc at Domrémy. St. Joan of Arc, whose birthplace was Domrémy, was canonized 13 May, 1920, in St. Peter's at Rome. The diocese comprises 388 parishes, 465 churches, 1 monastery and 5 convents of women, 481 secular priests, 2 seminaries, 152 seminarians, 1 free college for boys and 7 for girls, 10 free elementary schools for boys and 30 for girls, 1 mission institute with 4 secular priests, 3 orphanages, 8 hospitals. Priests are admitted to minister in a prison, a lyceum and 4 colleges. Two journals are printed, besides numerous parish bulletins and "va semaine religieuse." The Catholic population numbers about 400,000 of the 429,800 inhabitants.

Saint Elizabeth, COLLEGE OF, at Convent Station, New Jersey, in 1921 had a faculty of 34, classified as follows: diocesan clergy, 1; religious, 26; lay, 7. The registration of students was 170, of whom 22 were graduated. Sister Mary Pauline Kelligherk, LL.D., is president of the college.

Saint-Flour, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI FLORI, cf. C. E., XIII—347d), comprises the department of Cantal, France and is suffragan of Bourges. The present bishop is Mgr. Paul-Augustin Lecœur, b. at Rouen, 13 March, 1848, served in the ambulance corps in 1870, ordained 1872, elected Bishop of Saint-Flour 13 July, 1906, consecrated at Rouen 3 August, enthroned 24 August. The diocese contains many shrines to which thousands of Catholics make pilgrimages each year. In 1920 the coronation of Our Lady of Quezac took place in the presence of 8 bishops, 150 priests and 15,000 faithful. About 40,000 pilgrims visit this shrine each year. In 1921 the Church of Notre Dame des Miracles in Mauriac was erected into a minor basilica. In the diocese there are 314 parishes; 8 monasteries of women (2 Carmelites, 2 Visitation, 1 Infant Jesus, 1 Notre Dame, 1 St. Joseph, 1 Holy Family), and 48 convents with a total of 600 Sisters; 486 secular priests, 50 Brothers, 1 upper seminary with 45 seminarians, 1 lower with 60; 2 colleges for boys with 550 students and 4 for girls with 600, 1 normal school, 70 elementary schools, 6 asylums, 23 hospitals, 1 refuge, 2 crèches, association of Catholic youth, 3 papers published in Saint-Flour, 4 in Aurillac and 1 in Mauriac. The population of the diocese is 223,000, nearly all Catholic.

Saint Francis Xavier, BROTHERS OF. See XAVIERIAN BROTHERS.

Saint Gabriel, BROTHERS OF (cf. C. E., VI—330c).—This institute has continued to spread in spite of persecution and war, and the resultant lack of recruits. The houses of religious training after this enforced retarding of progress are now beginning to prosper. During the World War (1914-18) 200 members of the institute gave proof of their patriotism on many battlefields, and 25 of them sacrificed their lives for their country. The government awarded well-merited decorations to many and officially acknowledged that all the religious had nobly fulfilled their duty. During this trying period, as well as during the difficulties of the persecution of 1903, the institute was wisely governed by the present superior general, Rev. Brother Martial, b. at Tauves, Puy de Dôme, 11 June, 1850, entered the congregation, 6 Oct., 1864, was successively professor in the boarding-school at the mother-house, master of novices, assistant general, elected superior at the chapter of 1898, and since re-elected. His generous activity has encouraged the spirit of holiness, learning, and zeal among the Brothers, spread the work of the institute throughout many pagan countries, and saved it from destruction during the persecutions of 1903. On 19 February, 1910, the constitutions of the order were temporarily approved by the Holy See. Having been revised to conform to the normae, no notable change in the constitutions was necessary in accordance with the new Code of Canon Law. The institute is governed by a superior general elected for twelve years and eligible for re-election indefinitely. He has four assistants, a secretary general, and a general economist. The institute is divided into provinces, each governed by a provincial assisted by a council of four members. Since 1914 many members have died, due especially to the war. Among the notable deceased are: Brother Fortune, assistant general, d. 18 May, 1914, at the age of seventy-five years, having passed twenty-five years in the administration of the congregation; Brother Pothin, procurator general, died suddenly, 24 April, 1921.

At present (1921) there are 1100 members of the congregation and 117 foundations. Besides 20,000 children educated in their schools, the Brothers instruct 498 orphans, 495 deaf mutes, and 119 blind. The institute has 13 mission posts with 58 missionary Brothers, 6 institutions for deaf mutes, 3 institutions for the blind, 6 novitiates, and 5 juvenates. The following foundations have been made since 1909: Canet de Mar, Spain, novitiate (1909); Saluzzo, Italy, novitiate (1909); Bangalore, India (1909); Convitto Silvio Pellico, Saluzzo, Italy (1910); Chantabon, Siam (1910); Tetraultville, Canada (1910); Nuritter, Holland, novitiate (1911); St. Bruno, Canada (1911); Rothcun, Liège (1912); Rome, Italy (1912); Liedekerke, Brabant, Belgium (1913); Tindivanam, India, school (1913); Caracas, Venezuela, (1914); Tindivanam, India, normal school (1919); Ste. Anne des Plaines, Montreal, Canada (1919); Samsen, Bangkok, Siam (1920); Petriou, Siam (1920); St. Romuald, Quebec, Canada (1920); Ste. Madeleine, Outremont, Montreal (1920); Barcelona, Spain (1920); and a number of foundations in France.

Saint Gall, DIOCESE OF (SANGALLENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—349b), includes the canton of St. Gall and two half-cantons of Appenzell in Switzerland. The diocese is directly dependent on the Holy See. The present bishop is Mgr. Robert Burkler, born at Rorschach 5 March, 1863, ordained 1888, proposed by the chapter 29 October and elected 16 December, 1913, consecrated at St. Gall 1 February, 1914, to succeed Mgr. Ruegg, deceased. St. Gall has (1919) a Catholic population of 204,000 from a total of 375,000 inhabitants, 120 parishes, 8 missions, 4 monasteries of Capuchins, 2 of women, 13 convents of women, 261 secular and 30 regular priests, 55 Brothers, 700 Sisters, 1 seminary, 10 seminarians, 1 college for boys and 210 churches or chapels.

Saint George's, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI GEORGII; cf. C. E., XIII—351a), Newfoundland, extends along the sea coast from Fortune Bay on the southwest to Flowers Cove on the extreme northwest of the island. The people for the most part depend for livelihood on the fisheries and as a consequence the parishes, which now number 12, are all on the seaboard. Rt. Rev. M. F. Power, late bishop, died in Sydney, N. S., 6 March, 1920, at the age of forty-three years, after nine years in the episcopate. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Henri Thomas Renouf, formerly parish priest of St. Patrick's in the city of St. Johns, who was consecrated 8 December, 1920, and took possession of his see 15 January, 1921. During the episcopate of Bishop Power many developments took place. A new wing was added to the Convent of Mercy at St. George's and in this way a large number of young girls of the diocese are enabled to secure a first class education, and an ample number of competent teachers are provided for the different parish schools. The Sisters of Mercy were introduced into the growing town of Bay of Islands and conduct a day school there. Four new parishes were established, among them, the new parish of Bay d'Espoir, including the Mic-mac Indian settlement at Conne River. With very few exceptions the population is native-born of French, Scotch, Irish and English ancestry. All speak the English language, though French and Gaelic may still be heard in the homes. The growth of the population is altogether due to natural increase. According to latest statistics the Catholic population numbers 13,000; there are 14 priests engaged in the work of the mission. The diocese has 40 churches, about 30 stations, and 80 schools with an average attendance of 2000 pupils. The government gives an annual per capita grant to the Catholic school boards, of which the local priest is chairman. There are two convents of the Sisters of Mercy and one of the Presentation Order, with a total of 15 Sisters. Three seminarians are at present preparing abroad for work in the diocese. Among the laity the Holy Name Society and the League of the Sacred Heart are in a flourishing condition.

Saint Hyacinthe, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI HYACINTHI; cf. C. E., XIII—351c), in the Province of Quebec, suffragan of Montreal. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Alexis-Xyste Bernard, b. 1847, ordained 1871, elected 1905, consecrated 1906. A normal school was founded at St. Hyacinthe, in 1912. The diocese has: 76 parishes, 77 churches, 1 mission, 1 monastery for men, 1 monastery for women, 220 secular priests, 19 regular priests, 277 Brothers, 1347 Sisters; 1 seminary with 477 seminarians, 4 colleges for boys with 42 teachers and 700 students, 26 colleges for girls with 429 teachers and 5481 students, 44 academies and schools under religious orders with 266 teachers and 7050 pupils (2700 boys, 4350 girls), 1 normal school with 26 professors and 211 students, 1 house of retreat, 10 asylums and hospitals, and 1 refuge. Organizations among the clergy are: La Caisse Ecclésiastique, L'Union Apostolique, Les Prêtres Adorateurs; and among the laity: Syndicats Ouvriers Nationaux Catholiques, Association Catholique de la Jeunesse, Association Catholique des Voyageurs, and Association des Zouaves. There are 120,852 Catholics and 11,721 Protestants in the diocese.

Saint-Jean-de-Maurienne, DIOCESE OF (MAURIANNENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—353d), includes part of the department of Savoy, France, and is suffragan of Chambéry. The present bishop is Mgr. Adrien-Alexis Fodéré, born at Bessans, in the diocese, student at the French Seminary in Rome, ordained there in 1866, consecrated at St. Peter's by Pius X 25 February, 1906, to succeed Mgr. Rosset, deceased. The bishop of the see has the title of Prince of Aiguebelle. During the war 55 priests and 23 seminarians were mobilized, 8 died in the war, 1 was decorated with the médaille militaire and 17 with the croix de guerre. The diocese has 87 parishes and 69,000 Catholics.

Saint Joan of Arc, SISTERS OF, a community founded in 1914 at Worcester, Mass., U. S., by Fr. Clement Staub. After three years of organization the mother-house was transferred to Quebec, 29 September, 1917, and definitely fixed at Bergerville, near Quebec, 6 September, 1918. The institute received diocesan approbation from Cardinal Begin, 2 March, 1917, and was canonically erected as a religious congregation by Benedict XV, 31 May, 1920. The object of the community is the spiritual and temporal service of priests, through love of the Sacred Heart, in a spirit of expiation, under the patronage of St. Joan of Arc, model of sacrifice. The Sisters render spiritual service in offering up for the priesthood their interior life. They give temporal service in taking care of presbyteries, apostolic schools, ecclesiastical colleges and seminaries, and homes for aged and retired priests. They have charge of the presbyteries of the Church of St. Roch and the Basilica of Quebec, and the Apostolic School of Notre Dame at Quebec. In Worcester, Mass., they have a postulate, and the care of three presbyteries in Nashua, N. H. In all, they have 5 houses in Canada and 6 in the United States, and number 35 religious, of whom 17 are professed.

Saint John, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI JOANNIS; cf. C. E., XIII—355a), in the Province of New Brunswick, Canada. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Edward Alfred Le Blanc, b. at St. Bernard, Halifax, 15 Oct., 1870, ordained 23 Dec., 1893, elected 2 Aug., 1912, published 2 Dec., consecrated 10 Dec., following. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Timothy Casey, who was transferred to the Archdiocese of Vancouver, 31 July, 1912. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains: 45 churches with resident priests, 51 missions with churches, 57 secular priests, 23 regulars, 20 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries of other dioceses. Educational and charitable institutions are: 1 college conducted by the Fathers of the Holy Cross, 4 academies, 3 orphan asylums, 1 asylum for old people, 1 hospital. The Catholic population numbers 65,000.

Saint John's, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI JOANNIS TERRÆ NOVÆ; cf. C. E., XIII—356b), in Newfoundland. Most Rev. M. F. Howley, first archbishop, died 16 October, 1914. He was succeeded by Most Rev. Edward Patrick Roche, who was born in Placentia, Newfoundland, in 1874, received his early education at St. Bonaventure's College, St. John's, and his ecclesiastical training at All Hallow's College, Dublin, Ireland. Ordained priest in 1897, after some years of parochial work, he occupied successively the posts of chancellor, administrator of the cathedral parish, and vicar general, and on the death of Archbishop Howley became administrator apostolic of the archdiocese. In 1915 he succeeded to the episcopacy, being consecrated 29 June, and receiving the pallium on 12 December of that year. Already during the present episcopate a considerable addition has been made to St. Bride's College for young ladies, the Convent of the Presentation Sisters has been enlarged by a new building, and the Presentation Schools of St. Patrick's, St. John's, have been replaced by new and modern ones. A Memorial School, the Academy of Our Lady of Mercy for the higher education of Catholic girls, honoring those Knights of Columbus who gave their lives during the Great War, is equipped with all the latest educational requirements. Besides giving his attention to the completion and embellishing of St. Patrick's Church, St. John's, the present archbishop has undertaken also the important work of the restoration of the cathedral. The communities of the Sisters of Mercy, as also those of the Presentation Nuns, formerly independent houses, have been amalgamated into provinces with a superior-general for each order. A new Catholic hospital, St. Clare's, has been opened under the management of the Sisters of Mercy. Two new convents have been established, many new schools built, the orphanages have been improved and enlarged, whilst the archdiocese has benefitted much spiritually by the erection of fourteen new churches and several new parishes. The episcopal palace of St. John's, the residence of the archbishop, was destroyed by fire in February, 1921. A new building has been erected to replace the venerable edifice built in the year 1854.

The Catholic population of the archdiocese is 50,000, all English-speaking. There are: 28 parishes, 27 churches, 35 missions, 1 monastery for men with 25

Christian Brothers, 9 convents of Presentation Nuns with 121 Sisters, 8 convents of Sisters of Mercy with 88 Sisters, 25 seminarians, 1 college for men (St. Bonaventure's) with 12 teachers and 460 students, 1 college for women (St. Bride's) with 14 teachers and 141 students, 39 high schools, 1 Academy of Our Lady of Mercy with 23 teachers and 450 girls, 2 training schools forming departments of St. Bonaventure's (16 students) and St. Bride's colleges (35 students), 146 elementary schools with 420 teachers and 11,065 pupils, 1 industrial school with 152 pupils under the instruction of 6 Brothers assisted by lay teachers, 1 hospital (St. Clare's) under the Sisters of Mercy, Belvedere Orphanage with 153 girls under the care of the Sisters of Mercy, Mount Cashel Orphanage with 152 boys under the care of the Christian Brothers. All institutions are assisted by government grants. The general hospital, poor asylum, lunatic asylum, and sanatorium admit the ministry of priests. Organizations among the laity are the Benevolent Irish Society, Total Abstinence Society, Star of the Sea Association, Holy Name Society, Knights of Columbus, and other pious sodalities.

Saint John's University, of Toledo, Ohio, was opened in September, 1898, and incorporated as "St. John's College" on 22 May, 1900. On 29 August, 1903, the charter was amended and the institution became "St. John's University." In September, 1908, the Law Department was opened and the university now consists of the High School Department, College of Arts and Sciences, including a pre-medical department, and the Law School, which is a night school. The university is conducted by the Jesuit Fathers and their usual course of training is followed. During the summer a course of studies is given for members of other religious orders wishing to attend, and during the winter an extension course of studies is given in the evenings. A library of 5500 volumes is at the disposal of the students, and a Law Library of 1000 volumes. A bi-weekly paper, "The Gleaner," is published by the students. In 1921 the High School Department registered 250 students under a faculty of 16; the College of Arts and Sciences, 39 students, faculty 15; Law School, 44 students, faculty 24. Rev. Francis X. Busch, S.J., is president of the university.

Saint Joseph, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI JOSEPHI; cf. C. E., XIII—356d), in Missouri. The City of St. Joseph has at present: 8 parishes with 13 resident pastors, each parish having a parochial school, attended by over 2000 pupils; a Catholic high school for boys conducted by the Brothers of the Christian Schools; a Catholic high school for girls, conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart; and an academy and junior college for young ladies, conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart; one hospital conducted by the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul. The City of St. Joseph has a Catholic population of about 15,000. Outside of the city may be mentioned the Benedictine Abbey of Conception, established in 1874. The Benedictine Fathers conduct a seminary for their own students, and a classical college. For the present several parishes and missions in the diocese are attended by the Benedictines from Conception Abbey. The mother-house and academy of the Benedictine Sisters of Perpetual Adoration is at Clyde; and at Maryville is the mother-house of the Franciscan Sisters, who conduct hospitals at Maryville, Hannibal, and Moberly. An academy at Chillicothe is conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph, and one at Moberly is conducted by the Sisters of Loretto.

By a decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory, dated Rome, 16 June, 1911, the territory contained in the counties of Adair, Clark, Knox, Lewis, Macon, Marion, Monroe, Ralls, Randolph, Shelby, Schuyler, Scotland, and that part of Chariton County east of the Chariton River was detached from the Archdiocese of St. Louis and attached to the Diocese of St. Joseph. By reason of this extension the Diocese of St. Joseph now comprises the whole northern part of the State of Missouri extending from the Missouri to the Mississippi River and is bounded on the south by the counties of Howard, Boone, Audrain, and Pike. The diocese has 32 parochial schools with an attendance of 1985 boys and 1980 girls, or a total of 3965. The Catholic population is about 42,000. On account of the advanced age and continued infirmity of Bishop M. F. Burke, by virtue of a decree of the Sacred Congregation of the Consistory, dated 18 April, 1921, Rt. Rev. James P. Brady was named apostolic administrator of the Diocese of St. Joseph, with all the rights and privileges annexed by law to that office. The Rt. Rev. James P. Brady took official possession of the administration according to the terms of the decree 25 April, 1921.

Saint Joseph, MISSIONARIES OF, OF MEXICO (JOSEPHITES).—This congregation was founded in the City of Mexico in 1872, during the time of President Juarez, when anti-religious laws had been promulgated and all the religious congregations driven from Mexican soil. A member of the Congregation of the Mission, expelled from his convent, conceived the idea of founding a congregation with a native character, to help efface the evil caused by the dispersion of the religious who had existed there. This priest was Fr. José M. Vilaseca, born in Igualda, Spain, 19 January, 1831. Fr. Vilaseca's idea was to found an order similar to the institutes of St. Vincent de Paul, with organizations like the Lazarists and Sisters of Charity. The two institutes were placed under the protection of St. Joseph and were called Missionaries of St. Joseph (Josefines) and Sisters of St. Joseph (Josefinas). Their object was to preach the gospel to the people, especially to the poor and the numerous Indians in Mexico, still living in savagery and idolatry. The Sisters were to instruct the young and nurse the sick in hospitals. In the beginning the circumstances of the persecution of congregations caused the two institutes to lead a concealed life. The men mingled with the students of a seminary called the Clerical College, which gave to the dioceses of Mexico two hundred priests in those troubled years. The Sisters passed as Daughters of Mary. However, in a short time, the founder and some of his religious managed to elude the authorities, and give missions in the country and small centers.

During the presidency of General Porfirio Diaz the persecution was very much abated and some expelled congregations returned to Mexico, but not the Sisters of Charity. The Josephite Institutes took advantage of this truce to consolidate and increase their numbers. The missionaries separated from the Clerical College and started their own seminary in spite of great difficulty, through lack of vocations. In Mexico there is a great scarcity of religious vocations among men. The dioceses of the central section of the country, like Guadalajara, Michoacan, and Zamora, produce a large number of secular priests each year but very few religious. The other dioceses even lack secular priests. The Congregation of St. Joseph did not have many subjects, and of the few foundations made several disappeared for various reasons. In 1892 the first missionaries succeeded in penetrating the country of the savage Indian tribes. The Trahumares in the State of Chihuahua and the Yaquis in Sonora were evangelized but these missions were not permanent, as the priests were no more than explorers of the land. Later the Fathers penetrated the mountains called Nayarit which lie in the States of Zacatecas, Durango, and Jalisco. There they established themselves and for ten years evangelized the Indians until the destructive revolution of 1914 and the following years expelled the missionaries and destroyed their works.

In 1895 the congregation opened a house in Rome, established there their procurator general, and ordered its students to follow the scholastic courses of the Roman University. In 1898 the Decretum Laudis was obtained from the Holy See. In 1902 the Sacred College approved the constitutions of the congregation conditionally for seven years, and on 14 September, 1911, granted final approbation. Fr. Vilaseca had died 3 April, 1910, and was succeeded by Fr. José M. Troncoso, now head of the institute. The religious persecution which ravaged Mexico through the instrumentality of President Carranza was as fierce and terrible as that of President Juarez fifty years before, and caused great harm to the Josephites. All their houses were occupied by soldiers and their religious dispersed, among them their superior general, who emigrated to the United States, while others went to Central America. The revolutionary trouble has now passed and the religious can return to their houses and take up their missions. At present the number of missionaries is 100 with 12 houses, all in Mexico, and a procurator general in Rome.

Saint Joseph, SISTERS OF.—CONGREGATION OF THE SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH (cf. C. E., VIII—511a), founded at Le Puy, France, in 1650 by Fr. Jean-Paul Médaille, S.J., and dispersed during the French Revolution. Among the religious who survived the reign of terror was Mother St. John Fontbonne, who, anxious to reassemble her community, established a novitiate at Saint Etienne in 1807 at the expressed wish of Cardinal Fisch for the reconstruction of the congregation. This foundation was a few years later removed to Lyons which then became the mother-house for that archdiocese, the congregation at that time being diocesan. The community now at Le Puy has a mother-house on the site of the original foundation of 1650. It has suffered much under recent legislation. The mother-house at Lyons is still in existence and had numerous schools and institutions previous to 1905. From it foundations have been made in Armenia, Egypt, Corsica, the Indies, Mexico, and the United States. The Sisters were introduced into the United States through correspondence between Bishop Rosati of St. Louis and Fr. Charles Cholleton, Spiritual Father of the Sisters in the Diocese of Lyons and also foreign vicar of St. Louis. They settled first in Carondelet, in the Diocese of St. Louis, in 1836, and later Bishop Rosati sent three religious to Cahokia. The foundation in Canada was made by Sister Delphine, one of the original band of six who came to Carondelet from Lyons.

Boston (cf. C. E., VIII—512d).—In 1873 Sisters of St. Joseph from the Brooklyn foundation opened a parochial school in connection with St. Thomas Church, Jamaica Plain, at the request of Fr. Thomas Magennis, pastor there. They were soon asked to take charge of similar schools in South Boston, Stoughton, Amesbury. In 1876 a novitiate was opened and Boston became an independent establishment of the Sisters under Archbishop Williams, with Mother Mary Regis as superior. The novitiate was transferred to Cambridge in 1885 and Mt. St. Joseph Academy was opened there, but this property was sold for Metropolitan Park purposes in 1891 and a novitiate and academy were built at Brighton. In 1902 a normal school was opened at Canton, and the novitiate transferred there. In 1921 these were removed to Framingham to the magnificent estate given the Sisters by the late Thomas Fitzpatrick of Boston. The mother-house is still at Brighton. The Sisters are now teaching throughout the archdiocese, and (1922) number 603 in charge of 1 academy, 27 parish schools, including 5 high schools, a school for the deaf, and an industrial school for girls. They have in their schools 14,745 boys and girls. The present superior, Mother Mary Borgia, was re-elected in July, 1920, for her sixth term of office. Since 1910 the Sisters have made 26 new foundations, the present number being 38. In addition to their schools they conduct homes for working girls, homes for aged women, and rest houses for women. Their foundress, Mother Mary Regis, died in 1917, at Brighton, where she had retired due to failing health. She had entered the community at Brooklyn in 1863, was made superior of the Boston foundation in 1873, and governed it as an independent establishment from 1876 to 1890. Subsequently she was appointed local superior of Saint Joseph's, Amesbury, and again superior of St. Thomas Convent, Jamaica Plain.

Brooklyn (cf. C. E., VIII—512d).—In 1856, Bishop Loughlin of Brooklyn applied to the mother-house of Philadelphia for Sisters of Saint Joseph who, in the rapidly widening field of education in Long Island, were to form the nucleus of a new community. The three Sisters named for the foundation arrived 25 August, 1856, and 8 September opened Saint Mary's Academy in Williamsburg. Two years later a parochial school was inaugurated in a neighboring parish. In 1860 the mother-house, novitiate, and boarding school were removed to Flushing, L. I., whence the varied activities of the Sisters were extended over the diocese. Several years later, the mother-house and novitiate were transferred to Brentwood, where an academy for young ladies was opened 8 September, 1903. Saint Joseph's alumnae includes Flushing and Brentwood graduates, whose loyalty has been substantially proved, especially in reference to their Alma Mater. The former students' patronage is noticeable, in their representatives at the Brentwood Academy, even to the second and third generation. The Congregation of the Sisters of Saint Joseph in the Diocese of Brooklyn, now (1921) numbering 800 members, must be filially recognized in 5 branch communities: Ebensburg, Pa.; Rutland, Vt.; Boston, Chicopee Falls, and Springfield, Mass. In the Diocese of Brooklyn the Sisters preside over 6 academies, 50 parochial schools, 4 orphanages, and 2 hospitals. In accordance with the requirements of Canon Law, several changes have been recently made among the local superiors. During the past decade 15 missions were opened, including an academy, 2 commercial schools, a summer resort for the Sisters, 10 parochial schools, and Saint Joseph's Day College for Women.

In June, 1920, the first college graduates, twelve in number, received from the State University the degree B. A. At present, several of this pioneer class, holding important positions as teachers, are extending the work of Catholic education. As the college is patronized chiefly by Brooklyn high schools, the academies in charge of the Sisters of Saint Joseph are well represented. The college building was formerly known as the Pratt Mansion. On 8 August, 1921, the college sustained a great loss in the death of its venerated founder and president, Bishop McDonnell, who, five years before, had named the present Bishop Molloy head of the faculty, and is now succeeded by him.

Buffalo (cf. C. E., VIII—512d).—Four Sisters of St. Joseph from Carondelet introduced the congregation into the Diocese of Buffalo in 1854, the community becoming autonomous there in 1861. The general superiors have been Mother M. of the Sacred Heart, Mother M. Scholastica, and the present superior, Mother M. Austin Teresa. The term of superior has been changed from three to six years, and the novitiate has been reduced from five to three years, according to the revised Code of Canon Law. Since 1910 the Sisters have opened 5 new schools and a finely equipped hospital. At present they have 40 institutions under their charge, including 1 deaf mute asylum, 3 orphan asylums, 1 infant asylum, 1 hospital, 1 home for women and working girls and 3 schools, of which one is a boarding academy. The community numbers 360, and they have under instruction 9000 children.

Burlington (cf. C. E., VIII—513a).—In the Diocese of Burlington 65 professed Sisters, 31 novices, and 4 postulants are in charge of 1 home and 7 schools with 2000 pupils.

Chicago (cf. C. E., VIII—513a).—In the Archdiocese of Chicago 60 professed Sisters, 29 novices, and 5 postulants teach 1540 pupils in 7 parochial schools and 2 academies. The mother-house is at La Grange, Ill.

Cleveland (cf. C. E., VIII—513a).—In the Diocese of Cleveland 140 professed Sisters, 19 novices, and 2 postulants conduct an academy and 12 parochial schools with 5200 pupils. The mother-house is at West Park, Ohio.

Concordia (cf. C. E., VIII—513b).—Established by four Sisters from Rochester in 1883, the Sisters of St. Joseph of Concordia now number 380 and have under their care 37 institutions. Since 1910 they have opened a boarding school for girls at Cawker City, Kansas, and a parochial school in connection with it; a diocesan orphanage at Abilene, Kansas; and an old people's home also at Abilene, with 20 inmates.

Detroit (cf. C. E., VIII—513b).—In the Diocese of Detroit 253 professed Sisters, 24 novices, and 16 postulants have charge of 3810 pupils and 425 orphans. The mother-house is Nazareth Convent, Nazareth, Mich.

Erie (cf. C. E., VIII—513b).—The present superior of this community, founded from Carondelet in 1860, is Mother M. Helena, elected in July, 1918, and re-elected in 1921. She had been appointed by Bishop Fitzmaurice to fill the unexpired term of office of Mother M. Eugenia, fourth general superior, who died 23 December, 1917. Mother M. Ambrosia, second general superior, died 9 October, 1916. Due to the revised Code of Canon Law, the novitiate is shortened from seven to five years; local superiors are changed every three years, and superiors of major institutions every six years. At present the community numbers 227 Sisters and 6 postulants. They have 19 institutions under their care, all in Pennsylvania. These are: Villa Maria Academy, mother-house and young ladies' boarding school, Erie; St. Vincent's Hospital, Erie; Spencer Hospital, Meadville; St. Joseph's Orphanage, Erie; Catholic Boys' Home, Harbour Creek; St. Mary's Home for the Aged, Erie; Cathedral, St. Patrick's, St. Joseph's, St. Michael's, St. Ann's, St. John's, and Sacred Heart parochial schools, Erie; St. Bernard's parochial and high school, Bradford; St. Francis's parochial and high school, Clearfield; St. Agatha's parochial and high school, Meadville; St. Bridget's parochial school, Meadville; St. Mary's parochial and high school, Reynoldsville; St. Leo's parochial and high school, Ridgeway. The Sisters care for 6800 patients, 320 orphans, 50 aged, and 4800 pupils annually.

Fall River (cf. C. E., VIII—513c).—In the Diocese of Fall River 43 Sisters teach 1781 pupils in 5 parochial schools.

Fort Wayne (cf. C. E., VIII—513c).—In the Diocese of Fort Wayne 65 professed Sisters, 12 novices, and 7 postulants teach 1000 pupils. The mother-house is at Tipton, Ind.

Ogdensburg (cf. C. E., VIII—513c).—There are 80 Sisters in the Diocese of Ogdensburg, with mother-house at Watertown, N. Y.

Philadelphia (cf. C. E., VIII—513c).—This community, with mother-house at Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, conducts establishments in the archdioceses of Baltimore and Philadelphia, and in the dioceses of Harrisburg, Newark, and Trenton. There are 712 professed Sisters, 350 juniors and novices, and 41 postulants. Statistics for 1921 are as follows: 5 academies, 655 pupils; 1 deaf-mute institute, 53 boarders, 225 Sunday School deaf-mute pupils; 3 high schools; 4 parish high schools; 17 commercial schools; 63 elementary schools; 36,840 pupils; 3 asylums, 970 inmates; 3 day nurseries, 125 children; 1 settlement house.

Pittsburgh (cf. C. E., VIII—513d).—This community has its mother-house at Baden, Beaver Co., Penn., and conducts establishments in the Dioceses of Altoona and Pittsburgh. There are 266 professed Sisters, 45 novices, 11 postulants, and 9000 pupils.

Rochester (cf. C. E., VIII—514a).—In the dioceses of Rochester and Syracuse there are 441 professed Sisters, 115 novices, and 12 postulants. They have under their care 2 orphan asylums with 357 orphans 1 home for the aged with 85 inmates, teach and 14,152 pupils.

Sacramento.—On 22 June, 1912, in response to the late Bishop Grace's urgent call for Sisters, Mother Bernard Gosselin, then assistant Superior at La Grange, Ill., with nine companions, established a novitiate in Eureka, Cal., under the direction of Mgr. L. Kennedy, V.G. Shortly after their arrival a large academy and parochial school were built. In 1916 St. Bernard's Institute for boys was opened at Ferndale, Cal. The Sisters also conduct schools in Brawley, Imperial Valley, Santa Ana, and Ontario, in the Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles. On 1 Nov., 1920, the Sisters opened to the public one of the most modern and fully equipped hospitals on the coast. The following year marked the opening of St. Mary's Chinese Mission, conducted by the Paulist Fathers, San Francisco, where the Sisters of St. Joseph teach 600 Chinese pupils daily. On the feast of the Conversion of St. Paul, six months after the birth of this new mission, over 75 converts were baptized, four priests performing the impressive ceremony at the same time. The Sisters of St. Joseph of Eureka follow the rules of their original foundation of Lyons, and in addition to educational and hospital work, undertake all missionary works and works of mercy. Though only ten years established the community already numbers nearly 100 members.

St. Augustine (cf. C. E., VIII—514a).—In the Diocese of St. Augustine 113 professed Sisters, 7 novices, and 2 postulants conduct 8 mission houses, 1 orphanage with 70 orphans, 3 academies, 15 schools, attended by 2434 children.

St. Louis (cf. C. E., VIII—514b).—The six Sisters of St. Joseph who came from Lyons in 1836 to Saint Louis were: Sisters Félicité Bouté, Febronie Chapellon, Philomène Vilaine, Saint Protas Deboille, Febronie and Delphine Fontbonne. They were joined in 1837 by two more Sisters from Lyons, Sisters Celestine Pommerel and Saint John Fournier. Sister Delphine Fontbonne, niece of Mother Saint John Fontbonne, superior general of the Lyons congregation, was appointed superior in Carondelet, then a small French village of several hundred inhabitants. The Sisters were given charge of the village school in 1837, and in the following year began the instruction of deaf-mutes. Bishop Rosati obtained an appropriation for this deaf-mute school from the Missouri Legislature in 1839. Mother Celestine Pommerel (1839-57) succeeded Mother Delphine and governed the congregation for eighteen years. She organized St. Joseph's Academy, chartered in 1853, and in 1845 sent Sister teachers to the oldest parochial school in St. Louis, St. Vincent's, now (1921) celebrating its 76th anniversary and to a school for Catholic colored children of the city. This was maintained until obstacles were placed by the civil authorities in the way of its continuance. During her term of office, houses of the congregation were established in the dioceses of Philadelphia, St. Paul (Minn.), Toronto (Canada), Wheeling (Va.), Buffalo (N. Y.), and Natchez (Miss.). Her successor, Mother St. John Facemaz (1857-72), on the advice of Archbishop Kendrick of St. Louis, and with his cooperation, formed a generalate comprising the houses in Missouri, Minnesota, Mississippi, and Illinois, with mother-house at St. Louis, and obtained for it the approbation of Pius IX. Mother Agatha Guthrie (1872-1904), a native of St. Louis, was an indefatigable worker in the cause of charity, and extended the activities of the congregation to the Creole children of the South and to the Western Indian tribes. At her death in 1904, the congregation counted numerous institutions in 17 dioceses of the United States. Mother Agnes Gonsaga Ryan (1905-17) was succeeded by the present mother general, Mother Mary Agnes Rossiter (1917-).

The congregation numbers (1921) 2300 professed members, with a large novitiate in each of the four provinces, the average number of novices being 150. At the last enumeration in 1920, novices and postulants numbered 173. The community maintains 2 institutes for deaf-mutes; 1 Creole and 4 Indian schools, among the latter that of San Xavier del Bac in Arizona, one of the largest day schools for Indians in the United States; 17 academies; 1 conservatory of music and art, with over 1000 pupils; 3 colleges, two juniors and one senior. The last, a member of the American Association of Colleges, was opened under the auspices of Archbishop Ireland, in St. Paul, where his sister, Mother Seraphine, was provincial superior for many years. The sisters are teaching in 34 high schools and 163 parochial schools, with a total enrollment of 56,791 pupils. They also have charge of 1 day nursery; 1 infant asylum; 1 home for the friendless; 7 orphanages; and 10 hospitals which cared for 16,605 patients during 1920. These educational and benevolent institutions are spread throughout 23 archdioceses and dioceses.

Savannah (cf. C. E., VII—515a).—In the Diocese of Savannah there are 58 Sisters, with 750 pupils under instruction. The mother-house is at Augusta, Ga.

Springfield (cf. C. E., VIII—515a).—In the Diocese of Springfield 400 professed Sisters and 30 novices teach 4000 pupils in 23 parochial schools.

Superior.—This community was founded in 1907 by three Sisters of St. Joseph from Cincinnati, Ohio, at the request of Bishop Schinner of Superior and through the kindness of Rev. Albert Dierckes, S.J., president of St. Xavier College, Cincinnati, and Rev. F. X. O'Neill, S.J. Mother Evangelina, accompanied by Sisters M. Xavier and M. Joseph, first took charge of a school then in course of erection in Superior. The first mother-house was in Billings Park, in St. Patrick's parish. In 1909 the Jesuits from Cincinnati took charge of this parish in Superior and began the organization of the Cloude Allouez College. Fr. Dierckes died in 1914, and being short of men the Jesuits were withdrawn from Superior, and the Sisters of St. Joseph took over the Cloude Allouez College, establishing a girls' high school there. In March, 1909, the Sisters undertook the work of a government day school for Indian children at Reserve, Wis. They also had charge of a parochial school at Hayward, Wis., until all work there closed down. Billings Park is now the Good Samaritan Hospital, conducted by the Sisters, and the mother-house has been transferred to Central Park, a beautiful location on the Bay of Superior, facing Lake Superior. The community numbers (1921) 17 Sisters, 6 novices, and 3 postulants.

Wheeling (cf. C. E., VIII—515b).—In the Diocese of Wheeling there are 119 professed Sisters, 22 novices, and 3 postulants.

Wichita (cf. C. E., XIV—515b).—The Sisters of St. Joseph were established with the mother-house in this diocese, at the re-division of the Kansas dioceses in 1897, the first foundation having been made at Abilene, Kansas, in 1887, by Sisters from Concordia. The first general superior was Mother M. Bernard Sheridan (1887–1908). She was succeeded by Mother M. Aloysia Kelleher, who served an extra year beyond her two terms in order to complete the new mother-house, St. Mary's Convent. This was solemnly dedicated by Bishop Hennessey of Wichita, 11 February, 1915. Mother M. Colette Kipp was elected general superior, 4 July, 1915, and was succeeded by the present superior, Mother M. Aloysia Kelleher, 15 August, 1921. The work of the community is the education of children and the care of the sick in hospitals. At the present time (1921) the Sisters number 270, and have 1 academy, 2 high schools, 20 parochial schools, 6 hospitals, and 5 nurses' training schools.

Canada.—Hamilton (cf. C. E., VIII—515c).—This community with mother-house at Hamilton, Ont., numbers 183 professed Sisters, 33 novices, and 9 postulants. The Sisters conduct 10 schools in the city of Hamilton, and have foundations at Paris (1858), Brantford (1859), Guelph (1861), Arthur (1870), Dundas (1879), and Mt. Forest (1908).

London (cf. C. E., VIII—515c).—The community of Sisters of St. Joseph at London, Ontario now (1922) number 234, in charge of 15 mission houses, 2 hospitals, 19 schools, an orphan asylum and a house of refuge for the aged. They also teach the separate schools of the city. About 3000 children are under their care. In 1914 a larger mother-house became necessary so the Convent of the Sacred Heart was purchased from the Religious of the Sacred Heart who left for other fields of labor.

Peterborough (cf. C. E., VIII—515d).—In 1890 several Sisters from the mother-house at Toronto established a house at Peterborough which became in turn the nucleus of a new congregation. The community now (1921) numbers 292 professed Sisters, 73 novices, and 6 postulants. The Sisters have charge of 2 academies, 3 hospitals, 2 orphanages, a home for the aged, and 29 separate schools in the diocese of Peterborough, Sault Ste. Marie, Ottawa, and Alexandria. In 1910 a foundation was made at Douglas in the Diocese of Pembroke. Other foundations in the same diocese were Killaloe (1914) and Mount St. Patrick (1916). In 1921 the Diocese of Pembroke was granted its own mother-house at Pembroke, with a community of 27 members from the Peterborough community. Other recent foundations were Almonte in the Archdiocese of Ottawa in 1914 and St. Andrews West in the Diocese of Alexandria in 1917. Among recent deaths was that of Mother Annunciation, in May, 1920. She was one of the pioneers of the Peterborough community, Superior of St. Joseph's Academy, Lindsay, for many years, and translator of "The Life of Mother Sacred Heart." In 1918 Mother Clotilde, who had been Superior General for sixteen years, resigned her office and was succeeded by the present Superior, Mother Aldegonde.

Toronto (cf. C. E., VIII—515d).—In 1914 the constitutions of the institute were revised according to the requirements of Canon Law. General government was established and the system of election by delegation introduced. The houses of the Diocese of Toronto and the missions of Western Canada elected a superior general and general council to administer the affairs of the institute. In 1916 application was made to the Holy See for pontifical approval of the congregation and its constitutions. In July, 1920, the initial step in the process was taken by the Sacred Congregation of Regulars, and the decree of praise was granted, the institute thereby ceasing to be diocesan and taking rank among the approved congregations of the Church. In 1921 the constitutions were further revised to meet the ruling of the new Code of Canon Law, and application was made to the pope for final approbation.

Since 1910 the following new foundations have been made: St. Joseph's College, Toronto, was affiliated with St. Michaels, the Catholic college of the University of Toronto, in 1911, and college courses were begun in October of that year; St. Joseph's had carried on the work of secondary education for nearly fifty years; the graduates of the four or five years' college course now receive their degree from the University of Toronto upon passing the regular annual examinations there; an alumnae association was formed in 1911 and in the same year appeared the initial number of the college quarterly "St. Joseph's Lilies." St. Joseph's Hospital at Comox, Vancouver Island, B. C., the first mission of the Sisters in Western Canada, was opened in July, 1913; primarily for the benefit of the men in the logging and mining camps of the district, the hospital is however open to all, and the great work accomplished in relieving physical suffering and ministering to the care of souls has removed the barrier of anti-Catholic prejudice which at first seemed insurmountable; 9 Sisters are now engaged in the institution, and the number of patients registered during 1921 was 420. St. Joseph's Convent, Prince Rupert, B. C., was opened 15 August, 1916, at the urgent request of Rt. Rev. E. I. Bunos; 4 sisters took charge of the parochial school and in 1917 St. Joseph's boarding and day school were opened; the community now numbers 9 Sisters, and the number of pupils registered during 1921 was 80 in the boarding and day school and 130 in the parochial school. St. Joseph's Convent, Ladysmith, Vancouver Island, B. C., was founded in September, 1917; there are 5 Sisters in charge of a parochial school with 125 pupils. St. Joseph's Convent, Penetanguishene, Ont., has 6 sisters in the mission opened there in September, 1918, and 4 sisters with 7 lay teachers in charge of the public school, with 465 pupils. St. Joseph's Convent, Winnipeg, Manitoba, was founded in March, 1919, at the request of Archbishop Sinnott, the Sisters taking charge of the parochial school in St. Joseph's parish; there are 9 Sisters in the mission, and 5 Sisters in the school, with 300 pupils; in January, 1921, two Sisters were sent to teach in St. Alphonsus School in the Archdiocese of St. Boniface, Manitoba, with 110 pupils registered there. St. Anne's Convent, St. James (Winnipeg), Manitoba, was established in September, 1921, when a community house was opened in St. Anne's parish; there are 4 Sisters in the mission, and 3 Sisters teach in the parochial school, with 143 pupils. St. Joseph's Hospital, Toronto, was opened in October, 1921, at Sunnyside to relieve the needs of the western section of the city; the hospital at present accommodates 25 patients.

The following distinguished members of the congregation are recently deceased: Mother M. M. de Pazzi Kennedy (d. 1915), superior general of the congregation for eighteen years, being twice elected to the office (1887-99, 1902-8); memorials of her zeal are the beautiful chapel in the mother-house, St. Michael's Hospital, Toronto, and St. Joseph's Hospital, Port Arthur, erected during her administration, and the founding of many libraries for the spread of Catholic literature in poor localities. Sister M. Emerentia Lonergan, esteemed and revered as teacher, literary devotee, and religious, for sixteen years secretary general of the congregation, also editor of "St. Joseph's Lilies." Sister M. Austin McKay-Warnock, prominent educationalist and at the time of her death head of the faculty of St. Joseph's University College, having made a brilliant course of studies there, winning the Edward Blake Scholarship, the George Brown Scholarship, and the Italian prize granted by the minister of foreign affairs for Italy.

At present (1921) there are 18 foundations of the institute: 13 in the Diocese of Toronto and 5 in Western Canada. The Sisters number 400. They conduct a university college, 4 academies, 1 high school, and 30 separate schools with a total attendance of 8903 pupils. They are also in charge of 3 hospitals which have an annual registration of 5891 patients, a House of Providence for the poor and the aged with 420 inmates, and an orphanage for 225 children. The present superior general is Mother M. Victoria, elected in 1920.

Sisters of St. Joseph of Annecy (cf. C. E., VIII—515d).—The mother-house of the Sisters of St. Joseph of the English province is at Annecy, Savoy. At present the congregation has 19 houses in France, and 6 in Switzerland. The Sisters in the Province of Annecy are engaged in teaching 10 schools for poor children, and 3 boarding schools, each of which latter has a finishing course for training girls in housekeeping. The Sisters have charge of 8 hospitals and hostels, 3 houses where nursing Sisters reside who go to nurse the sick in their homes, and from 12 of the existing houses the Sisters visit and tend the sick. They also have 1 orphanage, and in 5 of the houses there are work-rooms and organizations for the protection of girls and for procuring them employment. The Sisters of St. Joseph of Annecy, in England, are entirely devoted to the teaching profession. There are 6 houses of the congregation in England: Newport (the provincial house and novitiate), Devizes, Malmesbury, Bristol, Clifton, Taunton. The last was founded in 1920 and the Sisters took charge there of the elementary schools, at the desire of the Bishop of Clifton. The total number of pupils taught by the Sisters in the elementary schools in England is about 2500. The Sisters have charge of 10 schools. They also have 2 boarding schools to which are attached large day schools, with a total of about 500 pupils. At Blairs College, Aberdeen, Scotland, there are 13 Sisters in charge of the domestic arrangements and housework of the college. At Newport and in all the other houses of the congregation in England, the Sisters devote their evenings to instructing and preparing non-Catholic women for reception into the Catholic Church. They also visit the sick and poor in their homes as well as in the hospitals, and help many to die well. The Sisters in England (1921) number in all 89 members. In the Province of Vizagapatam, India, the Sisters of St. Joseph are in charge of 8 schools, 5 for Europeans and 3 for natives; 2 boarding schools; 4 orphanages; 4 dispensaries; 1 work depot; 3 hospitals. The number taught and cared for by the Sisters is about 5000 children and 270 orphans. They nurse in the hospitals and at their homes, about 8200 sick persons every year. In their missionary journeys they baptize, on an average, 6000 children in articulo mortis.

Sisters of St. Joseph of Bourg (cf. C. E., VIII—516a).—These Sisters, with mother-house at Bourg, have a novitiate at New Orleans, La., in the United States, where they conduct establishments in the archdioceses of Cincinnati, Dubuque, New Orleans, and St. Paul and in the dioceses of Duluth, Natches, and Superior. There are in the United States 175 Sisters in charge of 25 schools, 1 orphan hospital, 1 industrial school, 1 asylum, and 1 home for working girls, with 2500 pupils under their instruction.

Sisters of St. Joseph of Chambéry (cf. C. E., VIII—516b).—Mother Leonide continued to govern the congregation until 1919. Her generalate was a troubled one, having witnessed the closing of so many of the houses in France; as assistant, in 1903, she took up the tangled threads of the government at an inauspicious time. It was a great care for her to provide for the needs of so many of her Sisters who were scattered far and wide. In August, 1912, the congregation celebrated the hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the mother-house at Chambéry. In the early stages of the war the Sisters had to flee from Odessa, and before the war was over, the Russian province was practically annihilated. While Russia was with the Allies, three of the Hospital Sisters of Petrograd followed the army as nurses, and were captured by the Germans. They were liberated some time later, through the influence of the Danish government, and returned to Petrograd. Under the Soviet Government, several Sisters were imprisoned, some for months, but God ever watched over them. Finally, the Sisters, not being able to render service to their neighbor, and being constantly in danger of imprisonment, decided to leave Russia, with the exception of a few who were Russian subjects, and therefore could not obtain passports. During the occupation of Belgium, the Sisters kept their schools open and, in spite of great privations, lived to witness the return of the King. In the war countries and in the adjacent neutral countries, the Sisters distinguished themselves by the help they gave to the wounded or the passing regiments. Several governments awarded medals and crosses to members of the congregation for the services rendered. A gold medal was awarded to the congregation in token of gratitude by the French government; 55 medals were given to individual Sisters, of which three were from the King of Greece, and six from Queen Elisabeth of Belgium. During the war the Sisters opened an ambulance hospital near the mother-house at Chambéry, another at Courbevoie, Seine. The two hospitals of Aix-les-Bains (Savoie) and one at Rumilly (Savoie) were converted into ambulances. In all of these, the Sisters devoted themselves to the care of the wounded and the dying. At the age of eighty-two, after a life devoted to the interests of her congregation, Mother Leonide died at Chambéry, 17 January, 1919.

At the General Chapter held in August, 1919, Mother Mary Sacred Heart was elected superior general. Some months after the Sisters of Tarnopol (Galicia) had to flee before the advancing army of the Bolsheviki and abandon their convent and school. Within the last few years, several houses have been reopened in France, new foundations made and the novitiate has been reestablished. Soon after her election, the superior general undertook a journey to some of the provinces, Rome, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Brazil.

The following new foundations have been made: in Italy; a school, kindergarten, and sewing class (1912) in Tuscany; in Denmark, four schools and one academy; in Brazil, one academy and two hospitals; in the United States: five schools, of which one academy is in Stamford, Conn., one parochial school in West Haven, Conn., a school for boys in Deep River, Conn., two schools in St. Mary's County, Md. At present 150 houses belong to the congregation, 105 of which are outside of France. There are about 1830 Sisters in the institute. Their work is educational and charitable. The institute has hospitals, schools, homes for the aged, orphan asylums and one refuge for lepers. The schools are parochial, high schools, academies for young ladies, training schools for nurses. In France, since the persecutions, a large number of sewing-classes have been opened for young girls, also sanitariums for the prevention of tuberculosis, for war-orphans, or otherwise afflicted persons. In the American province alone, there are about 11,703 patients cared for yearly. There are about 3345 pupils attending the parochial schools; about 1700 in the Sunday-school classes.

As the rule has been revised at Rome to meet the requirements of a generalate in 1874 and to obtain papal approbation, few changes had to be made to meet the requirements of the new Canon Law. The term of office for local superiors, however, has been limited to three years and, exceptionally, to six years.

Sisters of St. Joseph of St. Vallier (cf. C. E., VIII—516d).—This congregation, with mother-house at St. Vallier, France, has a provincial house, novitiate, and boarding school in Quebec, and 7 other foundations in Canada, all of which are model and elementary schools and 3 of which are boarding schools as well.

LITTLE DAUGHTERS OF ST. JOSEPH (cf. C. E., VIII—517a).—The community now has two houses in Montreal, the original foundation at 45 rue Notre Dame de Lourdes and the new mother-house at 989 rue Sherbrooke Ouest, erected in 1911. There are 109 professed Sisters, 13 novices, and 4 postulants. The superior general is Sister Marie-Philomène.

POLISH FRANCISCAN SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH (cf. C. E., VIII—517b).—This community, with mother-house and novitiate at St. Joseph's Convent, Stevens Point, Wisconsin, numbers 381 professed Sisters, 70 novices, and 33 postulants. They are in charge of 39 schools with 21,468 pupils.

SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF PEACE (cf. C. E., VIII—517c).—In 1909 there was an election of a general superior at the mother-house, in Nottingham, England, and Mother Teresa was elected for a second term of six years. At the expiration of this time, in 1915, a general chapter could not be convened owing to difficulty in travelling during war time. Dispensation was therefore obtained each year until 1919, when the chapter assembled at Englewood, N. J., and elected Mother Agatha superior general for six years. In May, 1910, the constitutions, which had been previously submitted to the Sacred Congregation of Religious for approval, were returned with directions to have them altered to conform to the requirements of the Revised Code of Canon Law.

The Sisters have charge of the following homes for working girls: St. Joseph's, Jersey City, opened in 1885; a large summer home at Englewood, N. J., erected in 1888; the Hotel Washington, Jersey City, purchased in 1902, and accommodating 100; Loretto Hall, at Newark, N. J., opened in 1915 and enlarged in 1918, with accommodations for 100, and extensive adjoining grounds for outdoor exercise, and purchased in 1921; Villa Lourdes, Englewood, erected in 1916 as a summer vacation house for St. Mary's and Loretto Hall; St. Teresa's at Seattle, Wash., accommodating only 50 girls, bought in 1909, and the work transferred in 1921 to the Terry Hotel, accommodating 170, and purchased through the zeal of Bishop O'Dea; Rosary Hall, Vancouver, B.C., opened in 1914 and enlarged to double its capacity in 1919. The following hospitals are under their care: St. Joseph's, Bellingham, Wash., established in 1890, removed to a more suitable location and enlarged in 1900, and enlarged to double its capacity in 1909;

M. M. Hospital, Rossland, B.C., established in 1896 and enlarged for the jubilee in 1921; St. Anthony's Wenatchee, Wash., established in 1916, and a new building accommodating 60 patients erected in 1921. The hospitals in Greenwood, B.C., and in Seward, Alaska (founded 1915), were closed in 1918 owing to war conditions. The Domestic Science School Jersey City, was closed as the site was needed for building for another purpose. The school for the Blind at Jersey City, purchased in 1909, was added to in 1915, and now has accommodations for 200. At Englewood in 1912 accommodation was provided for orphan boys who were removed from York St., Jersey City; the orphan girls remained at York St. An office was erected for the "Orphan's Messenger" in 1912, where boys are taught printing and girls office work. In 1916 Mrs. Barbara Givernaud donated her estate at Homestead, N. J., to be used as an orphanage for boys and girls between the ages of two and seven years; the Givernaud Orphanage accommodates 115. In 1917 Mr. and Mrs. T. J. Maloney donated their estate at Waldwick, N. J., to the Sisters; the farm at St. Joseph's Villa is cultivated for the benefit of the orphans and in 1920 a school was opened on the estate. But later on St. Luke's parochial school was opened on church grounds with an attendance of 138. In the same year St. Joseph's High School at Nelson, B. C., was erected. In 1921 a school was opened in Vancouver, B. C. A new convent in Nottingham, England, was purchased in 1910, and a club house for working girls was erected in Nottingham in 1912. A new convent was purchased in London, England, in 1921.

The total number of members in the community is 222, and there are 21 foundations. There are 4 homes for working girls, accommodating 420; 1 home for the blind, accommodating 200; 4 orphanages with capacity for 450 children; 6 parochial schools with an attendance of 1170; 4 middle class schools with an attendance of 350; 3 hospitals with 1530 patients treated annually; 3400 visits to the sick poor annually; 280,000 publication memberships of the "Orphan's Messenger" with an annual correspondence of 110,000. Sodalties and Sunday schools are connected with most of the institutions.

SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF ST. HYACINTHE (cf. C. E., VIII—518b).—This congregation, with mother-house at St. Hyacinthe, Canada, has 3 elementary and model schools in St. Hyacinthe, 22 outside the city and within the diocesan limits, 2 in the Diocese of St. Boniface, and 1 in the Diocese of Regina. There are 265 professed Sisters, 23 novices, 12 postulants, and 46 juvenists.

SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF THE APPARITION (cf. C. E., VIII—518b), a congregation founded in 1830 at Gaillac (Tarn), France, by Mlle. Emilie de Vialar, who placed it under the patronage of St. Joseph. The institute has for its principal object to honor the mystery of the Incarnation revealed to St. Joseph, thus the title of "The Apparition." The Sisters devote themselves to the education of children, rich and poor, and the care of the sick of all classes; and in the missions all kinds of charitable works are undertaken. They have numerous establishments in different parts of the world; there are 31 in the English colonies. In addition to many hospitals, homes, orphanages, and dispensaries, there are 120 houses mostly for education. The number of pupils in 1920 was about 18,200; orphans 1100; 113,537 people were attended in the dispensaries; 5845 were admitted into the hospitals for a long period and 285,998 for a short time only. The Manchester home for aged, infirm, and sick ladies of every creed will have to be enlarged to accommodate its many patrons. There are 1200 members of the congregation, many of whom have received distinctions such as the Legion of Honor, Academic Palms, Gold and Silver Medal decorations, etc. The mother-house is at Marseilles. The institute is governed by a mother general and four assistants, and is divided into provinces with a mother provincial for each. The constitutions of the order are adapted to the Rule of St. Augustine and were modified according to the new Code of Canon Law when they were finally approved in January, 1910. The present superior general is Mother Celine J. Le Bouffo, unanimously re-elected for the fourth time.

SISTERS OF ST. JOSEPH OF THE MOST SACRED HEART OF JESUS (cf. C. E., VIII—518c).—The rules and constitutions of this community were approved by Pope Pius IX in 1874, Sister Mary (Mackillop) having gone to Rome in the preceding year to obtain papal approbation. In 1881 Pope Leo XIII sent a rescript authorizing the establishment of the mother-house in Sydney and in 1888 he raised the institute to a congregation. Final approbation of the constitutions of the congregation was granted by Pope Benedict XV, 18 January, 1920. The first mother general was Mother Mary of the Cross (Mackillop), who was succeeded by Mother Bernard and re-elected upon the latter's death in 1898. Mother Mary had not completed her second term as superior when she died in 1909, and was succeeded by Mother M. Baptista (d. 1918). The present mother general is Mother M. Laurence, elected 1918. The congregation is spread throughout Australia and New Zealand, and numbers: 1219 Sisters, 183 houses, 11 charitable institutions with 2409 inmates, 209 schools with 26,401 pupils.

Saint Joseph, Sons of (cf. C. E., VIII—519c).—The centenary of the foundation of the institute was celebrated privately because of the war, on 1 May, 1917. The term of the present superior general, Fr. Felix de Vliège, expires in 1922. The rules of the congregation, revised to conform with the Code of Canon Law, have been submitted to the Holy See for approval. The Fathers have as their special work the education of boys of the high and middle classes in boarding and day schools. They have four institutions as follows: Grammont, with an attendance of 450 boys; Melle, with 330 boys; Louvain, with 600 boys; Weybridge, with 150 boys; making a total of 1530 boys under their instruction. The Belgian houses suffered much during the World War, but they are still maintained and in repair. The congregation numbers 100 members, of whom 54 are priests.

Saint Joseph's Society for Colored Missions (cf. C. E., VIII—521c), commonly called the Josephite Fathers, had its origin in the foundation of St. Joseph's Foreign Missionary Society, established at Mill Hill, England, 1866, by Herbert Cardinal Vaughan. In 1871 the first band of missionaries to set out from Mill Hill came to Baltimore and was assigned to St. Francis Xavier's church. Afterwards missions were established in Louisville, Charleston, Norfolk, Richmond, Washington, and other places in the South. Some years later, the bishops who assembled in the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, expressed the necessity of providing for an organization of priests who should labor exclusively for the conversion of the colored people of the United States. Accordingly, in 1892, through a Memorial addressed by Cardinal Gibbons to Cardinal Vaughan, the Society in the United States was made independent of Mill Hill and, under the title of St. Joseph's Society of the Sacred Heart for Colored Missions, established its mother-house in Baltimore. St. Joseph's Society is a congregation of secular priests depending in a direct way upon the Holy See and engaged exclusively in laboring for the conversion of the negro race. The Society is governed by a superior general who is elected for a period of six years by a general chapter, and is assisted by a council of four consultants. The present superior general, the Very Rev. Louis B. Pastorelli, was elected in June, 1918.

Since the American foundation in 1892, the Society, then few in numbers, has developed steadily in membership and in influence in the work for which it was established. At present there is a membership of 73 priests, in charge of 47 parishes and 24 attached missions. These are scattered throughout 15 dioceses, situated for the most part in the South. There are 6 missions in Alabama, 1 in Arkansas, 2 in Delaware, 1 in the District of Columbia, 2 in Florida, 11 in Louisiana, 4 in Maryland, 4 in Mississippi, 2 in North Carolina, 1 in New York, at Buffalo, 3 in Tennessee, 7 in Texas, and 3 in Virginia. Their missionary activities extend to all Southern States with the exception of Georgia and South Carolina. Efforts are made to build up an educational system in both urban and rural communities. Besides conducting 51 parochial grammar schools, there has been a recent development of high school departments of which at present there are four. At this date there is an enrollment of 8606 colored pupils. In addition to activities in the mission field itself, St. Joseph's Society conducts St. Joseph's Seminary, the mother-house, in Baltimore, where aspirants are trained for the colored missions; Epiphany Apostolic College, Walbrook, Baltimore, a preparatory college for St. Joseph's Seminary; St. Joseph's Industrial School, Clayton, Delaware; an agricultural and trade school for colored boys; and St. Joseph's Orphanage, Wilmington, Delaware, for colored boys. The "Colored Harvest," bi-monthly, is the official organ of the Josephite Fathers, published in Baltimore. "St. Anthony's Guide" is the monthly organ of St. Joseph's Industrial School, Clayton, Del.

Saint Louis, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI LUDOVICI; cf. C. E., XIII—357c), in Missouri. Among the Catholics in the Archdiocese of St. Louis there are many and various nationalities; aside from the descendants of the early Irish and German people we find those of Polish extraction and Polish immigration, many of French extraction, and a decided number of Italians, Slovaks, Lithuanians, Bohemians, and some few from Spain, Mexico, Austria, and Servia. During the past few years many notable clergymen and laymen have departed this life. Among the clergy were: Rt. Rev. P. W. Tallon, president of the Kenrick Seminary Board and pastor of the Visitation Church, St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. David S. Phelan, editor of the "Western Watchman," a man as brave as he was learned, and one who accomplished much for Catholic journalism during his days. Among the laymen were: Wm. J. Kinsella, the vice-president of the Calvary Cemetery board; Edward Devoy, the president of the St. Vincent de Paul Society; and Theophile Papin, Jr., a member of the Cathedral Association. Many events of importance have transpired since 1912; among them were the visits of Their Excellencies, Cardinal Vannutelli and Cardinal Mercier. There have been many impressive and memorable celebrations, one of which was the celebration held at the Old Cathedral on Sunday, 6 January, 1918, commemorating the Centennial of the coming to St. Louis of the Rt. Rev. Bishop DuBourg. Pontifical High Mass was celebrated at the Old Cathedral Church with the Most Rev. Jeremiah Harty, Archbishop of Omaha, as the celebrant. His Grace, the Archbishop of St. Louis, preached the sermon. An appropriate souvenir containing a brief historical sketch of St. Louis 100 years ago was published by the Catholic Historical Society of St. Louis. An afternoon service was held at the St. Louis New Cathedral, at which a number of old French canticles were sung by a select choir, and an address made by the Rt. Rev. Mgr. P. W. Tallon, on the early French Catholic days in Missouri. The two celebrations, however, that stand out most prominently, were the dedication of the new Kenrick Seminary, and the blessing and formal opening of the New Cathedral on Lindell Boulevard.

On 21 April, 1913, on a choice tract of land outside the city limits, called Glennon Park, the Most Rev. John J. Glennon turned the first spade of earth for the foundation of the new Kenrick Seminary. The laying of the corner stone of this institution took place on Thanksgiving day, 27 November, 1913. On 12 September, 1915, visitors' day, a crowd rated close to 25,000, was admitted to inspect the completed buildings just before the opening of the scholastic year. The opening of the new seminary for class work took place on 15 September; the solemn dedication of the institution on 27 April, 1916. Archbishop Glennon blessed the new buildings and the stately chapel. Pontifical Mass was celebrated by His Excellency, the Most Rev. John Bonzano, D.D., Apostolic Delegate. The sermon was preached by His Grace, the Most Rev. Archbishop Edward J. Hanna, D.D., of San Francisco, California. Twenty-two members of the hierarchy and more than 350 prelates and priests from every part of the United States assisted at the function.

The dedication of the New St. Louis Cathedral took place on 18 October, 1914. The ceremony was the simple blessing of the new church as found in the Roman ritual. Archbishop John J. Glennon officiated in this ceremony. After the blessing Pontifical Mass was celebrated by the Rt. Rev. Bishop John J. Hennessy, D.D., of Wichita, Kansas. He was assisted by the Rt. Rev. Mgr. Joseph A. Connolly, V.G., P.R., as assistant priest. The Revs. J. J. Tannrath, chancellor of the archdiocese, and James T. Coffey, pastor of St. Leo's Church, St. Louis, were deacons of honor; the Rev. F. J. Jones, deacon of the Mass, and the Rev. E. J. Lembes, sub-deacon. Archbishop Glennon, who preached the sermon, was attended by the Very Rev. M. S. Ryan, C. M., president of the Kenrick Seminary, and the Rev. P. W. Tallon, rector of the Visitation Church, as deacons of honor. The Rev. Martin S. Brennan was master of ceremonies, assisted by the Rev. John P. Spencer, S. T. L. Though the function was very simple, the Rt. Rev. Bishops Thos. F. Lillis of Kansas City, John Ward of Leavenworth, John Cunningham of Concordia, Morris Francis Burke of St. Joseph, Richard Scannell of Omaha, honored the occasion with their presence. At the time there was no permanent altar in the cathedral and the Mass was celebrated at a temporary altar brought from the abandoned cathedral chapel. The cathedral itself was in an unfinished state throughout and the only relief from bare brick was afforded by the Lady Chapel which was finished in Italian mosaics. About 30 priests were present and a full choir of 200 seminarians from the Kenrick Seminary, assisted by a male choir of 40 under the direction of Prof. Camille Becker, chanted the Gregorian Mass of the dedication. Over 7000 people were present. About 5000 of these were within the building and the other 2000 were grouped in the vestibule and at the Lindell Boulevard front along the Newstead Avenue side of the edifice. The seating capacity of the cathedral is 2500, with the galleries about 3500, its ultimate capacity being 5000 to 6000 persons. Its greatest length is 365 feet, its greatest width 204 feet. The area of the clear or open auditorium is 13,500 square feet. The height of the main dome is 227 feet. The exterior is close textured gray granite from Concord, N. H. Interiorly the cathedral is brick set in cement, which later is to be overlaid with mosaic and marble. The estimated cost of the cathedral was $3,000,000.

Statistics for the archdiocese are: 425,692 Catholics, 300 parishes, 379 churches, 79 missions, 79 stations, 4 monasteries for men, 20 convents for men, 360 secular priests, 242 regular priests, 12 seminaries, 1 university, 4 colleges for men, 17 academies for young girls, 10 high schools with an attendance of 1766, 3 training schools, 120 elementary schools with an attendance of 38,000, 6 industrial schools with an attendance of 1000, 6 missionary works, 9 homes, 6 asylums, 10 hospitals, 4 refuges, 5 settlement houses, 4 day nurseries.

St. Mary, SISTERS OF (Beaverton, Ore.), founded in 1886 by Archbishop Gross of Oregon City. The number of Catholics in the archdiocese at that time was small, and they were scattered over a large territory. The archbishop, recognizing from the first the value of Catholic education as a potent factor in spreading and preserving the faith, was anxious to establish parochial schools throughout the archdiocese, and to accomplish this great work more successfully founded the Congregation of the Sisters of St. Mary, at Sublimity, Oregon. On the feast of the Assumption, 1886, five young women consecrated their lives to the service of the Divine Master. An old, abandoned school building which, together with a tract of land, had been donated to the archbishop for educational purposes, served as the first mother-house of the little community. They made their novitiate under the direction of the Benedictines, and during that time laid the foundation of their spiritual life. The object of the congregation is to labor incessantly for the salvation and instruction of youth in academies and parochial schools. Archbishop Gross, as the founder of the community, took an active interest in its spiritual and temporal progress. He confided the spiritual direction of the community to Father Wernher, O. S. B., who, after three years of zealous labors, died 1 January, 1889, and was succeeded by the Rev. Joseph Fessler. After a growth of six years the community spread to other fields of labor. In January, 1891, the first mission-house was opened at Verboort, Ore. Two months later the Sisters assumed charge of the diocesan orphanage at St. Mary's near Beaverton. Vocations steadily increased. The erection of a larger building with suitable accommodations became an imperative need. Sublimity had no railroad facilities, and it was decided to seek another situation for a new mother-house. A tract of land beautifully situated at St. Mary's, within easy reach of Portland, was donated by a generous benefactor for this purpose. On 15 August, 1893, the corner-stone was laid, and in the following January the archbishop solemnly dedicated the convent to Our Lady of Perpetual Help. With this approval, the novitiate was transferred from Sublimity to St. Mary's. The community was now established on a solid basis and a code of rules approved by the archbishop was adopted. On 2 Nov., 1898, the founder of the community died. Six months later he was succeeded in the archepiscopal see by the Rt. Rev. Alexander Christie, formerly Bishop of Victoria, B. C. Under his supervision the Sisters of St. Mary progressed, and their rules were revised and perfected by the Jesuit Fathers. At present (1922) the Sisters conduct two academies for girls and young ladies, a boarding-school for small boys, and the diocesan home for orphan boys; they are also in charge of the parochial schools in St. Stephen's, St. Agatha's, St. Andrew's, and Holy Cross parishes, in Portland, and parochial schools in Milwaukee, Sublimity, Verboort, St. Louis, Gervais, Tillamook, Roy, Beaverton, and Hillsboro, all in the Archdiocese of Oregon City. There are 113 professed Sisters, 5 novices, and 2 postulants, with 1440 pupils.

Saint Mary, Sisters of (Namur, Belgium).—This institute, whose sole purpose is the education of young girls, was founded in 1819, in the old city of Namur, Belgium, where the mother-house of the order is located and it was canonically approved by the Holy See. Early in 1861 the renowned missionary Rev. P. J. DeSmet, S. J., while making a short sojourn in his native land visited Namur, and during an interview with Rev. Mother Claire removed all doubts as to the advisability of complying with his request to send Sisters to America. Bishop Timon of Buffalo, had long desired to procure a community of foreign nuns to conduct schools in his diocese. Accordingly upon the bishop's initiative negotiations were entered into and in August, 1863, five Sisters set sail for America. Fr. Smarius, S. J., acted as their guide and protector. These religious were Sister Emelie, superior and later first provincial of the American missions, Sisters Mary Claver, Mary of Saint Joseph, Augustine, and Paula. Of that little band one still survives. This aged religious has enjoyed the unusual experience of having welcomed to Saint Joseph's Academy six successive bishops of Buffalo. Lockport, N. Y., the first American mission naturally became the provincial mother-house. Bishop Timon having been one of the first missionary priests of Texas, was not unmindful of the needs of the South, and in response to an appeal made by Bishop Dubois of Galveston, he asked Mother Emelie to send a community to that diocese. The missions in the South spread rapidly. In 1921 Texas became a separate province. Meanwhile the tree planted in 1863 was spreading out other branches. At present the institute comprises three provinces in America besides those in Europe, namely: the North, with the provincial house at Lockport, N. Y.; Canada, with provincial house at Ottawa; and Texas, with provincial house at Fort Worth. Belgium and England constitute the provinces of Europe. The novices in each province are assigned to duties within that province. Special facilities for the training of teachers are afforded. Saint Mary's House of Studies enjoys the honor of being the first permanent building of the Sisters College of the Catholic University of America, Washington, D. C. This enables the American Sisters to pursue university courses of study and to obtain degrees as the European Sisters do at Oxford and Louvain. Saint Joseph's Academy, Lockport, is chartered under the Albany Board of Regents. In 1921 the Sisters in America numbered 282, with 13 novices, 14 postulants, and 6538 pupils.

Saint Mary, Sisters of (St. Louis, Mo.). a congregation of nursing Sisters founded in St. Louis, Mo., in 1872, by five members of the Servants of the Divine Heart of Jesus, who migrated from Elberfeld, Germany, during the persecutions of the Kulturkampf. The original order was founded in Paris in 1866 with the consent of Archbishop Darboy for the nursing of orphans. Two of its members being German were compelled to leave France during the Franco-Prussian War and established a temporary home at Elberfeld, where they devoted themselves to the nursing of wounded soldiers. These were Sisters Ottilia and Magdalena, who in 1872, with Sisters Elizabeth, Francisca, and Marianna, accepted the invitation of Mgr. Muehlsiepen, Vicar General of St. Louis, to settle in that archdiocese. The Sisters rented three rooms opposite St. Mary's Church, and the pastor of this church, Fr. Faerber (d. 1905), became their spiritual adviser and lifelong friend. Soon after their arrival a smallpox epidemic gave them opportunity for active service; this was followed in 1873 by cholera, and in 1878 by yellow fever. In the latter year the community numbered 38 members, of whom eight went to Memphis, Tenn., and five to Canton, Miss., to nurse the yellow fever victims; these thirteen Sisters contracted the disease and five of them died. A building had been erected for the community in 1873, and became their first mother-house. They were incorporated under the laws of the State of Missouri in 1874 as Sisters of St. Mary of St. Louis, Mo. On 4 October, 1880, Mother Ottilia and sixteen other Sisters made their first vows in the presence of Mgr. Muehlsiepen in accordance with the Rules of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis and the particular constitutions of the Sisters of St. Mary. A few days after this event (17 Oct.) Mother Ottilia died and was succeeded as superior by Mother Seraphia (d. 1912) who remained in office till 1910, when Mother Aloysia was elected superior. She was succeeded in 1921 by Mother Concordia, formerly mistress of novices. The present mother-house and novitiate is St. Mary's Infirmary (St. Louis), opened for occupancy in 1889. Rt. Rev. O. S. J. Hoog, Vicar General of St. Louis, is the spiritual adviser of the community, which now numbers 307 Sisters and 30 novices. Fr. Henry Henry Jaegering (d. 1919) was the faithful chaplain of St. Mary's Infirmary for thirty-seven years.

From 1895 till 1905 the Sisters assumed charge of the German Hospital (now Research Hospital), Kansas City, Mo., at the invitation of the hospital directors. In 1904 they decided to build a hospital of their own in that city, and the new St. Mary's Hospital was completed in 1909. Connected with it is a training school for nurses organized in 1916, with a present attendance of 50 students. The number of patients cared for at this hospital in 1920 was 4705, of whom 565 were free patients, 1214 Catholics, and 3491 non-Catholics. Since its completion (1909) the hospital has received 38,255 patients, of whom 6488 were free patients. It has a capacity of 175 beds. In addition to this and St. Mary's Infirmary, with a capacity of 150 beds, the Sisters have 5 other hospitals: Mt. St. Rose Sanatorium, for diseases of the throat and chest, opened at St. Louis, Mo., in 1902, with a capacity of 150 beds; St. Joseph's Hospital, St. Charles Mo., founded 1885, capacity, 35 beds; St. Mary's Hospital, Jefferson City, Mo., opened in 1905 with a capacity of 45 beds; St. Francis Hospital, Blue Island, Ill., first building opened for patients 1905, new hospital opened 1916, capacity 100 beds; St. Mary's Hospital, Madison, Wis., opened in 1913, capacity, 75 beds.

Saint Mary's College, at Prairie du Chien, in the State of Wisconsin, U. S. A., is an outgrowth of St. Mary's Institute and was established in 1872. The college occupies the site of Fort Crawford, which was built in 1829 by Colonel, afterwards President, Zachary Taylor, and served as a bulwark against the Indians. Government troops were withdrawn from it in 1859, and it was purchased in the sixties by Mr. John Lawlor, who, with the assistance of Mgr. P. M. Abbelen and Mother Caroline, foundress of the Order of School Sisters of Notre Dame, in America, established the Institute for the furtherance of Catholic education. In 1897 its name was legally changed to St. Mary's Academy, made famous in 1910 by the erection on its extensive grounds of a splendid monument to Father Marquette. In 1913 college courses were opened and since then the progress of the college has been rapid. It comprises a good laboratory, gymnasium, and a library of 5000 volumes. A monthly paper, the "News-Letter," published here, will be developed into a quarterly magazine in June, 1922, in commemoration of the golden jubilee of the foundation. Student organizations comprise the League of the Sacred Heart, Sodality of the Immaculate Conception, The Crusaders, Missionary Sewing Circle, Les Deux Pleiades, Dramatic Club, and Musical Societies. Eight religious and 1 lay teacher, all university graduates, compose the faculty. The present registration (1922) numbers 235 students.

Saint Mary's Seminary, Baltimore, was founded almost simultaneously with the establishment of the American hierarchy, as it was formally opened under the patronage of the first American bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Carroll, on 3 October, 1791. The Seminary was in charge of the Sulpician Fathers under the Rev. Francis Nagot, with three priests and five seminarians. In 1804 the rank and privilege of a State University were granted to the Seminary by the Maryland Assembly and in 1822 Pope Pius VII solemnly conferred upon it the title, rights, and privileges of a Catholic University. A complete faculty of able professors was maintained during the administrations of Frs. Nagot (1791-1810), John M. Tessier (1810-29), and Louis R. Deluol (1829-49), and although the students were very few they included some of the most zealous missionaries and prominent churchmen of the time. An era of growth and prosperity for the Seminary was ushered in, however, with the establishment of St. Charles College, Ellicott City, Md., in 1848, and under the administration of Frs. Francis Lhomme (1848-60), Alphonse Magnien (1878-1902), and R. Dyer (1902-) the institution has made marked progress. Since 1853 St. Mary's Seminary has been exclusively a theological seminary with philosophy and theology courses. In the year 1920-21 there were 21 members in the faculty and a registration of 320 students, of whom 56 were ordained priests. The number of degrees conferred was as follows: B.A., 20; M.A., 15; Bachelor of Theology, 6; Doctor of Canon Law, 1; Doctor of Letters, 1.

Saint Paul, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI PAULI; cf. C. E., XIII—366d), in Minnesota. On 25 September, 1918, occurred the death of Archbishop John Ireland (q. v.). He was succeeded by Most Rev. Austin Dowling, who was ordained 24 June, 1891, appointed Bishop of Des Moines, Iowa, 31 January, 1912, consecrated 25 April following, nominated Archbishop of St. Paul, 1 February, 1919. The campaign for educational works of the archdiocese in October and November, 1920, secured $5,700,000 in pledged subscriptions. The Catholic population of the archdiocese is about 265,000 of various nationalities, the French and German elements predominating. A Catholic newspaper called the "Catholic Bulletin" is published at St. Paul. Bureaus of Catholic Charities are established in St. Paul and Minneapolis. There are in the archdiocese: 200 parishes, 262 churches, 62 missions, 3 convents for men, 295 secular priests, 51 regular priests, 1380 Sisters, 2 seminaries with 170 seminarians, 1 college for men with 48 professors and 850 students, 22 high schools with 143 teachers and 3171 pupils, 1 normal school with an attendance of 56, 105 elementary schools with 600 teachers and 23,692 pupils, 4 homes, 3 asylums, 3 hospitals, 1 refuge, 2 settlement houses. The Priests' Eucharistic League and the Apostolic Union are established among the clergy.

Saint Paul of Hungary, HERMITS OF (cf. C. E., XI—587c).—In 1864 the Pauline Order had in Russian Poland 19 convents, but in the same year these foundations were annihilated by the Russian government. Only one, Jasna Gora (Czestochowa), in the Diocese of Wladislaw, remained. In Austrian Poland, after the edict of the Emperor Joseph II all the Pauline convents were closed, except that at Skalka, in the Diocese of Cracow. The German government was always opposed to Polish orders, hence there were never any Pauline convents in Prussian Poland. Immediately after the end of the war (1919) the order recovered one of its ancient foundations at Lesna, near Brest Litovsk, in the Diocese of Podlachia. In 1920 these three Pauline convents, at Jasna Gora, Skalka, and Lesna, elected as general superior Fr. Peter Markiewicz. He was born at Kalisz in 1877, made his ecclesiastical studies at Wladislaw and higher theological studies at Rome, and was ordained in 1906. The last general superior had died in 1871, since which time the Russian government had forbidden the election of a successor. The Pauline Order is now beginning to extend its work, endeavoring to recover its ancient foundations, and has a rule conformed to the new Code of Canon Law. There are 46 members of the order. An ecclesiastical school or juvenate for boys who feel inclined to enter the religious life, has been established. The order also directs some religious and pious congregations in Czestochowa. In Lesna the members have parochial duties as well as the spiritual care and direction of the teachers' seminary there. The novitiate and house of studies are in Cracow. In 1915 occurred the death of Fr. Justin Welonski, who had been prior since 1910, previously rector of the ecclesiastical seminary at Plock, and had entered the order as a rector.

Saint Paul-without-the-Walls (SAN PAOLO FUORI LE MURA; cf. C. E., XIII—369b), a Benedictine abbey nullius of the Cassinese Congregation, and one of the patriarchal churches of Rome, dependent directly on the Holy See. On 13 March, 1918, occurred the death of the Abbot Nullius Dom Giovanni del Papa, O.S.B., b. 1850, professed 1871, ordained 1876, elected 23 September, 1904, blessed 13 November following. He was succeeded by Dom Ildefonso Schuster, O.S.B., b. 1880, professed 1899, ordained 1904, elected 6 April, 1918, blessed 13 April following. The abbey nullius has 3 parishes, 13 churches, 4 secular priests, 25 regular priests, 15 lay brothers, 11 seminarians, and the care of 5000 Catholics. Dependent on it are 1 monastery of nuns and 3 convents of Sisters. Three day nurseries are established. There are 10 confraternities and many associations among the young men and women. A monthly diocesan bulletin is published.

Saint-Pierre and Miquelon, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM S. PETRI ET MIQUELONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—376a), comprises a small group of islands south of Newfoundland, belonging to France. The prefect apostolic is Mgr. Joseph Oster, b. at Berstheim, in diocese of Straßburg, France, 19 April, 1846, entered the Congregation of Holy Ghost, 1862, provincial in United States, pro-prefect in 1912, prefect 16 January, 1916, with residence at Saint Pierre. On the islands there are 3 parishes, 3 churches, 2 convents of women, 6 regular priests, 1 lay brother, 28 Sisters, 1 college for boys, with 3 instructors and 58 students and 1 for girls with 15 instructors and 150 students, 1 academy with 60 boys and 80 girls, 1 elementary school with 40 pupils, a commercial school for boys with 120 students and for girls with 90, 3 associations among the laity, who number 4000 and are mostly French. During the war 350 laymen and 1 priest were mobilized, 99 of whom were victims.

Saint Teresa of Jesus, SOCIETY OF, founded by Enrique de Osso, on the feast of the Sacred Heart of Jesus 23 June, 1876, at Taragona, Spain, and approved by Pope Pius X, 18 December, 1908. Fr. de Osso's desire was to stem the torrent of impiety which threatened to engulf vast numbers of young souls. The object of the institute is the Christian education of young people, to extend the knowledge and love of God by means of the apostleship of prayer, teaching and sacrifice. The mother-house is in Barcelona, Spain, where the mother general and her council reside. The four provinces with a total of 51 houses in Spain, Africa, Mexico, South America, Cuba and the United States. The academies have courses of study from the kindergarten to the grammar and academic grades, and in some places normal courses are conducted. There are three novitiates: one in Tortosa, Spain; one in Montevideo, Uruguay, South America; and one in San Antonio, Texas. The members of the Society make the three simple vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, and must be imbued with the spirit of their holy patron, the seraphic doctress, St. Teresa of Jesus. There are teaching and lay religious. The society is governed by its own constitutions and rules, which follow the rule of St. Ignatius.

The province of St. Teresa of Jesus, with provincial house and novitiate at Jesus de Tortosa, Spain, has academies and schools in Spain at Barcelona (3), Valencia, Taragona, Saragossa, Tortosa, Villanueva, Vinebre, San Celoni, Almunia, Maella and Enguers; in Africa, at Oran, Algeria. The province of the Sacred Heart of Jesus has academies and schools in Spain at Madrid (2), Ciudad Rodrigo, Valladolid, Pamplona, Oviedo, Bilbao, Calahorra, Huelva, Duenas and Mora de Toledo. The province of St. Francis de Sales, with provincial house at Mixcoac, Mexico, and novitiate at San Antonio, Texas, has academies and schools in Mexico at Mixcoac, Mexico City, Puebla, Morelia, Zacatancas, Guadalajara and Merida; in Cuba at Havana, Camaguey, Santa Clara, Ciego de Avila and Guantanamo; in the United States at San Antonio, Tex., Uvalde, Tex. (parochial school), New Orleans, La. (parochial school). The province of St. Joseph with provincial house and novitiate at Montevideo, Uruguay, South America, has academies and schools at: Montevideo, Uruguay (2); Buenos Aires, Argentina; Santiago de Chile, Chile; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Santa Ana, Brazil; Itaquí, Brazil; Asuncion, Paraguay; Rocha, Uruguay, and Dolores, Uruguay.

Saint Thomas, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI THOMÆ IN INSULA; cf. C. E., XIII—381c), in the Gulf of Guinea, suffragan of Lisbon. The last bishop died in 1847. The see then remained vacant. Since 1865 it has been ruled as a vicariate. In 1920 the Catholics numbered about 21,000.

Saint Thomas of Guiana, DIOCESE OF (DE GUAYANA; cf. C. E., XIII—382c), in Venezuela, suffragan of Caracas. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Xiste Sosa, b. at Tinaco, 20 Oct., 1876, elected titular bishop of Claudopolis 14 June, 1915, consecrated 28 Oct., published 9 Dec. following, and made administrator apostolic of Guiana, transferred 5 Dec., 1918, published 10 March, 1919. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Antonio Maria Duran, who died 18 July, 1917. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 400,500 Catholics, 43 parishes, 20 filial churches, 53 chapels and 26 priests.

Saint Thomas of Mylapur, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI THOMÆ DE MELAPOR; cf. C. E., XIII—382d), suffragan of Goa, India. The Catholic population of the diocese is 80,000, including Indians, Anglo-Indians, and Europeans. The All-India Eucharistic Congress was held in 1912. In 1921 the Marian Congress was held at Madras and the Episcopal Conference at Mylapore. During the World War several units from the diocese served in different departments. Rev. A. A. Teixeira was chaplain to the British forces in Mesopotamia and Rev. Faustino Barreto was chaplain to the native Indian forces. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Teotonio Manuel Ribeiro Vieira de Castro, b. 1859, elected 1899. There are in the diocese: 51 parishes, 60 churches, 5 vicariates forane, 178 stations and chapels, 1 monastery for men, 3 convents with 37 European Sisters, 9 convents with 93 Indian Sisters, 76 secular priests, 7 regular priests (Salesians), 5 lay brothers, 2 seminaries with 28 seminarians, 6 high schools with 60 teachers and an attendance of 1239 boys and 150 girls, 81 elementary schools with 324 teachers and an attendance of 4865 boys and girls, 2 industrial schools with 15 teachers and 226 pupils, 2 homes for men and women, 3 orphanages for boys with 350 inmates, 6 orphanages for girls with 230 inmates, 4 dispensaries, 1 day nursery. Most of the institutions are aided by the British Government. The Mylapore Diocese Educational Society is established among the clergy, and the Catholic South Indian Association among the laity. A Catholic periodical is published, called "The Catholic Register of Mylapore."

Saint Viator, CLENICS OF (cf. C. E., XV—399d).—In 1912 the Holy See erected into provinces, with the canonical advantages and obligations such erection brings, the four obediences of the institute. viz. Vouries, Rodez, Montreal, and Chicago. In the same year the superior general, Fr. P. D. Lajoie, celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of his sacerdotal ordination. In 1914 the general chapter of the order was to be held at Jette-St.-Pierre, and the delegates were en route, some having already reached the mother-house, when the war broke out. This forced the superior general to postpone the chapter indefinitely. During the German occupation of Belgium all communication with the mother-house was cut off. The personnel of the juvenate of Westmalle succeeded in crossing the frontier and took refuge in Holland, where they were given generous hospitality by the Benedictines of St. Paul Abbey, Osterhout; they numbered 70 and remained at Osterhout for fifty months. Four years of physical and mental suffering were patiently borne by the superior and his assistants. One of these, Brother Buchon, died, during the war, from privation. Another, Fr. Coutu, after tedious parleys with the German authorities and humiliating formalities, succeeded in getting out of Belgium on the mission of making the canonical visit of the provinces. He went to America (1916) to visit the American and Canadian provinces and in 1917 returned to France, where he died the following year from disease caused by the conditions of life while in Belgium. Fr. F. M. Roberge, from the Canadian province, was appointed assistant general to succeed Fr. Coutu, and joined his post in December, 1918, a few weeks after the armistice was signed. The superior general, Very Rev. P. D. Lajoie, died at Jette-St.-Pierre, 25 Feb., 1919, in his ninety-third year. Born in Canada in 1826, he had joined the institute at Joliette in 1847, was ordained priest in 1852, afterwards professor and director at Joliette College and pastor of Joliette, provincial of Canada in 1870, vicar of the institute in 1880, and elected superior general in 1890. He governed the institute for twenty-nine years, safely guiding it through the agitated period of spoliation, persecution and dispersion in France, and the disastrous years of the World War. He transferred the general direction of the institute from Vourles to Paris in 1896, and after the French edict against religious congregations in 1903 transferred it again to Belgium, first at Aerschot and then in 1908 at Jette-St-Pierre. He was succeeded as superior general by Very Rev. Pierre Robert, elected by the general chapter convened at Jette-St-Pierre, 22 May, 1919. Fr. Robert was born in France in 1862, joined the congregation in 1876, was ordained in 1886, director of St. Michel secondary school at Paris in 1890, provincial at Vourles 1900, vicar of the institute 1909, elected superior general 1919, author of a life of the founder of the institute and history of the congregation up to 1860: "Vie du Père Louis Querbes" (Brussels, 1922). Very Rev. François-Michel Roberge was elected vicar of the institute and two new assistants were also appointed: Brothers Joseph-Bruno Gareau and Jules Chomienne. The chapter also revised the statutes according to the new Code of Canon Law, but this effected no important change in the form of government or in the rules. It chiefly consisted in introducing into the text of the statutes the rights, privileges, or obligations resulting from the rescripts or indulgences obtained from the Holy See since the primitive text of the statutes was confirmed by Pope Gregory XVI in 1839.

Among recent transfers and foundations of institutions of the order were the establishment at Outremont, near Montreal, in 1915, of the scholasticate of the Canadian province, and the transfer in 1921 of the novitiate of the French province of Rodes from Zarauz, Spain, to Escoriaza, Spain. In 1921, Columbus College, Chamberlain, S. D., officially closed its career as an educational institution, owing to the opening in September of the same year, of a new diocesan Catholic college at Sioux Falls, S. D. The authorities of the institute transferred to Chamberlain, in the buildings of Columbus College, the novitiate of the American province heretofore located in Chicago; and in this place they opened a scholasticate for theological studies. The Institute of the Clerics of St. Viator at present (1922) controls 104 educational institutions of different kinds and degrees: primary and secondary schools, classical and commercial colleges. It also has the care of 9 parishes in the United States and Canada. The Montreal Catholic Institution for Deaf Mutes (male) is under its direction. The deaf and dumb pupils cared for number 170. The following table supplies statistics of the institute:

Saint Vincent de Paul, BROTHERS OF, a congregation of priests and brothers living in community and consecrating their lives to the service of the poor and workmen and the care of the needy in general. The institute was founded in Paris in 1845 by Fr. Jean-Léon Le Prevost, one of the first collaborators of Frederic Ozanam. It received the decree of praise, 10 May, 1869, and papal approbation, 6 June, 1874; the constitutions were provisionally approved 13 February, 1906. The mother-house is in Tournay, Belgium, and the present superior general is Fr. Fernand Desrousseaux, elected 1914, and re-elected 25 August, 1920. The institute is established in France, Belgium, and Canada. The principal Canadian foundation is at Quebec where there are a novitiate and juvenate, a school with 350 students, two societies for young people, an association for students, and a maison de famille where 50 orphans are taught trades. The procurator general resides at Rome, where there is a scholasticate.

Saints Cyril and Methodius, DAUGHTERS OF, a congregation of religious women for the instruction of Slovak children, founded by Rev. M. Jankola and several other Slovak priests, who saw the great necessity the Slovak people in America had of Catholic schools. The first three members were sent to Mt. St. Mary's, Scranton, Pa., where they remained for several years under the kind direction of the Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary. In the year 1909 their rule was approved by Pope Pius X, and on 11 September, 1909, the first three members pronounced the vows. As their numbers increased they were obliged to leave these Sisters, and assume the government of the institute themselves. Accordingly, they opened a mother-house in Middletown, and two years later it was moved to Danville, Pa., to which is also attached a novitiate. In Middletown they have an orphanage. The congregation now numbers (1921) 83 professed Sisters, 22 novices, and 15 postulants. The Sisters have seven houses in the Scranton Diocese; 5 houses in the Harrisburg Diocese; and houses at Bridgeport, Conn.; Gary, Ind.; Chicago, Ill.; Vandergrift and Buffalo, N. Y.

Saints Vincent and Anastasius, ABBEY NULLIUS OF (SANCTORUM VINCENTII ET ANASTASII AD AQUAS SALVIAS; cf. C. E., XIII—380d), near Rome. The diocese of the abbey nullius, under the Reformed Cistercians, is at Orbetello, comprising several village and two small islands, divided into 8 parishes, administered by 50 priests. The abbey nullius maintains an elementary school, with 105 children taught by 5 Sisters, and a residence for the workmen connected with the monastery, who number 32 families and 48 unmarried. There is a religious association established among these workmen. Upon the death of Cardinal Oreglia (3 December, 1913), the Holy Father appointed Rt. Rev. Andrea Caron, titular Bishop of Chalcedon, apostolic administrator of the spiritual needs of the diocese, 1 January, 1916. Rt. Rev. Leo Ehrhard, prior of the abbey, was elected abbot in November, 1919, and blessed 22 January, 1920.

Salamanca, DIOCESE OF (SALAMANTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—391b), suffragan of Valladolid, Spain. The present bishop is Mgr. Julio de Diego y Garcia Alcolea, born in the Diocese of Sigüenza at Hontanares 16 February, 1859, ordained 1881, elected bishop of Astorga 14 November, 1904, consecrated at Valladolid 5 February, 1905, transferred to Salamanca 18 July, 1913, to succeed Mgr. Valdes y Noriega, deceased. A Eucharistic Congress was held in Salamanca, with representatives from every parish (20,000 in all), attending the notable discourses, sermons and social conferences. The Catholic population is 350,000. The diocese includes 286 parishes, 539 churches, 1 convent of men, 27 of women, 462 secular and 80 regular priests, 56 lay brothers, 791 Sisters, 1 seminary, 337 seminarians, 1 university, 5 asylums, 4 hospitals, 2 refugees and 1 day nursery. There are 2 organizations among the clergy and several among the laity. A Catholic daily and 2 reviews are published.

Sale, DIOCESE OF (SALIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—395d), in Victoria, Australia. The present diocese was part of the Archdiocese of Melbourne until 1887, when the late James Francis Corbett, then parish priest of St. Kilda, Melbourne, was consecrated first Bishop of Sale. The diocese covers the civil province of Gippsland, an area of 16,700 square miles, extending due east from 50 miles from Melbourne to the border of the State of New South Wales, and on the south is washed by the Southern Ocean. The first bishop found in this vast district only a few priests, who eventually returned to the Archdiocese of Melbourne, and no convent school. When he died in May, 1912, he left three fine convents of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Sion, with primary and secondary schools, at Sale, Barmadale, and Warragul. In 1921 the diocese had eight convents of the Sisters of St. Joseph of the Sacred Heart with primary schools at Sale, Cowwarr, Leongatha, Maffra, Morwell, Omeo, Traralgon, and Yarram. The summary of the diocese for that year is: districts, 12; churches, 50; secular priests, 23; primary schools, 10; secondary schools, 3; number of children in Catholic schools, 1296. According to the last available census, the total population of the diocese is 73,507, and the Catholic population is 12,480. The second Bishop of Sale is Rt. Rev. Patrick Phelan. Born in Co. Kilkenny, Ireland, in 1860, Dr. Phelan was educated at Mount Melleray Seminary, Co. Waterford, and at St. Patrick's College, Carlow, where he was ordained 26 May, 1888. He commenced ecclesiastical work in the Archdiocese of Melbourne in October of that year. In 1896 he was appointed pastor of St. Joseph's, Collingwood, and in March, 1900, was appointed dean of Melbourne and administrator of St. Patrick's Cathedral. In 1908 Dr. Phelan became vicar general of the archdiocese, and in 1912 was created prothonotary apostolic by Pope Pius X. Through the death of Bishop Corbett the See of Sale became vacant that year, and Dr. Phelan was consecrated second Bishop of Sale at St. Patrick's Cathedral, Melbourne, 2 March, 1913, by Archbishop Carr of Melbourne. When the apostolic delegate visited Sale six years after Dr. Phelan's appointment, the bishop was able to declare that he had opened several convent schools in the diocese, had expended £75,000 in building churches, schools, and presbyteries, and was then engaged in building a college or secondary school for boys at Sale which was costing over £25,000. The Marist Brothers are in charge of this college. Bishop Phelan is the author of several works. Some were the result of controversy in the public press with Protestant Divines, such as "Christian Marriage" and the "Refutation of Protestant Calumnies." Others are of a devotional character, viz. "The Holy Sacrifice of the Mass," "The Mission of St. Ignatius of Loyola," and "The Priesthood of Christ."

Salerno, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SALERNTANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—396b), in the Province of Naples, Southern Italy. The present administrator is the Most Rev. Carlo Maria Grasso of the Benedictines of Monte Cassino. He was b. at Genoa, 22 April, 1869, ordained 1 April, 1893, named administrator apostolic of Cava and Sarno in 1914, promoted to Salerno 7 April, 1915, consecrated at Rome 22 April and received the pallium 19 July, published 6 December following. On 16 September, 1919, he was named administrator of Nusco and of Nole 8 December following. He succeeded the Most Rev. Valerio Laspro, who died 22 November, 1914. According to the statistics of 1920 the archdiocese contained 149 parishes, 364 churches and chapels, 659 secular priests and 60 seminarians. In 1920 the united see of Acerno consisted of 7 parishes, 7 churches, and 16 secular priests.

Salesian Society (cf. C. E., XIII—398c).—The Society has a total of 341 houses and numbers over 5000 members—priests, lay brothers and clerics. There are 230 festive oratories or recreation grounds with chapel for religious instruction, with over 100,000 children in attendance. The 130 colleges, for the poor in particular, have as boarders, 35,000 boys. In many of the colleges there is a department for learning trades, with 15,000 boys under instruction. In 52 agricultural colonies there are 3000 boys. The 132 clubs have a membership of over 7000. Over 22,000 pupils are educated by the Salesians in over 150 elementary schools, mostly in Italy and South America. The Salesians have under their jurisdiction 13 shrines, 91 parishes, and over 300 churches and chapels. They have 43 missions among the heathens, chiefly in South America (Brazil, Ecuador, etc.), with 250,000 souls. A new mission in the coast region of Assam, northern India, was taken over by them in December, 1921. Here there are only 5000 Catholics out of a population of 7,000,000. The Vicariate Apostolic of Shiu-Chow, China, was entrusted to the Salesians in 1920. This vast territory is divided into 10 missions and has about 3,000,000 souls under the jurisdiction of Mgr. Louis Versiglia, S. C. The Vicariate Apostolic for the Aborigines in Kimberley, Australia, is to be given to the Salesians in the fall of 1922. At Elizabethville, Congo, Africa, there is a large mission. Since the armistice of the World War important foundations have been established for the first time in Ireland, Germany, and Russia. Among prominent members of the Society are: John Cagliero, Cardinal Bishop of Frascati, one of Don Bosco's early pupils and the head of the first band of Salesian missionaries who went to Buenos Aires in 1875; Archbishop Guerra of Santiago de Cuba, Bishop Piani, auxiliary of Puebla, Mexico; and six other bishops in Italy and South America. Recently deceased is Don Paolo Albers, second successor of the Ven. Don Bosco, died in Turin, 29 Oct., 1921. Salesian institutes in the United States are at: Ramsey, N. J.; New Rochelle, N. Y.; Philadelphia, Penn.; Watsonville, Cal. (orphanage). In England they have schools at: Battersea, London; Farnborough, Hampshire; Burwash, Sussex; Chertsey, Surrey. There is an agricultural school at Pallaskenry, Co. Limerick, Ireland. The novitiate and house of studies for the United States is at New Rochelle, N. Y.; for England and Ireland, at Oxford.

Salford, DIOCESE OF (SALFORDIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—399c), suffragan of Liverpool, England. The Catholic population of the diocese is about 293,400, of whom 1,000 are Italians and 900 Lithuanians, Poles, Ruthenians, etc. Recently deceased Catholic laymen of note were: Sir Daniel McCabe, K.S.S., Deputy Lieutenant of the County of Lancashire, twice Lord Mayor of Manchester, died 29 Sept., 1919; Alderman Carus, K.S.G., several times Mayor of Darwen, died in December, 1920. During the World War some 25 priests of the diocese went out as chaplains. Of these Rev. J. Birch lost a limb, Rev. John O'R. Browne was honored by a military cross with bar, and Revs. R. McGuinness, W.

Leighton, R. V. O'Shaughnessy, and Arthur O'Connor won military crosses. Rev. E. M. Bray, D.D., did heroic work in the Messina earthquake and was made a Cavalier by the King of Italy. The Catholic Truth Society Conference was held at Salford in 1916. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Louis Charles Casartelli, b. 1852, consecrated 1903. The auxiliary bishop is Rt. Rev. John S. Vaughan, titular Bishop of Sebastopolis, b. 1853, consecrated 1909. Statistics for the diocese are: 135 parishes, 134 churches, 12 chapels of ease, 52 convent and private chapels, 18 institutions (chapels) where Mass is said, 1 abbey of Poor Clares, 44 convents for women, 289 secular priests, 86 regular priests (7 Benedictines, 8 Friars Minor, 7 Dominicans, 55 Jesuits, 5 Premonstratensians, 3 Servants of Mary, 1 Missionary Father of St. Joseph), 11 religious congregations of men, 23 religious congregations of women, 4 colleges for boys with 1163 students, 14 colleges for girls with 2790 students, 1 training school and hostel with an attendance of 118, 141 elementary schools, 2 industrial schools with 965 pupils, 5 rescue homes for children, 3 homes for working girls, 1 hospital for men (Alexian Brothers' at Newton Heath, Manchester), 1 hospital for women (The Home, Whalley Range, Manchester), 1 refuge. Ecclesiastical students attend St. Bede's College and Ushaw College. Most of the public institutions admit the ministry of priests. Practically all the institutions are aided by the Government, except Stonyhurst and a few convents. The Government aids all the elementary schools, Loretto College for girls, St. Bede's College and Xaverian College for boys. The Priests' Eucharistic League and Lancashire Infirmary Clergy Fund are established among the clergy. There are seventeen associations among the laity. Catholic periodicals are: "The Catholic Federationist," monthly organ of the Catholic Federation; "The Harvest," monthly organ of the Catholic Protective and Rescue Society; and the "Annual Diocesan Almanac and Directory."

Salmas, (cf. C. E., XIII—402c), a Chaldean see included in the ancient Archdiocese of Adhorbigan or Adherbaidjan. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Pierre Aziz, b. at Mossul, 6 April, 1866, ordained in 1890, elected 25 Jan., 1910, consecrated 15 Aug. following, published 30 Nov., 1911. During the war all the villages in the diocese were devastated and burned and many of the men were killed. At the time of the Persian massacre in 1918, Bishop Aziz was deported by the Turks, but was providentially saved after having been imprisoned for two months and enduring great suffering. He arrived at Diabckir with several priests after a journey of 50 days on foot. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 10,460 Chaldean Catholics, 24 secular priests, 33 churches and chapels, 14 stations and 14 schools.

Salt Lake, DIOCESE OF (LACUS SALSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—404a), comprises territory in Utah and Nevada. The foundations of the Catholic Church in the Diocese of Salt Lake were laid by the intrepid missionary bishop, Rt. Rev. Lawrence Scanlan, D.D., who was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Utah, 25 January, 1887, and first Bishop of Salt Lake, 25 January, 1891, when the diocese was erected. Bishop Scanlan was an apostolic man, inured to the hardships of frontier mission life, and greatly beloved by all classes. After forty-seven years of missionary toil he died 10 May, 1915. The second Bishop of Salt Lake, Rt. Rev. Joseph S. Glass, C.M., D.D., was born in Bushnell, Ill., 13 March, 1874, made his classical studies at St. Vincent's College, Los Angeles, Cal. and his theological studies at St. Mary's Seminary, Barrens, Mo., where he was ordained to the priesthood, 15 August, 1897. After spending two years in Rome, he took his degree in theology in 1899, and was appointed professor of theology in the Vincentian Seminary at Barrens, Mo. In 1901 Dr. Glass was sent by his community as president of St. Vincent's College and rector of St. Vincent's Church, Los Angeles, Cal., where he labored with success for fourteen years. He was appointed to the see of Salt Lake 1 June, 1915; consecrated in St. Vincent's Church, Los Angeles, 24 August, and installed in the See of Salt Lake 1 September, 1915.

The new bishop found himself, with but seven diocesan priests and a number of borrowed clergy, in charge of the largest diocese in the United States, embracing, according to the latest data, 167,657 square miles, including the entire State of Utah, 84,990 square miles, and two-thirds of the State of Nevada, 72,667 square miles. His first work was to get priests and to place them at strategic points, so that they could reach the scattered parishes and missions of the vast diocese. Nearly every known language is spoken in the mining camps and sick calls of a hundred miles are a common occurrence. The unsettled conditions of the mining industry made it necessary to proceed with caution and deliberation, for a few months of depression often changed a thriving parish into a deserted mining camp. In spite of many difficulties and a scarcity of resources, the bishop, with characteristic energy, augmented the clergy, erected nine new parishes, of which three were in the episcopal city, and sent missionaries to administer to the scattered Catholics in the remote parts of the diocese. The cathedral of the Magdalene was refurbished and decorated and made one of the most imposing churches in the intermountain section; valuable church property was acquired; and the Catholic people were organized and instructed. The growth of the Church has been steady, but owing to the migratory habits of a large part of the mining population, largely immigrants from various parts of Europe, many of the smaller parishes are unstable and temporary. At present, there are 29 priests working in the diocese, and 12 ecclesiastical students in various seminaries. Salt Lake City has 5 parishes, 2 free grammar schools, St. Ann's Orphanage and School, besides St. Mary's Academy and Boarding School. There are parochial schools at Ogden, Park City, and Eureka.

The Sisters of the Holy Cross have done pioneer work in the diocese, having opened St. Mary's Academy and Holy Cross Hospital in 1875, and the Sacred Heart Academy in Ogden in 1876. All these institutions have grown rapidly. The Holy Cross Sisters have charge of the day schools at Ogden, Park City, and Eureka, and at the cathedral, Salt Lake. In 1920, Bishop Glass invited the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent to the diocese, and gave them charge of the large Catholic free school. Each year a grade is added to the curriculum, and the high school will soon be completed. The Knights of Columbus are well organized in the diocese and conduct an evening trade school for ex-service men in Salt Lake. The Catholic Women's League is one of the largest and most aggressive Catholic organizations of women in the West. Their war record was conspicuous and they perform much charity and philanthropic work. The Society of St. Vincent de Paul is organized in all the city parishes, and the Boy Scouts are well organized and doing efficient work in some places. The vast deposits of iron and coal in Utah mark the diocese as one of the future steel centers of the West. With the development of this industry and the revival of copper and silver mining, an immense increase of population is expected.

Salta, DIOCESE OF (SALTENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—404a), in the northern part of the Republic of Argentina, suffragan of Buenos Aires. The last administrator of the see was the Rt. Rev. Joseph Gregory Romero. He was born at Salta, 14 Oct. 1862, elected titular bishop of Thernæ 18 Feb., 1914, and auxiliary bishop of Salta, published 25 May following, appointed bishop of Salta, 29 Oct., 1914, died 17 Aug., 1919. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Matias Linares who died 24 April, 1914. The see is still vacant. According to the statistics of 1920, the diocese contains: 37 parishes, 131 chapels, 54 seminarians.

Salttillo, DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., XIII—404), Coahuila, Mexico, suffragan of Linares, is still governed by Mgr. Jesús Maria Echavarria. It has 27 parishes and 1 vicariate or vice-parish; the number of churches and chapels is greater, for there is hardly a hamlet or village that has not at least a poor chapel; the spiritual wants of the diocesans are attended to by 34 priests, of whom 7 are regular—Jesuits in Saltillo and Carmelites and Josephites in Torreón. There are 15 communities of Sisters with 52 religious: the Sisters of St. Joseph with 3 hospitals in Torreón and 1 in San Pedro; Sisters of Charity of the Good Shepherd with a Magdalen Asylum at Saltillo; the Sisters of the Incarnate Word, of the Good Shepherd, of the Purity of Mary, and the Guadalupe Sisters engage in teaching; the Sisters of Christian Mercy have orphanages at Saltillo and Parras. Before 1913 there were many other communities of men and women in Coahuila teaching or exercising works of charity towards the poor and the sick, but in the late revolution the diocese suffered great losses, as for instance the total destruction of the famous Jesuit College of Saint John. The diocesan seminary was disbanded and has not yet been reorganized, as the Government is using the building for its offices. There are, however, at present 5 boys' schools, 3 colleges and 3 schools for girls with a total of 2500 pupils. Among the social organizations of the laity are: The Catholic Association of Young Mexico, the newly-established Catholic Union of Coahuila; and the Catholic Workingmen's Society in Saltillo, Torreón, Parras, and San Pedro. Among those who have died in the diocese in recent years mention must be made of Señor Don Enrique and his wife Señora Dona Trinidad Narro de Maas. They founded and endowed an orphan asylum which was confided to the Josephite Sisters, but the Sisters have been driven out and the orphanage turned over to lay directors. They likewise contributed very generously towards the erection of the new Gothic Sanctuary of our Lady of Guadalupe, the most beautiful in Saltillo but not yet completed owing to the political disturbances. They also gave St. Vincent's Hospital, which bears the name of the donor, "Enrique Maas," but it too is in the hands of the Government. Finally they left an adequate bequest for the foundation of a school of arts and crafts, but it has not been possible to carry out this plan either.

Salto, DIOCESE OF (SALTENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—405b), in Uruguay, suffragan of Montevideo. The erection of this diocese did not go into effect until 1919, when the Rt. Rev. Thomas Camacho was appointed to the new see. He was b. at San José 16 Feb., 1868, and elected 3 July, 1919.

Saluzzo, DIOCESE OF (SALUCIÆ, SALUTIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—405d), in the Province of Cuneo, Piedmont, Upper Italy, suffragan of Turin. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Giovanni Oberti, of the Clerks Regular of the Pious Schools; b. at Ovada, Italy, 21 Nov., 1862, elected 16 Dec., 1901, made assistant to the pontifical throne 20 Feb., 1913. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained: 160,500 Catholics, 92 parishes, 671 churches and chapels, 304 secular priests, 31 regulars, 112 seminarians, 24 Brothers, 220 Sisters.

Salvation Army, THE.—The Salvation Army is an organization, religious and philanthropic in purpose, which was formed under the above name in 1878, by William Booth, as the result of a defection from the Methodist Church in England in 1865, the movement being known by various names previous to 1878.

I. DOCTRINE.—Its doctrine is contained in the "Articles of War," sixteen in number, eight doctrinal, eight, chiefly pledges of personal conduct, which constitute the "fighting faith," and in the "Doctrines" which contain the "teaching faith." Neither of these confessions, however, is considered as a strict creed, binding the soldiers to intellectual assent, although the "Articles of War" are signed by each soldier when enlisting. The doctrine of the Trinity is accepted; the Bible is viewed as the sole Rule of Faith; they reject Calvinistic predestinarianism and hold that Christ died for all, not merely for the elect, and that ample provision is made for entire deliverance from sin by the salvation of God; sin is the enemy which the Army is to combat; conversion from sin is an emotional experience accompanied by outward manifestations, such as the vociferous uttering of "Hallelujahs" and "Amens," and by the interior assurance of salvation. There are no sacraments, the administration of Baptism and the Lord's Supper being discontinued in 1882, the distinctive uniform and the pledge of the Articles being considered as sufficiently taking their place. Religious worship consists chiefly in "holiness" or experience meetings, a feature being stirring hymns sung to the accompaniment of a band or of some other instrumental music.

Stress is laid upon personal conduct, the soldier upon his conversion pledging himself to live a Christian life, to be humane, and to abstain entirely from intoxicating liquors and all harmful drugs. Self-sacrifice in order to procure the salvation of others is inculcated as a duty at all times, while more specifically a week is set aside annually as "self-denial week," in which all members are urged to make a self-denial offering through saving, thrift and abstention from personal pleasures or luxuries during that period. The Army is chiefly concerned in practising the corporal works of mercy, not, however, to the exclusion of the spiritual works of mercy, as they see the latter.

There are no ministers or pastors in the Salvation Army, the commissioned officers being the nearest approach to such, and women being fully eligible for any position; there are no churches, understanding by the term edifices set apart for Divine worship, for the Army property is used indiscriminately for philanthropic and for devotional purposes—a hall may be in the evening a chapel and in the night a dormitory; in a certain sense there are no congregations, since those who accept the full Army tenets become themselves workers for the salvation of others, even though they be only private soldiers in the Army, while those who do not become active soldiers after their conversion usually join some other church if they persevere.

Although there are no ministers, yet the organization is hierarchical, autocratic, and monarchical in character. The chief officer is the General (known formerly as the Commander-in-chief), who issues all orders and regulations, to whom unquestioning obedience is to be yielded, in whom as trustee is vested the ownership of all Army property, and who, himself appointed for life, appoints his own successor. Associated with the General at the International Headquarters in London are the Chief of the Staff, the Foreign Secretary and the Chancellor. In the "field" the army is divided into Territories (usually corresponding to countries), these being subdivided into Provinces, these again into Divisions. Each Division contains a certain number of corps, each of the latter having its own Captain and Lieutenant, the corps being the nearest Army equivalent to an ordinary denominational congregation. Officers usually give their full time to the work and receive sufficient remuneration to support themselves; soldiers usually pursue their ordinary occupations during the day and in the evening devote themselves to the work of the Army. There are training schools or garrisons for officers, the course varying from 1 to 3 years.

II. HISTORY.—The Salvation Army was founded by William Booth, who, born an Anglican in England in 1829, later joined the Wesleyan Methodists, becoming a local preacher when fifteen or sixteen years old. His open-air preaching not being acceptable to the Wesleyans, he joined the Methodist New Connexion and was ordained minister, only to leave that denomination in 1861. He and his wife then turned themselves exclusively to itinerant evangelical work, intending at first not to found a new sect, but rather to send their converts to existing organizations. In 1865, after having come in contact with the slums of London, his ideas took more definite shape, and he founded the East London Revival Society, changing the name later to East London Christian Mission, and again to the Christian Mission. By 1878 the movement had spread; one of Booth's co-workers in a seaport town was known as the "captain," and he preparing a reception for his leader announced that the "General" was coming. The program spoke of the "Christian Mission" as a "volunteer army." This Booth changed to "Salvation Army," which accordingly in 1878 became the name of the movement, its official and definitive acceptance taking place in 1880.

Opposition to the movement and its general methods, at first bitter, subsided after a few years. In 1890, following out the development of his ideas on the relief of poverty, uplift of the slum-dwellers, reform of criminals, and similar points, Booth published his "In Darkest England and the Way Out," advocating as remedies for those evils, city, farm, and over-sea colonies, homes for fallen women, prisoners' aid work, and legal and financial associations to aid the poor. The scheme has been realized to a considerable extent. William Booth died in 1912 and was succeeded by his son, Bramwell Booth.

The Army spread rapidly to countries outside of England, the inauguration in different countries being as follows: Scotland 1878; Ireland, the United States, Australia 1880; France 1881; Canada, Sweden, India, Switzerland 1882; South Africa, Ceylon, New Zealand 1883; Germany 1886; Denmark, Italy, Holland 1887; Norway 1888; South America (5 republics), Finland, Belgium 1889; West Indies 1892; Dutch East Indies 1894; Iceland, Japan 1895; Korea 1908; Burma 1914; China 1915; Russia 1917.

III. STATISTICS.—In 1920 the Salvation Army was located in 70 countries and colonies; it numbered 11,173 corps and outposts; it was in charge of 1276 social institutions, 751 day schools; it had 18,321 officers and cadets, 71,419 local officers, 32,000 bandsmen; it issued 82 periodicals.

In the United States in 1920 an administrative reorganization was effected, three territories being created, instead of one as formerly. Miss Evangeline Booth, daughter of the first general, remains, however, in supreme charge of all the work in this country. In 1920 there were 1036 corps and outposts; 3649 officers and cadets; 28,586 members; 52 hotels for men, 3 for women, 4 boarding houses for young women; 82 industrial homes; 3 children's homes;

19 alum posts and nurseries; 26 rescue homes and maternity hospitals. The Army also dispenses charity through Christmas dinners, distribution of toys, finding temporary or permanent work for the unemployed, and distribution of coal and ice to the poor.

IV. CRITICISM.—A discussion of the doctrines held by the Salvation Army is unnecessary here, since they are common also to Protestantism in general, partly to liberal and partly to "orthodox" sects. There is little new in doctrine in the Army; its methods are not entirely new; its work is to a considerable extent new to Protestantism. So far as it performs the work to which it has assigned itself the Army deserves credit. Many, chiefly Protestants, have attacked its methods, and the sincerity of its members. The most serious charge that can be brought against it, however, is its minimizing of dogma, of spiritual truth, of the concursus of God in the affairs of men through the Sacraments and sacramentals, through the supernatural in general. The statement that the Army performs work which no other sect can or will perform is fairly true; but the additional assertion that it engages in work and remedies conditions with which not even the Catholic Church can cope is unfounded. In the Catholic Church various religious orders perform similar work without sacrificing anything on the religious or dogmatic side; rather are the latter intensified by such work. Prominent among these may be mentioned the Alexian Brothers, founded, originally to combat the plague in the fifteenth century, the various Hospitalers, the military orders, the Mercedarians, the Magdalens, the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, especially devoted to the redemption of fallen women, the Little Sisters of the Poor, the Sisters of Charity, while a typical lay society is that of St. Vincent de Paul. An interesting conversion of a Salvationist to the Catholic Church is that (1897) of Miss Susie Swift, Brigadier of the Army, head of the Auxiliary League of America and editor of "All the World" (Curtis, "Some Roads to Rome in America").

V. THE VOLUNTEERS OF AMERICA is the name of an American off-shoot of the Salvation Army. In 1896 Ballington Booth, a son of the founder of the Army, together with his wife, left the Army through dissatisfaction with the autocratic rule of the general. They formed a rival organization under the above title, having, however, practically the same doctrines, aims and methods as the Army. In organization the Volunteers are more democratic, the government of the corporate society being vested in the "Grand Field Council," which elects eleven directors as financial officers and trustees of all property. The commander-in-chief or general is elected for a term of five years. More generally than is the case with the Salvation Army converts are urged to join the church with which they were previously connected, or some other church of their choice. A distinctive feature of the work of this sect is the Volunteer Prisoners' League, which has for its object the salvaging and reformation of persons sentenced to prison. In 1920 there were reported in the United States, 97 churches or edifices, 307 ministers (officers, etc.), and 10,204 members. They conduct one hospital, 19 homes for children and girls, and various homes for working girls.

There have been many other off-shoots or imitators of the Army. Major Moore, one of General Booth's first envoys to the United States, seceded in 1884 and formed an organization which he called the American Salvation Army. Litigation over the name ensued between him and the parent organization, ending in 1913 when the dissenting body received from the Salvation Army $4100 and adopted the name of American Rescue Workers. The names of some of the others are: Gospel Army, Redeemer's Army, Christian Army, Christian Union Army, American Volunteer Army, Christian Volunteers, Christian Volunteer Association, American Salvationists, Samaritan Association, Samaritan Christian Association.

GERALD SHAUGHNESSY.

Salzburg, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SALISBURGENSIS), in Austria. It contains 290,000 Catholics, 2615 Protestants and 302 Jews; 187 parishes, 335 churches, 8 monasteries and 2 Benedictine Abbeys (St. Peter at Salzburg and Michaelbeuren) for men, 2 monasteries and 1 Benedictine abbey (Nonnberg, Salzburg) for women, with 1074 sisters, 18 deaneries and 2 collegiate churches. The clergy number 478 seculars and 172 regulars. The following orders for men and women are represented: Franciscans, Capuchins, Servites, Mission Fathers, Ursulines, Poor Clares, Dominican Sisters, Augustinian Sisters, Sisters of Charity, Sisters of Our Lady of Charity, Sisters of the Cross and School Sisters. The archdiocese has a cathedral chapter which has twelve members and collegiate churches at Mattsee (1 provost and 9 capitulars) and at Seekirchen (1 provost and 9 canons). An important change took place in the archdiocese when in 1920 the diocese of Trent and in 1921 the diocese of Brixen were separated from the Archdiocese of Salzburg and placed under the direct jurisdiction of the Holy See. In 1810 the University was dissolved but the theological faculty, with the right of promotion remained and now consists of 8 professors and 40 students.

The following schools exist in the archdiocese: 1 archiepiscopal private gymnasium (180 students), 1 state gymnasium (310 students, 4 girls), 1 state obberschule (9 years scientific course, 517 students), 1 realgymnasium for girls conducted by the Ursulines (6 years scientific course, 87 students), 1 teachers' training school in charge of the Ursulines (165 students), 1 reform realgymnasium (6 years scientific course, 12 teachers), 1 high school, 2 training schools, 180 elementary schools, 1 industrial school, 2 missionary schools. These schools are supported by the Government. There are also in the archdiocese 3 homes, 3 asylums, 58 hospitals, 3 refuges, 24 day nurseries, 28 public institutions, admitting ministry of priests. The following associations exist among the clergy: Association for the Support of Sick Priests, Association of Catechists and Association of Clergy. The laity have forty associations. Four Catholic periodicals are published in the archdiocese. The cathedral at Salzburg (1647-1675) ranks as the finest example of Germanic Renaissance architecture.

Throughout the nineteenth century the see of Salzburg was governed by many saintly and zealous prelates among whom the Mt. Rev. Augustin Grüber (1823-1835) stands out pre-eminent. His successors were: Frederick Cardinal Count zu Schwarzenberg (1836-1856), Maximilian Joseph Cardinal von Tarnozy (1856-1876), Francis Albert Cardinal Eder (1876-1890), John Evangelist Cardinal Haller (1890-1900), John Baptistus Cardinal Katschthaler (1900-1914), b. 20 May, 1832, d. 27 Feb. 1914, author of "Theologica dogmatica" (1876-1888), "History of Church Music" (1893), "Sermons" (1892-1908). In 1906 he held a Provincial Council at Salzburg, actively furthered the Catholic University Association and the St. Caecilia Society. His successor, Most Rev. Balthasar Kaltner, b. at Goldegg, 12 April, 1840, d. 6 July, 1918, a learned and devout prelate who had been auxiliary bishop of Gurk (1910-1914), and was most active and zealous in all that concerned the welfare of the archdiocese. He was well known as an eminent jurist and architect. He built the preparatory seminary and the parish churches at Itzling, Oberndorf, St. Andrä, was professor of theology at Salzburg and author of an advanced catechism for use in the high schools. From 1914 to 1918 he labored indefatigably for the spiritual and bodily welfare of the soldiers. The present incumbent is the Most Rev. Ignatius Rieder, b. at Grossarl, 1 February, 1859, professor of theology at Salzburg, elected titular bishop of Sura and auxiliary bishop of Salzburg 2 Jan., 1911, succeeded Most Rev. Balthasar Kaltner, 10 March, 1919.

During the war the clergy and laity worked with great zeal and encouraged the soldiers by giving them spiritual and temporal comfort. Twenty-six priests were appointed field chaplains, 2 regulars were active in cholera hospitals, 2 in refugees' camps, 3 in military hospitals. All the clergy contributed from 4 to 7% of their incomes for war purposes, about 60,000 kronen. War welfare committees were established, collections were taken up in churches, the prisoners received spiritual aid and the wounded were cared for in reserve hospitals. An asylum was founded for war orphans and good literature was distributed among the soldiers (central distribution bureau at Salzburg). Many rectories, Sisters' private schools and two summer homes of the Ursulines were given over for hospital purposes, gifts and clothes were distributed to the soldiers at the front. Catholic Women's Associations provided refreshments at the depots, the war loan was promoted, church and private property was used to further the war loan (several million kronen), the soldiers graves were cared for, the Red Cross Association was supported, the church bells were given over to the government, the St. Peter foundation cared for twenty wounded soldiers, and the missionaries at Lieferung and St. Rupert placed 100 beds at the disposal of the Government.

Samoa: (cf. C. E., XIII—421a), a group of islands in the Western Pacific Ocean, formerly belonging to the United States and Germany. On 29 August, 1914, the western islands of the group (Savaii, Upolu, Apolima, Manono), held by Germany, were occupied by a force of New Zealanders. At the conclusion of the World War, Western Samoa was assigned to New Zealand under a mandate from the League of Nations, dated 17 December, 1920. The Governor General of New Zealand in Council has made laws for Western Samoa, and Hon. E. P. Lee, Minister of General Affairs for New Zealand, is in charge of Samoa and other former German islands assigned to New Zealand. Provision has been made for a nominated Legislative Council, to which are eligible for appointment natural born British subjects, Samoans, or those born in Samoa. The Council consists of not less than four official members and an equal number of unofficial members, all meetings being presided over by the administrator. The civil administration was inaugurated 1 May, 1920. German currency is replaced by New Zealand bank notes and specie. Military training of the natives except for local police or defence purposes is prohibited, and no military or naval force or any fortification may be established. These islands are ecclesiastically administered by a vicar apostolic and called the Vicariate Apostolic of Navigators' Islands (q. v.).

The United States still retains Tutuila and other islands, which for political reasons form a separate ecclesiastical territory but are not a prefecture properly so called. They are administered by Rt. Rev. Joseph Darnand, S. M., titular Bishop of Polemonium, and Vicar Apostolic of Navigators' Islands, the former administrator, Rt. Rev. Peter John Broyer having died 27 October, 1918. During the last months of 1918 great havoc among the natives was caused by influenza, 7000 falling victims to the disease. The total Catholic population of the islands is 8000. The whites number 1500, natives, 37,000, and Chinese coolies 1500. There are: 15 parishes; 57 churches; 74 stations; 2 native priests; 15 Marist Fathers; 9 teaching brothers and 2 lay brothers; 21 European and 15 native Sisters; 15 high schools, with 25 teachers and 1091 pupils, of whom 576 are boys and 515 girls; 1 training school for catechists with 4 teachers and 35 students; 69 elementary schools with 69 teachers and 1293 pupils. A Catholic periodical, "O le Auauna," is published in the native language.

According to the statistics of 1922 the Catholics number about 364,826. All races of Europe are represented. The archdiocese contains 146 parishes, 70 missions, 30 stations, 216 churches, 6 monasteries and 12 convents for men, 1 monastery and 71 convents for women with about 1230 Sisters, 250 secular priests, 185 regulars, about 200 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 260 seminarians. The educational institutions are: 2 universities, 75 professors, 650 students; 8 higher educational institutions for women, 161 teachers, 2391 students; 1 normal school; 2 training schools; 70 elementary schools, about 840 teachers, and 15,500 students. Among the missionary works are several schools for the Japanese and Chinese in San Francisco, and for the Indians in Lake and Mendocino counties. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 3 homes, 5 asylums, 1 institution for the blind, 1 institution for deaf-mutes, 7 hospitals, 2 refuges, 3 settlement houses, 7 day nurseries. The City and State prisons, insane asylums, etc., admit the ministry of priests. The orphan asylums and 1200 children under the care of the Little Childrens' Aid are partly aided by the Government. The Eucharistic League has been established among the clergy. The Holy Name Society for men exists in many parishes. A Catholic paper called "The Monitor" is published in the archdiocese. Recently the Poor Clares and Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic have settled in the archdiocese. The Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary are in charge of Newman parish. The following clergymen of note have died since 1912: Rev. Philip O'Ryan, S.T.L., apologist in A.P.A. struggle and organizer of the League of Holy Cross Cadets; Rt. Rev. Mgr. J. J. Prendergast, who was Vicar General from 1878 to 1914. During the war 10 priests served as chaplains in the army, 5 overseas and 5 in camps. The Knights of Columbus were active in the various camps.

San Gabriel dell'Addolorata de Marañon, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (S. GABRIELIS DE VIRGINE PERDOLENTE), erected by a Decree of 27 February, 1921, which divided the former prefecture of São Leon de Amazonas, cutting off the regions which lie around the Marañon or Upper Amazon, and its tributaries, within the limits of Peru, and extending as far as the rivers Huncway and Ancutiyo, and erecting this territory into the new prefecture. The district is chiefly populated with Indian tribes, and is entrusted to the Passionists. Rt. Rev. Atanasio Jauregui was named first prefect apostolic. No statistics are published.

San José de Costa Rica, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI JOSEPHI DE COSTARICA; cf. C. E., XIII—446d), metropolitan, in Costa Rica, Central America. Carlo Falconi, b. at Prato, 23 March, 1848, elected titular bishop of Arethusa 24 June, 1907, transferred 30 August following. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Pio Alberto del Corona who resigned. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 106,800 Catholics, 100 parishes, 250 churches and chapels, 246 secular priests, 42 regulars, 19 Brothers 136 Sisters and 7 seminarians.

San Pedro de Sulan, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in the Republic of Honduras. It was erected 2 February, 1916, by the division of the diocese of Comayagua, of which it takes in all the northern part and comprises the civil provinces of Cortes, Islas de la Bahía, Atlantida and Colon. It is confided to the care of the Lazarists. The Very Rev. Antoine Casulleras was appointed administrator in 1917. No further data are available.

San Salvador, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTI SALVATORIS IN AMERICA CENTRALI; cf. C. E., XIII—450d).—On 11 Feb., 1913, the former diocese of San Salvador was erected into an archdiocese and two other dioceses, those of San Miguel and Santa Ana, were formed therefrom. The present incumbent is the Most Rev. Anthony Perez y Aguilar, b. at San Salvador, 20 March, 1839, elected 13 Jan., 1888, appointed archbishop 11 Feb., 1913, and made assistant at the pontifical throne 2 April, 1916. According to the statistics of 1920 the former diocese contained 1,000,000 Catholics, 295 churches, 180 secular priests, 13 colleges, 18 hospitals, 8 homes and asylums.

San Severino, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI SEVERINI; cf. C. E., XIII—452), in Central Italy, suffragan of Fermo, was erected in early days. The saint whose name it bears was its second or third bishop and governed it from 440 to 442-3. The diocese was subsequently united to that of Camerino, but was restored in 1586. San Severino is situated about a kilometer from the ancient Picene city of Septempeda, where the Romans later established a colony. It has two cathedrals, the older being in an ancient castle. In 1827 the Augustinian church became the new cathedral, and to it the Madonna of Pinturicchio was transferred recently from the castle, while Pomaranico's paintings are in the Church of the Madonna della Misericordia. The crypt of the Church of San Lorenzo in Doliolo, a Cistercian abbey church, is believed to be the ancient temple of Feronia. It is in this church that the relics of the martyrs SS. Hippolytus and Justin are preserved. The sanctuary of San Pacifico attracts large crowds of pilgrims from the adjoining dioceses. Near Monte Sanvicino St. Dominic Loricate passed his extraordinarily penitential life and when his monastery fell into ruin his body was transferred to the parish church of Santa Anna in Frontale. This little diocese of San Severino has a population of about 20,000; the Capuchins have 1, the Friars Minor 1, and the Cistercian monks 2 houses; 1 monastery of Cistercian nuns; 1 convent of Poor Clares; the Vincentian Sisters of Charity have an orphanage and a hospital; the Sisters of the Child Jesus have a flourishing college, and the Daughters of Providence an orphanage. There are 29 parishes, 100 church chapels and oratories, about 120 priests. The present Bishop of San Severino, Mgr. Adamo Borghini, was born in Gualdo in the Archdiocese of Ferrara on 13 December, 1859, appointed titular Bishop of Carpasia on 13 January, 1909, and auxiliary of Ferrara, and transferred to San Severino on 4 July, 1913, succeeding Mgr. Bicchi, who died on 18 January, 1913.

By the Constitution "Boni Pastoris" of Benedict XV, dated 20 February, 1920, the diocese of Treja was perpetually united to that of San Severino in such a way that the Bishop of the latter diocese is to be Apostolic Administrator of Treja. The bishop is to reside a notable part of each year in either diocese. Treja had been made a diocese on 8 February, 1916, but never had a bishop of its own, having been administered by the Bishops of Camerino until 1913, when, owing to the inconvenience arising from its location, it was placed temporarily under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of San Severino. The Diocese of Treja comprises a commune in the province of Macerata, with (in 1914) 9597 inhabitants; 8 parishes; 46 churches, chapels, and 3 oratories, and 30 secular priests; there were a convent of Friars Minor; a convent of Salesian Sisters, while the Sisters of Charity had a refuge and a girls' orphanage, in addition to directing the public hospital.

San Severo, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI SEVERINI; cf. C. E., XIII—453b), in southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento. By a consistorial decree of 23 February, 1916, two parishes of the archdiocese of Benevento were assigned to the diocese of San Severo. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Gaetano Pizzi, b. at Miranda, Italy, 15 February, 1854, elected bishop of Lacedonia, 21 July, 1907, consecrated 15 September, transferred 5 November, 1912, enthroned 1 February, 1913, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Emmanuele Merra, who died 20 July, 1911. In 1920 the diocese contained: 45,920 Catholics, 7 parishes, 25 churches and chapels, 94 secular priests, 6 seminarians.

Sanctuary, RIGHT OF (cf. C. E., XIII—430).—Churches still enjoy the right of asylum to this extent, that culprits taking refuge there are not to be removed, except in case of necessity, without the assent of the ordinary or at least of the rector of the church.

Sandhurst, DIOCESE OF (SANDHURSTENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—436c), in Victoria, Australia, suffragan of Melbourne, The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. John McCarthy, b. at Fermoy, diocese of Kilfenora, Ireland, 1 Nov., 1858, elected 14 Feb., 1917, consecrated 7 June following. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Stephen Reville, O. S. A., who died 19 Sept., 1916. The diocese contains 26 parishes, 109 churches, 38 stations, 1 monastery for men, 8 Marist Brothers, 44 secular priests, 8 regulars, 202 Sisters, 1 orphanage with 150 orphans, 58 penitents. Educational institutions include the following: 1 college for men with 2 teachers and 36 students; 13 colleges for women with 59 teachers and 988 students; 26 elementary schools with 104 teachers and 3612 pupils.

Sandomir, DIOCESE OF (SANDOMIRIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—436d), in Poland, suffragan of Warsaw. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Marianus Joseph Ryx, b. at Warsaw, Poland, 10 Dec., 1853, ordained in 1879, elected 7 April, 1910, consecrated 20 June, published 27 Nov., 1911. In 1920 the diocese contained 892,278 Catholics, 21 deaneries, 215 parishes, 50 filial churches, 333 secular priests, 1 regular, 45 Sisters, 96 seminarians, 1 college at Opatow.

Sandwich Islands, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See HAWAII.

Sankt Polten, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI HIPPOLYTI; cf. C. E., XIII—447b), in Lower Austria, suffragan of Vienna. There are now (1921) in the diocese, 650,800 Germans, of whom 644,000 are Catholics and 6800 belong to other denominations. It contains 40 parishes, 503 churches, 9 monasteries, 7 abbeys and 1 convent for men, 104 convents with 1140 sisters; 510 secular and 449 regular priests and 20 lay brothers. There is one diocesan seminary with 180 students, two preparatory seminaries for boys and one diocesan theological institution. With very few exceptions, the educational institutions are under the care of the government. In high schools (Mittelschulen) and elementary schools, Catholic religious instruction is obligatory. Owing to the proximity of Vienna there is no university at Sankt Pölten. There are, however, 2 diocesan high schools (Höhere Schulen) with 29 teachers and 450 students (girls), 1 normalschool (diocesan), for girls, with 15 teachers and 250 students, 20 elementary schools (diocesan), 120 teachers, 5000 students, 7 industrial schools of which 1 is commercial and 6 are housekeeping schools with 40 teachers and 850 students (girls) and 2 mission schools.

The following institutions exist in the diocese: 1 home for the blind, 1 institute for the deaf and dumb. All other institutions are under the care of the state and about 750 sisters give their services in caring for the inmates. Four associations exist among the clergy and 28 among the laity. Only 5 Catholic periodicals are published at Sankt Pölten, all others are issued in Vienna and in other nearby places.

During the war both clergy and laity were active in caring for the wounded in hospitals, for the prisoners and refugees. Entertainment was provided for the soldiers, homes were established and spiritual and bodily comforts were given to them.

Mention should be made of the following distinguished prelates and laymen who have died since 1912: Rev. John Kirschbaumer, Provost at Krems, a well known author; Very Rev. Anthony Erdinger, Very Rev. Karl Erdinger, both prelates at Sankt Pölten and writers of renown, the latter also a botanist; Count Julius Falkenhayn and Count Ferdinand Kuefstein who were well known public-spirited men of their day.

At present (1922) the diocese is administered by the Rt. Rev. John Baptist Roessler, b. at Niederschrems, 23 June, 1850, ordained 19 July, 1874, appointed to the see of Sankt Pölten 10 April, 1894, consecrated 10 June following.

Sant' Angelo de' Lombardi et Bissaccia, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI ANGELI LOMBARDORUM ET BISSACCIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—459b), in Southern Italy, suffragan of Conza. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Giulio Tommasi, b. at Scanzano, Italy, 13 August, 1855, elected 19 April, 1897, made assistant to the pontifical throne 12 August, 1915. According to the statistics of 1920 Sant' Angelo contains 27,000 Catholics, 6 parishes, 30 churches and chapels, 75 secular priests. Bissaccia contains 15,570 Catholics, 3 parishes, 15 churches and chapels, 43 secular priests, 2 regulars.

Sant' Angelo in Vado and Urbania, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI ANGELI IN VADO ET URBANIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—459c), in Italy, suffragan of Urbino. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Luigi-Giacomo Baccini, a Capuchin, b. at Taggia, Italy, 17 November, 1869, elected 18 August, 1908, consecrated 4 October following, published 29 April, 1909. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Antonio Valbonesi who resigned. According to the statistics of 1920 Sant' Angelo contained: 5000 Catholics, 36 churches and chapels, 18 secular priests, and 16 seminarians. Urbania contained 10,000 Catholics, 42 parishes, 50 churches and chapels, 54 secular priests, 6 regulars, and 20 seminarians.

Santa Agata dei Goti, DIOCESE OF (S. AGATHÆ GOTHORUM; cf. C. E., XIII—454b), in Southern Italy, has 29 parishes; 93 churches; 2 convents of nuns with 12 members, and 6 communities of Sisters; 3 religious houses of men; 89 secular and 13 regular priests; 9 Brothers; 1 seminary, 55 seminarians; 1 girls' college, 2 teachers, 15 students; many elementary schools with a very large attendance; 6 infant asylums; 1 hospital. All the elementary schools in the diocese are state or city institutions. The clergy has a Mutual Benefit Association and a Casa del Clero: for the laity there are several rural banks, 2 Catholic circles, and various pious unions, including the Daughters of Mary. The population of the diocese is entirely Catholic and numbers about 32,000. One of the most interesting events in the diocesan history in recent years was the coronation of the Madonna on Mount Taburno. During the war both clergy and laity devoted themselves to the care of the refugees and the orphans. In August, 1921, a periodical for the Franciscan Tertiaries of Southern Italy was started at Airola in the diocese.

The inhabitants numbered 435,000 of whom 400,000 were Catholics, 20,000 Protestants and 15,000 Jews.

Santa Maria de Monserrato, ABBEY NULLIUS OF (BEATÆ MARIE VIRGINIS DE MONSERRATO; cf. C. E., XIII—458a), Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. The arch-abbot, Dom Gerardo van Caloen resigned the charge of the Brazilian Benedictine Congregation in July, 1915. Before he resigned a coadjutor cum jure successionis, Dom Chrystomo van Saegher, had been chosen. Both have now retired, the first to the monastery of St. Andrew in Lophem (Bruges), Belgium, the second to Regina Coeli Abbey in Louvain. The present arch-abbot of the Brazilian congregation is Dom José da Santa Escolastica Faria, elected 28 October, 1920, and blessed by Cardinal Gasparri 24 June following. He lives at the monastery of São Bento in the suburb Alto Boa Vista da Tijuca, in the mountains which surround Rio de Janeiro. Today the abbey nullius is governed by Dom Pedro Eggerath, formerly rector of the gymnasio of São Bento in São Paulo, who was elected 14 October, 1915, blessed 13 February, 1916, elevated to abbey nullius by apostolic bull in August, 1921. The new abbot has continued the works commenced by his predecessors, but from the beginning has enlarged the social activity of the abbey. The works of the abbey are:

1. Mission of Rio Branco.—In August, 1912, two new Fathers and a lay brother reinforced the staff working there, making four priests and 3 lay brothers in the territory between the Rio Branco and Rio Negro. A group of Benedictine nuns will soon follow them. The Brazilians (farmers and laborers) in the territory number about 20,000 and the Indians about 5000, nearly all of whom are baptized.

2. Care of Souls.—Besides the abbatial church in Alto Boa Vista, the monks have charge of the parochial church of Sant' Amaro in the neighboring city of Campos, State of Rio de Janeiro, and in other places in the Diocese of Niteroy. The Benedictines also have charge of care of souls in the navy hospital on the Island of Cobras, as well as the garrison and prison on the same island and the hospital of São Sebastião for tubercular patients. They look out for the immigrants coming from Europe who are stationed in the Island of Flores, in the bay of Guanabara.

3. Education (Secondary).—1 gymnasio attended by 300 students. (Primary) 1 "popular" school for 200 boys, 1 night school for adults, 1 shelter for naval sailors. These schools are taught by the monks assisted by lay teachers paid and directed by them. The shelter for sailors is helped by the naval authorities and officers instruct there in some subjects. The personnel of the abbey includes 17 priests (inclusive of arch-abbot and abbot), 1 cleric with solemn vows, 2 clerics with simple vows, 1 choir novice, 5 lay brothers and 2 lay novices; total 28.

Santa Marta, DIOCESE OF (SANCTÆ MARTHÆ; cf. C. E., XIII—458), in Colombia, suffragan of Cartagena, is governed by Mgr. Joaquin García, Eudist, who was born at Bucaramanga, in the Diocese of Nueva Pamplona on 4 April, 1883, and was appointed to this see on 15 September, 1917, in succession to Mgr. Toro, who had been transferred to the See of Antioquia. The diocese contains about 86,000 inhabitants.

The first bishop of this diocese, Mgr. Tomas Ortiz, O.P., was appointed in 1531, but owing to ill-health he was unable to receive episcopal consecration after his arrival in Spain from America, where he had previously passed some time as protector of the Indians. Don Alonso Tobes was appointed his successor, but shortly after his consecration he died in Spain when preparing for the journey to his diocese. Finally Bishop Juan Fernández de Angelo succeeded in reaching his see in 1536. Pope Paul IV reduced the diocese to the rank of an abbey, but ten years later (1572) Gregory XIII made it a diocese once more, with Fray Juan Méndez as bishop. The diocese now contains 26 rather extensive parishes with 35 churches; among the latter the most notable are the Cathedral, in Roman style, very solidly built on artistic lines, and the mother church of Santa Ana in Ocaña, a work of beauty.

The religious communities are: the Capuchins and Eudists at Santa Marta; the Jesuits at Ocaña; the Presentation Sisters of Tours at Santa Marta, Cienaga, Ocaña and Convención; and Visitandines at Ocaña. Devoted to the care of the sick and the education of girls, the Presentation Sisters have excellent colleges in each of the towns just mentioned, with a total of over 2000 pupils, and they direct 3 hospitals in Santa Marta, Cienaga and Ocaña. There are 35 secular and 11 regular priests, and a seminary with 38 seminarians, which is under the care of the Eudists. The work of the Jesuits who were introduced by the presiding bishop, Mgr. Toro, is twofold; some of the Fathers are engaged in missionary work in the part of the diocese bounded by the east bank of the Rio Magdalena, others are teaching in the College at Ocaña, where they have 200 students. Besides the educational institutions mentioned above there are in Santa Marta the Liceo Celedon, which is chartered to confer the baccalaureate degree, and normal schools for men and women each with about 12 professors and 300 students. In Ocaña there are advanced and elementary technical schools; and in the entire diocese more than 320 primary schools. There is a diocesan "Boletín eclesiástico" published every fortnight; and a weekly paper published in the parish of El Sagrario and San Miguel de Santa Marta. The sodalities and societies among the laity are very active and productive of consoling results; chief among them are: The Brothers of the Most Blessed Sacrament, the Sodality of the Sacred Heart, the Adorers of the Blessed Sacrament, the Nazarenes, the Knights of Columbus, the Daughters of Our Lady of Mount Carmel, the Rosary Sodality, the Third Order of St. Francis. The Societies of the Propagation of the Faith and of the Holy Childhood were established some years ago and are rapidly increasing their membership.

In 1905 the diocese was divided to provide for a Vicariate Apostolic of Goagira, whose first Vicar Mgr. Anastasis Vicente Soler y Royo with his zealous brother Capuchin missionaries have reaped so much fruit among the Indians of that country. Most of the Goagiros and the Arhuacos now are civilized; while the Motilonos also are abandoning their proud paganism and savagery for Catholicity.

Santa Rosa de Capan, DIOCESE OF (SANCTÆ ROSÆ DE CAPAN), in the Republic of Honduras, suffragan of Tegucigalpa. This diocese was erected 2 Feb., 1916, by the division of the diocese of Comayagua, of which it takes in the western part and includes the civil provinces of Santa Barbara, Capan, Gracias, Ocutepeque, and Intibuca. The present and first bishop is the Rt. Rev. Claude Volio, b. at Cartago, in Costa Rica, 28 Oct., 1874, elected 8 Feb., 1916, published 4 Dec., following. No statistics are available.

Santa Rosa de Osos, DIOCESE OF (SANCTÆ ROSÆ DE OSOS) in Colombia, South America, suffragan of Medellin. This diocese was erected 5 February, 1917, and the Rt. Rev. Maximilian Crespo was appointed its bishop. He was born at Buga, Colombia, 18 October, 1861, elected bishop of Antioquia, 18 October, 1910, published 27 November, 1911, transferred 7 February, 1917, published 22 March following. No statistics for this diocese have been published up to this time (1922).

Santa Severina, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SANCTÆ SEVERINÆ; cf. C. E., XIII—459d), in Calabria, Southern Italy. The present Archbishop is the Most Rev. Carmelo Pujia, b. at Filadelfia, Italy, 25 Oct., 1852, elected bishop of Anglona-Tursi 13 July, 1897, published 14 March, 1898, promoted October, 1905, published 11 December, following. He was made assistant to the pontifical throne 9 February, 1912, and named administrator of Cotrone 1 April, 1921. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Nicolas Piccirilli who was transferred. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained: 42,000 Catholics, 23 parishes, 5 vicarages, 53 churches and chapels, 67 secular priests, 16 regulars, 17 seminarians.

Santander, DIOCESE OF (SANCTI ANDERII, SANTANDERIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—458c), in Spain. suffragan of Burgos. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Juan Plaza y Garcia, b. at Hortezucla de Ocen, Spain, ordained 4 June, 1887, elected titular bishop of Hippos 27 August, 1913, consecrated 27 December, following, transferred 16 December, 1920. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Vincent Sanchez y Castro, who died 19 September, 1920. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 239,000 Catholics, 478 parishes, 500 secular priests, 20 convents for men with 151 priests, 61 convents with 573 sisters.

Santarem, PRELATURE NULLIUS OF (cf. C. E., XIII—459d), in North Brazil, suffragan of Belem do Pará, erected 21 September, 1903. The first prelate was Rt. Rev. Frederico Benito Costa. The area of the prelate is 231,660 square miles. It is bounded on the north by Guiana, on the east by the Atlantic Ocean and the Xingu River, on the south by the state of Matto Gross and on the west by the State of Amazonas. There are about 200,000 civilized inhabitants and about 50,000 Indians. More than half of the prelate is yet unexplored. The civilized people live along the Amazon River and near the mouths of the rivers that flow into it. There are 20 parishes erected. Santarem, Obidos, Alemquer, Monte Alegre, Macapa and Itaituba have residing pastors. The other parishes are frequently visited by the missionaries: Faro, Juruty, Almeirim, Boim, Alter do Chão, Aveiros, and Altamira by the Franciscan Fathers; Masagão and Amapá by the Missionaries of the Holy Family. In the prelate there are 12 Franciscan Fathers and 2 Franciscan lay brothers, 5 Missionaries of the Holy Family (from Grave in Holland), and 1 secular priest, an Italian. In Santarem is the monastery of the Franciscan Fathers, and the principal convent of the Sisters of the Immaculate Conception Order who number 50 Sisters, 30 in Santarem and 20 with residences in Obidos, Monte Alegre, St. Joseph's Colony, and amongst the Indians. These Sisters have a novitiate in Muenster (Westphalia), for novices who come from Germany. The Franciscan Fathers come from the Province of St. Anthony in Brazil and are all Germans. They have a Seraphic College in Bardel (Westphalia) for German postulants, the college being directly dependent on St. Anthony's Province in Brazil.

The city of Santarem, situated where the Tapajoz enters the Amazon, is a healthy city of about 5000 inhabitants. It has the Cathedral Church of the Immaculate Conception, St. Sebastian's Church in the east and St. Raymundus' Church in the west of the city, and the 2 convents of the Franciscan Fathers and the Conceptionist Sisters in the south of the city. The population of the whole prelate is Catholic with very few exceptions. There are about 20 Protestants in Santarem and perhaps a dozen in some other cities. Obidos has about 3000 inhabitants and Alemquer, Macapá and Monte Alegre less than 3000. The people are descendants of Indians and some European immigrants, mostly of mixed origin and some colored, the pure European and quite white people being very few. In Macapá is a Congregation of the Daughters of the Heart of Mary; 14 Sisters in Macapá, 3 in Masagão, 4 in the Indian mission amongst the Waupés, and 5 in the Diocese of Piauhy. The mission among the Mandurucus Indians of the prelate was founded in 1910 and has 2 schools for boys and girls, directed by the Franciscan Fathers and the Conceptionist Sisters. There are about 600 Indians civilized and instructed. The Mandurucus have a special idiom, in some way like the Lupi language, but with considerable difference. Fr. Hugo Mense, who stayed 10 years amongst these Indians, composed a very interesting grammar and dictionary of the language and wrote also a catechism. The present prelate of Santarem is Rt. Rev. Amandus Bahlmann, O.F.M., titular bishop of Argos, born in Essen (Oldenburg), 8 May, 1862, entered the Franciscan Order in 1879, consecrated 19 July, 1908.

Ambrogio Riccardi, b. at Scavolino, Italy, 29 June, 1856, elected 1 July, 1916, consecrated 22 September, published 7 December following, succeeding the Rt. Rev. Eugenio Giambro who was transferred. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 32,000 Catholics, 54 parishes, 120 churches and chapels, 76 secular priests and 36 seminarians.

Sassari, ARCHDIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., XIII—485a), in Sardinia, Italy. The present administrator is the Most Rev. Cleto Cassani, b. at Vallate, Italy, 8 September, 1866, elected auxiliary Bishop of Sassari, 19 January, 1911, promoted 5 January, 1917, published 22 March following. He succeeded the Most Rev. Emilio Parodi, who died 20 December, 1916. According to the statistics of 1920 the archdiocese contained: 132,200 Catholics, 35 parishes, 123 churches and chapels, 117 secular and 41 regular priests, 17 brothers, and 69 Sisters.

Sault Sainte Marie, DIOCESE OF (SANCTE MARIE-ORMENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—487c), in Canada. The Rt. Rev. David Joseph Scollard, the first administrator of the diocese, is the present incumbent. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains: 50,000 Catholics, including 5500 Indians, 35 secular priests, 33 regulars, 87 churches, 40 parishes, 72 missions, 1 college, 2 academies, 3 hospitals, 50 Catholic schools, 70 public schools with Catholic teachers, 3 industrial schools for Indians.

Savannah, DIOCESE OF (SAVANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—488a), comprises the State of Georgia. After administering the diocese for twenty-two years the Rt. Rev. Benjamin J. Keiley resigned in February, 1922. The Very Rev. Joseph D. Mitchell is the present administrator of the diocese, until the appointment of a new bishop. On 11 September, 1921, the Catholic Laymen's Convention was held at Atlanta. The diocese contains 23 parishes, 34 missions, 57 mission stations, 57 churches, 5 convents for men, 11 for women with 137 Sisters, 21 secular priests, 40 regulars, 8 lay brothers, 10 seminarians who are being educated in another diocese. The educational institutions are: 4 high schools with 18 teachers and 320 students (200 boys, 120 girls), 6 academies with 20 teachers and 250 girl students, 9 elementary schools with 88 teachers and 2316 pupils. For the campaign against the forces of anti-Catholic prejudice in the State see the article on the Catholic Laymen's Association of Georgia. The following hospitals and homes exist in the diocese: Home of the Little Sisters of the Poor, Savannah, St. Joseph's Orphan Home for Boys, Washington, Ga., St. Joseph's Hospital, Savannah, St. Joseph's Hospital, Atlanta. One Catholic periodical called The Bulletin is published in the diocese. The clergy have founded the Eucharistic League. Among the laity there exist the following societies: Holy Name, Children of Mary, St. Vincent de Paul, etc. There are 20,517 Catholics in the diocese with about 300 Syrians and 65 Croatians. During the war two priests of the diocese served as chaplains.

Savona and Noli, DIOCESE OF (SAVONENSIS ET NAULENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—489d), in northern Italy, suffragan of Genoa, is governed at present by Mgr. Giuseppe Scatti, who was born at Lecco in the Diocese of Milan on 19 January, 1843, and appointed to the see on 9 January, 1898. His cathedral church is the Basilica of Our Lady of Mercy. During the World War many of the parish priests were with the colors; and all the colleges, seminaries, and religious houses were converted into military hospitals. Some of the clergy were decorated with the Cross of Merit for their invaluable assistance. On 25 October, 1921, there was a violent explosion in Fort S. Elena which caused great destruction in Bergeggi and its environs; the clergy rendered great aid to the sufferers. The diocesan reports for 1922 are as follows: 63 parishes; about 270 churches and chapels; 245 priests, of whom 75 are religious; 8 religious houses for men, 5 for women; 1 abbey; 1 seminary; 3 boys' colleges; 1 girls' college; 2 state normal schools; 1 state trade school; 4 state classical schools; refuges and hospitals in almost all the parishes. There are the following clerical associations or societies: Apostolic Union, Borsa Ecclesiastica, Operai Evangelici, and the Clerical Cooperative Society; for the laity there are among others the Catholic Workers' Society and the Young Men's Society. The Catholic population is about 90,000.

Saxony, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SAXONIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—501b), incorporated with the Prefecture Apostolic of Lusatia, in the ancient diocese of Meissen, reestablished by a decree of 24 June, 1921.

Scannell, THOMAS BARTHOLOMEW, theologian, b. in London on 8 July, 1854; d. at Brighton on 17 February, 1917. He studied at St. Edmund's College, Ware, and after winning first place in the LL.B. examination in London University, with honors in jurisprudence and Roman Law, graduated in theology from the English College, Rome, and was ordained in 1878. He taught philosophy at Ware, and subsequently served on the English mission, becoming missionary rector at Weybridge in 1905, and a canon of Southwark diocese in 1908. He was a member of the papal commission on Anglican orders (1896), and besides contributing to the "Dublin Review," and other periodicals, he is the author of "The Priest's Studies," "A Manual of Catholic Theology" (in collaboration with Dr. Wilhelm), and revised and enlarged "The Catholic Dictionary" of Addis and Arnold.

Schwenckfeldians (or SCHWENKFELDERS; cf. C. E., XIII—597).—In recent years a responsiveness to modern influences has taken the place of their early clannish exclusiveness; all rules and regulations against secret societies have been dropped and participation in war, formerly forbidden, is now left to the individual conscience. The establishment of the Perkiomen School (Pennsburg, Pa.), has increased their general interest in education. In 1921 this sect reported 4 churches, 6 ministers and 1150 members, all in Pennsylvania.

Scopia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SCOPIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—609d), in Albania, under the direct jurisdiction of the Holy See. The present administrator is the Most Rev. Lazare Miedia, b. at Scutari, Albania, 6 March, 1859, elected Bishop of Sappa 28 March 1900, made titular archbishop of Arepolis and coadjutor to the Archbishop of Scutari 24 December, 1904, transferred 14 April, 1909, published 29 of the same month. He succeeded the Most Rev. Pascal Trosksi who resigned. According to 1920 statistics there are: 15,400 Catholics, 24 parishes, 14 churches, 4 secular and 14 regular priests.

Scoraille, RAOUL DE, author, b. at Perigueux, France, on 24 January, 1842; d. at Toulouse on 11 July, 1921. He studied at Sarlat and Paris, preparing for admission to St. Cyr; but in 1860 he entered the Society of Jesus at Pau. He was ordained in 1874 and consequently taught philosophy at Vals. In 1887 he was appointed director of "Etudes," the noted Catholic review, which was to resume publication the following year, after its enforced suspension resulting from the intolerant Ferry decrees. He was superior of the Toulouse province when the Society was again exiled from France at the time of the separation, and he became rector of the scholasticate at Gemert in Holland where the young Jesuits found refuge. It was during this exile that he wrote his "François Suarez," a valuable biography of the great Spanish philosopher and theologian.

Scout Movement, CATHOLIC BOYS'.—The Boy Scouts of America represent a nation-wide movement for the betterment of the American boy. Educational in its spirit and purpose, this movement aims to develop self-reliance, initiative, resourcefulness and the spirit of service in growing boys. Membership in a scout troop and active participation in the attractive scout program bring to the boy opportunity for clear thinking, a broadening of his interests, the formation of good habits and the inculcation of virtues essential to good character. The Scout Movement appreciates and understands the sentiments and interests which belong to the boy. These interests are met and satisfied by a program of activities so varied and so broad that the true scout is always moving forward, becoming keener in his capacity for observation and deduction and growing stronger as desirable habits are woven permanently into his character. The genius of scouting lies in its appeal to the boy. Scouting makes a boy eager to learn. The scout's recreation is the scout's education. Scouting has proved an excellent solution of the much-discussed boy problem. The activities which every normal boy craves are utilized in scouting for the making of a sturdy and manly boyhood, the brightest promise of an honorable and loyal citizenship. Yet scouting is not play, it is a serious work. Scouting awakens a sense of personal responsibility and stirs up in heart and mind the spirit of earnest devotion to duty. The scout promises on his honor to do his duty to God and to his country, to obey the scout law, to help other people at all times and to keep himself physically strong, mentally awake and morally straight. The scout is trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean and reverent. "Be Prepared" is the scout motto. For what? "For a Good Turn daily and for every emergency," is the answer. Parents, teachers, leaders of boys, have begun to see the movement in its clear light. They are recognizing in Scouting a distinct contribution to the happiness and welfare of the boy of today and to the community and civic prosperity of tomorrow.

Scout activities constitute in their admirable variety a splendid program of endeavor for every normal boy. Whether he be rich or poor, in school or facing his first struggle with the industrial or commercial world, scout activities offer him definite aims and positive purposes which hold his interests fast. These activities are almost beyond counting. Yet there is no confusion in their arrangement and presentation. Each has a purpose, clear and definite, with its peculiar appeal to the young mind. The program of scout training meets a need vital to all organizations for boys. Scouting succeeds where many other worthy efforts fail, for scouting keeps scouts busy. The scout never loses spirit for want of something interesting to do. Troops do not disband because membership is irksome. Under intelligent interpretation and application the activities of the scout program do not fail to develop and to maintain the interests of aspiring young scouts.

SCOUT

The religious policy of the Scout Movement is clearly defined in Article III of the Constitution: "The Boy Scouts of America maintain that no boy can grow into the best citizenship without recognizing his obligation to God. The recognition of God as the ruling and leading power in the universe, and the grateful acknowledgment of His favors and blessings, is necessary to the best type of citizenship and a wholesome thing in the education of the growing boy. No matter what the boy may be—Catholic, Protestant, or Jew—this fundamental need of good citizenship should be kept before him. The Boy Scouts of America as an organized body recognizes the religious element in the training of a boy, but it is absolutely non-sectarian in its attitude toward religious training. Its policy is that the religious organization or institution with which the Boy Scout is connected shall give definite attention to his religious life." No argument is necessary to show the great good that can result from such a program of ideal Americanism; sincere devotion to our own best principles and respect for our fellow man in his equally sincere convictions—the only true democracy. The twelfth point of the Scout Law is called by many "the cardinal point" in Scouting. Its sets forth the foregoing principle as follows: He is reverent toward God. He is faithful in his religious duties and respects the convictions of others in matters of custom and religion. The receipt of the Letter from Cardinal Gasparri, Papal Secretary of State, allayed any doubt that remained in the mind of Catholics as to their proper attitude toward Scouting. That letter bespeaks the full approbation for scouting of His Holiness, Pope Benedict XV, and confers the "Apostolic Blessing on all those who further the Catholic Extension of the Scout Movement under the auspices of the ecclesiastical authorities."

The National Council of the Boy Scouts of America has more than played fair. In the early days of its organization it cordially endorsed the establishment of the Bureau of Catholic Extension of the Boy Scout Movement, which was organized with the approval of His Eminence, the late Cardinal Farley, by a group of Catholic men interested in boys' work: "The creation of this Catholic Bureau for the handling of the Boy Scout Movement among Catholics furnishes us with a tremendously effective medium through which to aid in the development of that master creation, high principles, clean and clear thinking, independent manhood.

"Our National Catholic Societies can aid materially in this work. These organizations can best stimulate interest by stretching out a paternal hand, aiding the activities of the Scout troops not by sympathy only but by supplying scoutmasters; men to take an active part in troop athletics, hikes, etc. This is not the work of any single society but the work of all. There will be plenty to go around. We must have a combination of forces and we must eliminate waste energy. There must be more than idle words of commendation . . . there must be action." (N.C. W.C. Bulletin, Aug., 1919.)

This Bureau exists for the following purposes: to promote the formation of Boy Scout troops among Catholic boys; to assist Local Scout Councils in securing the co-operation of the Catholic authorities in their several communities; to bring to the attention of pastors and others having the direction of groups of Catholic boys, the benefits of the Scouting program; to stimulate among young men of the Church the desire for leadership as scoutmasters; in localities where there are no troops of Catholic boys, to assist scoutmasters to understand and to execute the wishes of the Catholic authorities concerning the religious duties of Catholic boys in other troops. In the execution of this program the Bureau will, from time to time, issue such literature as may be necessary, and will publish in the official Scout publications matters interesting or informative to troops of Catholic boys. Catholic scoutmasters, scoutmasters who have Catholic boys as members of their troops, and persons planning the organization of Local Councils, are invited to consult with the Bureau in order that every facility for participation in Scouting may be opened to Catholic boys, which is the aim of the Bureau.

GIRL SCOUTS.—In the United States, Girl Scouts, Incorporated, a national organization, consisting of girls between the ages of ten and eighteen, who meet periodically to undergo training which shall prepare them for a fuller life in their personal as well as social relations. The organization, patterned after the Girl Guides of England, the sister organization of the Boy Scouts, was founded in March, 1912, by Mrs. Juliette Low of Savannah, Georgia. In 1915 the growth of the movement warranted its national incorporation. Girl Scouts and their leaders, to the number of 114,000, were in 1922 organized in every State, and in Hawaii, Porto Rico and Alaska. Through the International Council the Girl Scouts are affiliated with the Girl Guides of England and all parts of the British Empire and similar organizations in other parts of the world. At the 1920 meeting of the International Council at London, reports were received from all parts of the United States and the British Empire and from Italy, France, Belgium, Switzerland, Poland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Holland, Portugal, Russia, Czechoslovakia, Brazil, Argentina, Japan, China and Siberia. The activities of the Girl Scouts center about three main interests: (1) Home, the program provides incentives for practising woman's world-old arts of cooking, house-keeping, first aid, and home nursing; (2) Health, personal health, both physical and mental, as well as community health, is the key-note of scout activities, which aim at developing the habit of health rather than merely to give information about anatomy or physiology; (3) Citizenship, gregarious interests and occupations tending to make of the girls women effective in modern political society are encouraged. The self-governing unit of a patrol, which is the basis of organization, the conduct of their own meetings according to elementary parliamentary law, working together in groups, all contribute to valuable training in democratic ideals.

A realization of the important role of play in education has dictated a method largely recreational in all scout activities, resulting in a program of storytelling, games, dancing, hiking, camping, boating, athletics and sports of all kinds. The scout slogan: "Do a good turn daily" encourages the habit of helpfulness which may be said to be the core of the movement, and the motto "Be Prepared," holds forth the ideal of being ready to meet intelligently most of the situations that are likely to arise in later life. A code of such unquestioned values as honor, loyalty, kindness, courtesy, humanity, cheerfulness, obedience, thrift, and cleanliness forms the laws to which every girl scout voluntarily subscribes.

THE ORGANIZATION is as follows: (1) Patrol, the working unit, consisting of eight girls, one of whom is elected patrol leader; (2) Troop, the administrative unit recognized by the national organization, consisting of one or more patrols, under the direction of a captain, who must be at least twenty-one years of age and who has been commissioned by National Headquarters; (3) Local Councils, link between the Girl Scout troops and the community, consisting of women and men representing all the best interests of the community—social, educational, religious, business, civic. In all communities one or more Catholic men or women have a place on the Council; (4) National Council, the central governing body, made of elected delegates from all local groups, working through an executive board which conducts National Headquarters in New York.

From the start the organization has been non-sectarian in practise as well as theory, one of the most convincing proofs of which is that the movement has received the endorsement of many of the hierarchy who have given it their serious consideration. The national organization, appreciating the zeal with which the Catholic Church safeguards the faith of her children, requires there be Catholic, as well as Protestant and Jewish, representation on every council formed. Catholic interests on the National Executive Board are represented by Mrs. Nicholas F. Brady, a prominent Catholic woman, who is also a national officer of the organization, and at National Headquarters there is a special consulting Catholic Board to which all questions involving the organization of Catholic troops are referred. It is a rule of the organization that at every Girl Scout Camp attended by Catholic children, there must be at least two Catholic councillors to assure to them the opportunity of attending Mass on Sundays and holy days of Obligation, as well as to regulate the menu for Fridays and other fast days. Late breakfast is served to all children who wish to receive Holy Communion. Grace before meals is silent, and each child says her own evening prayers, for there is never any evening camp fire prayer service held.

The movement in the Catholic field was given its chiefest impetus in the East by the encouragement of Archbishop Patrick J. Hayes of New York who, after a review of all the broader recreational programs for girls, endorsed that of the Girl Scouts. Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia, Archbishop Mundelein of Chicago, Archbishop Messmer of Milwaukee also led in endorsing the movement. It is being supported by bishops throughout the country, among whom are Bishop Donahue of Wheeling, Bishop O'Connor of Newark, Bishop Neelan of Sioux City, Bishop Nilan of Hartford, Bishop Kieley of Savannah, Bishop Hoban of Scranton, and Bishop Grimes of Syracuse. The centers most active in organizing Catholic girls into troops are New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Chicago, Richmond, Milwaukee, and Savannah. In the Archdiocese of New York there were organized on 31 December, 1920, 75 troops in 36 parishes, 8 community houses, 3 girls' clubs and 3 homes for girls. This represents 2000 Catholic girls enrolled at National Headquarters as scouts, under the leadership of 57 Catholic volunteer captains. The Catholic Charities of the Archdiocese of New York has adopted scouting as the chief recreational program for the adolescent girls in 7 orphan asylums where upward of 600 children have been organized under the direction of an experienced field captain from National Headquarters. Six Catholic colleges were among the first women's colleges to introduce a course in Scout Leadership into the departments of Sociology or Physical Education. The Colleges of New Rochelle, St. Elizabeth, Mt. St. Vincent, Marymount, Sacred Heart, and the Trinity College joined with Smith, Vassar, and Simmons in holding such classes, which were in each case directed by a Catholic member of the Education Department in co-operation with the faculty of the college. A report of March, 1922, shows a total of 192 students registered for these courses in the Catholic colleges, of whom 40 were actually doing the practical work of leading parochial troops.

Scranton, DIOCESE OF (SCRANTONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—633a), in Pennsylvania, suffragan of Philadelphia. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Michael John Hoban, b. at Waterloo, Diocese of Newark, 6 June, 1853, ordained 22 May, 1880, elected titular bishop of Alali, 1 Feb., 1896, and coadjutor bishop of Scranton, consecrated 22 March and published 26 June following. He succeeded Rt. Rev. William O'Hara, 3 Feb., 1899. The diocese has a Catholic population of 274,978, and includes the following nationalities: Irish, Germans, Slovaks, Lithuanians, Italians, Magyars and Slovenians. On 12 Oct., 1921, the diocese celebrated its golden jubilee and also the silver jubilee of its bishop, Rt. Rev. John Hoban. The diocese contains 178 parishes, 57 missions, 19 stations, 1 monastery for men, 60 convents for women with 733 Sisters, 270 secular priests, 28 regulars, 14 lay brothers. The following educational institutions exist in the diocese: 1 college for men with 15 teachers and 375 students; 1 for women with 30 teachers and 180 students; 25 high schools with 150 teachers, 5 academies with 100 teachers; 86 elementary schools with 520 teachers and 25,101 pupils; 1 industrial school with 10 teachers and 268 students. State appropriations made for education were declined in 1921. The diocese has the following charitable institutions: 2 homes, 2 asylums, 3 hospitals, 1 day nursery. A weekly called the "Catholic Light" is printed in the diocese. During the war 13 priests acted as chaplains.

Scutari, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SCUTARENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—648a), in Albania. The last archbishop was the Most Rev. Jacques Sereggi, who administered the archdiocese from 1910 to 1921. The see is now vacant. Statistics for 1920 give 34,820 Catholics, 23 foreign and 39 native priests, 29 churches and 15 chapels.

Searle, GEORGE MARY, Paulist, astronomer, b. at London on 27 June, 1839; d. at New York, on 7 July, 1918. He was a descendant of Governor Dudley of Massachusetts Bay. After the death of his parents, who were Episcopalians, he was educated as a Unitarian at Brookline, Mass., but at Harvard University, while retaining a belief in God, he lost faith in a Revelation; at a later date, however, he recovered his faith and eventually entered the Catholic Church (1862). After acting as computer for the "American Ephemeris and Nautical Almanac," he was appointed assistant astronomer at Dudley Observatory, Albany, New York, where he discovered the asteroid Pandora. Subsequently he taught mathematics in the Annapolis Naval Academy, and was called to Harvard Observatory as assistant in 1866. Joining the Paulist congregation in 1868, he subsequently held the chair of mathematics and astronomy in the Catholic University, Washington. It is interesting to note that his forecast of the last return of Halley's Comet was accepted by American astronomers as the most reliable computation. Though so well known to the public as an astronomer, Father Searle's chief work was pastoral; as a confessor and preacher he was popular; and his religious spirit is evidenced by his election as superior general of the Paulists in 1904. He was a Fellow of the Association for the Advancement of Science, and a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences and other kindred societies. He contributed articles to the "Astronomical Journal," "Astronomische Nachrichten," "The Catholic World," and CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA. His "Plain Facts for Fair Minds," a popular explanation of the chief Catholic doctrines, has enjoyed great popularity, and in his last work, "Truth About Christian Science," he corroborates Thurston's verdict that Eddyism is neither Christian nor scientific.

Seattle, DIOCESE OF (SEATTLENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—665a), comprising the State of Washington, U. S. A. The Rt. Rev. Edward J. O'Dea who has administered the diocese since 1896, celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his episcopal consecration on 8 Sept., 1921. The diocese contains 79 parishes, 66 missions, 45 mission stations, 77 churches, 1 abbey and 3 convents for men, 1 monastery and 12 convents for women, 74 secular priests, 70 regulars, 28 lay brothers, 565 Sisters. Twenty seminarians are being educated at seminaries in other dioceses. The following educational institutions exist in the diocese; 2 colleges for men with 31 teachers and 591 students; 10 high schools with 30 teachers and 630 students (230 boys, 400 girls), 6 academies with 60 teachers and 1301 girl students; 1 normal school with 5 teachers and 244 students; 31 elementary schools with 180 teachers and 6924 pupils; 1 industrial school with 5 teachers and 120 pupils. Charitable institutions in the diocese are: 2 homes, 4 orphan asylums (308 inmates), 1 refuge, 11 hospitals, 1 day nursery. All city and county hospitals and jails admit the ministry of priests.

The following societies exist among the clergy: Clerical Relief Fund, Eucharistic League. Among the laity: Holy Name Society, St. Vincent de Paul Society, National Catholic Welfare Council. A paper called the "Catholic Northwest Progress" is published in the diocese.

Sebastia, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SEBASTEN ARMENORUM; cf. C. E., XIII—667d), of the Armenian rite, with Tokat as a dependency, in Asia Minor. The see has been vacant since 1919. According to 1920 statistics the archdiocese contains 3000 Armenian Catholics, 12 mission parishes and 4 churches.

Sebenico, DIOCESE OF (SEBENICENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—668d), in Dalmatia, Jugoslavia, suffragan of Zara. The last bishop was the Rt. Rev. Luca Pappafava. The see has been vacant since 1919. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained: 98,853 Catholics, 50 parishes, 7 curacies, 54 secular and 64 regular priests.

Seckau, or GRAZ, DIOCESE OF (SECOVIENSIS), in Austria, suffragan of Salzburg. The downfall of the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the disruption of Styria which had existed for the past twelve centuries, brought about great changes in the diocese. During the World War which caused so much misery and suffering, both the clergy and laity of the diocese, served their country with great zeal and unselfish devotion. The houses of the Dominicans, Lazarists, Brothers of Charity, as well as the convents of the Religious of the Sacred Heart and Sisters of St. Elizabeth, were used as hospitals for the wounded, and as convalescent homes. Five seculars and several regulars gave their services as chaplains. The first diocesan synod was held in August, 1911, and in 1919 the present incumbent of the see, Bishop Leopold Schuster, celebrated his fiftieth anniversary as priest, and his twenty-fifth anniversary as bishop.

The population of the diocese consists of 948,096 Catholics and about 21,235 non-Catholics. The inhabitants are Germans with about 20,000 Slovenes. There are 339 parishes, 474 churches, 28 monasteries and 1 abbey for men, 13 convents for women with 128 branches, and 2086 Sisters; 627 seculars and 348 regulars, 224 lay brothers. The Cathedral Chapter consists of 3 honorary canons (Dignitares) and 7 residential canons. The state university is at Graz and has a theological faculty with 10 professors and 2 privatdozenten. The Benedictines have a theological school (university course) at Admont (3 students), the Redemptorists, one at Mantern (7 lectors, 18 clerical professors), the Dominicans one at Graz (6 lectors, 15 clerical professors), where there is also a diocesan seminary for boys connected with a gymnasium (21 professors, 300 students). Preparatory schools for classical studies (Unter gymnasium, 6 years course) are conducted by the Benedictines at Admont and St. Lambrecht, a realschule (6 years scientific course with Latin in curriculum) by the Brothers of Mary, and 2 normal schools for girls by the Ursulines at Graz, and the School Sisters at Algersdorf, near Graz. There are 45 common elementary schools and 5 kindergartens which are in charge of the following orders: Brothers of Mary (2), Religious of the Sacred Heart (2), Ursulines (2), School Sisters (28), Dominicans (2), Sisters of Charity (8), Sisters of the Holy Cross (1); an industrial school for girls has been established by the Ursulines. With few exceptions the schools are supported by the government. The following institutions are established in the diocese: 1 Catholic workmen's home, 2 homes for working-women, 1 club for young men, 1 asylum for the blind, 1 for the deaf and dumb, House of Mercy for incurables conducted by the Sisters of St. Elizabeth, 1 home for sick and aged priests, 1 sanatorium for women in charge of the Sisters of the Holy Cross, 1 hospital for men, 8 children's asylums, 3 houses of correction, 3 homes and 11 day nurseries. The ministry of priests is permitted in all public institutions. In addition to the religious orders that already had foundations in the diocese, the following have been established since 1912: Jesuits at Graz, Brothers of Mary at Graz, Pious Workers of St. Joseph Calasancius at Deutsch-Goritz, Sons of the Sacred Heart at Messendorf, Sisters of the Good Shepherd at Graz, Dominicans at Gleisdorf, School Sisters at Wildon with a mother-house at Algersdorf near Graz (26 branches), Daughters of the Divine Love at Maria-trost, and Daughters of the Divine Redeemer at Grafenegg. Orders established in the diocese prior to 1912 have opened new houses at the following places: Franciscans at Tieschen, and the Capuchins at Graz and Mittersdorf. Among the clergy 8 associations have been established and in every parish a number of societies and associations are formed among the laity. Two daily Catholic newspapers, 4 weeklies, and 9 monthlies are published in the diocese. The following distinguished clergymen have lately died: Dr. Anton Griessl, Provost of the Cathedral, for many years director of the diocesan seminary, and a well known writer on Canon law, and Rt. Rev. Mgr. John Graus, a writer on ecclesiastical art and editor of "Der Kirchenschmuck."

Secularization (cf. C. E., XIII—677d).—Religious who become secularized are freed from their vows of religion, but not from the obligations incurred if and when they received major orders. Formerly they owed not merely canonical obedience to the bishop but also obedience in virtue of their religious vow. If a religious in sacred orders who did not lose his diocesan rights by perpetual profession leaves his institute, either when he does not renew his vows or in virtue of an indult of secularization, he must return to his diocese and be received by his own bishop; if he has lost those rights, he cannot exercise his sacred orders after leaving his institute until some bishop consents to receive him or the Holy See provides otherwise. A bishop may receive such a religious unconditionally, in which case he is thereby incardinated in the diocese; or he may admit him on probation for three years, or even six but not for more; when the term of probation ends, if he has not been dismissed he is by the very fact incardinated in the diocese. The restrictions placed on secularized religious, mentioned in C. E., XIII—678c, are practically unchanged, except that in the first case they are prohibited from receiving benefices only, not offices, while the fifth regulation limiting the place of residence is omitted. The restrictions, however, are extended to those who have been dispensed from their temporary vows, or oaths of perseverance, or any special promises made according to their constitutions, provided they had been thus bound for six complete years. Those who leave their institute on the completion of the period of their temporary vows or who are secularized or dismissed can claim nothing for their work while in the institute. If, however, a nun or sister who was received without a dowry has not sufficient means to support herself, the institute is bound in charity to give her the expenses of her journey home and enough to enable her to live respectably for some time; the amount is to be agreed upon mutually, or in case of disagreement it is to be fixed by the local ordinary.

Sées, DIOCESE OF (SAGIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—681d), comprises the Department of Orne, France, and is suffragan to Rouen. The diocese is divided into 5 archipresbyterates, 36 deaneries, and 513 parishes. The population is 274,500. There is a diocesan seminary, and preparatory seminaries are at Flers and Sées. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Claude Bardel, b. 1851, preconized titular Bishop of Parium and auxiliary of Cardinal Boyer, Archbishop of Bourges, in 1894, named Bishop of Sées, 1897, assistant at the pontifical throne 1918.

Segni, DIOCESE OF (SEGNINIS; cf. C. E., XIII—683d), in Province of Rome, Italy, directly under the jurisdiction of the Holy See. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Angelo Maria Sinibaldi, b. at Gavignano, Spain, 14 April, 1846, elected titular Bishop of Europus, 13 December, 1904, and suffragan of Velletri, transferred 16 April, 1915, published 6 December following to succeed Rt. Rev. Pancrazio Giorgi who died 30 March, 1915. Statistics for 1920 report: 19,450 Catholics, 12 parishes, 34 churches, 63 secular and 18 regular priests, 8 Brothers, and 27 Sisters.

Segorbe (or CASTELLON DE LA PLANA), DIOCESE OF (SEGOBENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—684c), in the ecclesiastical province of Valencia, Spain. The present bishop is Mgr. Luis José Amigo y Ferrer, Capuchin, born at Masamagrell, Archdiocese of Valencia, 17 October, 1854, novice at Bayonne 1874, ordained 1879, founder of a congregation of Our Lady of Sorrows to educate abandoned children, elected titular bishop of Thagaste 18 April, 1907, and administrator of Solsona, consecrated in Madrid 2 June following, transferred 18 July, 1913, to succeed Mgr. Massanet, deceased. A pilgrimage of 25,000 faithful took place on 29 April, 1917, for the translation of the remains of Venerable Bonifacio Ferrer, brother of the apostle St. Vincent Ferrer, on the sixth centenary of his death and to pray for the intercession of the Blessed Virgin for the peace of the world. The diocese contains 83,460 Catholics, 64 parishes, 77 churches, 2 monasteries of women, 2 convents of men, 133 secular and 13 regular priests, 36 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 70 seminarians, 1 college for boys, 3 for girls, 1 academy for 40 boys, 124 elementary schools with 148 instructors and 9500 pupils, 1 asylum. The Government contributes to the support of nearly all the elementary schools. Besides ecclesiastical bulletins, two religious papers are published.

Segovia, DIOCESE OF (SEGOVIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—684c), in Spain, suffragan of Valladolid. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Manuel de Castro y Alvuso, b. at Valladolid, 16 April, 1863, elected bishop of Jaca 28 October, 1913, published 25 May, 1914, transferred 9 July, 1920. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Remi Gandasegui y Garrochategui, who was promoted. According to the statistics of 1920 there are in the diocese 80,500 Catholics, 311 parishes, 361 churches, 205 chapels, 363 priests, 28 convents with 65 religious and 90 Sisters.

Sehna, DIOCESE OF (SEHANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—687b), a Chaldean see in Persia. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Jean Nissan, b. at Dehoc, Turkey in Asia, in 1880, elected July, 1914, published 8 September, confirmed by a brief of the Propaganda 15 September following. Statistics for 1920 give: 900 Chaldean Catholics, 2 churches, 3 secular priests and 1 school.

Seminary (cf. C. E., XIII—694b).—Every seminary is to have two advisory boards, one for discipline and one for the administration of property; each board consists of two priests appointed by the bishop for six years, after consulting the chapter. The vicar general, the rector of the seminary, the economist, the ordinary confessors, and members of the bishop's household may not be members of the board. The bishop must see that the seminarians each day recite in common their morning and evening prayers, make a meditation and assist at Mass, that they go to confession at least once a week and receive Holy Communion frequently, that on Sundays and feasts, they be present at Mass and Vespers, taking part in the ceremonies, especially in the cathedral, if the bishop judges that discipline and studies would not suffer thereby, that they make the spiritual exercise annually for some days, and assist at a religious instruction at least once a week. No one is to be admitted to a seminary without written attestation of his legitimacy, and his reception of baptism and confirmation; nor may one who has been dismissed from another seminary or from a religious institute, until the bishop has been informed by his old superiors why he was dismissed, and has found him to be not unworthy of being raised to the priestly dignity. The seminary is not under the jurisdiction of the parish priest; for those who live therein the rector of the seminary is parish priest except in regard to matrimony. He may not, however, hear the confessions of the students, except in a particular case when for a grave urgent reason a student freely asks him to do so. It is to be noted that the Code prescribes that there must be separate profession in seminaries for Scripture, dogmatic theology, moral theology and church history.

Senegal, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See SENEGAMBIA

Senegambia, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XIII—715b), to which is joined the PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF SENEGAL, both in French West Africa, although a portion of the vicariate is British territory called Gambia. The two territories are entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost with residence for the vicariate at Dakar and for the prefecture at St. Louis. The vicar and prefect is Mgr. Louis Le Hunsec, born at Ploemer, diocese of Vannes, France, 6 January, 1878, novice in 1897, student at French Seminary in Rome in 1898, ordained 1901, professed in 1902, sent to the mission 1903, elected Bishop of Europus 22 April, 1920, named vicar and prefect 23 April, consecrated in Paris 30 May following. His predecessor was Mgr. Hyacinthe Jalabert, b. at Chambéry, 12 November, 1859, ordained 1882, missionary in Guiana, left for Senegal in 1896, elected 13 February, 1909, consecrated in Paris 1 May following, titular bishop of Telepta, vicar and prefect, died with seventeen missionaries 11 January, 1920, on his way back to Dakar when the steamship "Africa" was shipwrecked. The French Government named Bishop Jalabert a Chevalier of the Legion of Honor for his devotion in the epidemic of yellow fever which desolated Senegal in 1901. In the vicariate and prefecture there are 1,300,000 inhabitants, of whom about 800,000 are Mussulmans. There are two races of natives, the Divals and Serers, who have remained pagans but are being converted little by little to the Catholic religion. In July, 1919, M. William Pouty, Governor General of French West Africa, died. In March, 1919, the celebration of the centenary of the arrival of the Sisters of St. Joseph in the colony, and in October, 1921, the visit of M. Sarrant, minister of the colonies, and in December, 1921, the visit of General Mangin, were important events. The blacks who live in the towns of St. Louis, Rufique, Gorée and Dakkar are citoyens électeurs and in 1915 they were mobilized. Three hundred of these soldiers were killed in the war.

Besides this, many black French subjects were incorporated in the Sénégalais tirailleurs, thousands of whom died. All of the missionaries within the age limits were mobilized, and many of them served in campaigns in France and Kamerun as chaplains or infirmarians. Two missionaries won the légion d'honneur, one the médaille militaire, nearly all others the croix de guerre. One black missionary, Abbé Sonko-Saué, chaplain with the Sénégalais tirailleurs, was killed in Champagne in the attack of April, 1917. There are in this territory 27,942 Catholics, 4 parishes, 14 churches, 10 missions, 24 stations, 3 convents of Sisters, 4 secular and 26 regular (Holy Ghost) priests, 6 lay brothers, 1 seminary, 5 seminarians, 1400 pupils in schools, 4 hospitals. The Sodality of the Children of Mary and other parish associations are organized among the laity and one monthly bulletin is published. There are established under the Governor of Senegal many practical works among the natives such as, a lycée at St. Louis, normal school at Gorée, an industrial school at Gorée, a medical school, a maternity hospital and a crèche at Dakkar.

Sens, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SENONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—720b), comprises the department of Yonne, France, and has as suffragans Troyes, Nevers and Moulin. The present archbishop, who also has the title of Bishop of Auxerre, is Mgr. Jean-Victor-Emile Chesnelong, b. at Orthez, Diocese of Bayonne, 6 April, 1856, ordained in Paris 1879, pastor of St. Michel and in 1902 of Ste-Madeleine; elected bishop of Valence 21 February, 1906, consecrated in Rome by Pius X, 25 February and enthroned 29 March; promoted 12 January, 1912, succeeding Mgr. Etienne Ardin, deceased. During the war 129 priests and 26 seminarians were mobilized from the archdiocese, 7 priests and 12 seminarians were killed; 1 légion d'honneur, 5 médailles militaires and 38 croix de guerre were awarded them. In the archdiocese there are about 305,000 Catholics, 491 parishes, more than 500 churches, 318 secular priests; 1 upper seminary with 30 seminarians, 1 lower seminary with forty-three, an Ecole du Sacré Cœur with 17 seminarians; 2 colleges, the Ecole St. Jacques with 150 students (43 seminarians), the Ecole St. Edme, 120 students, in both colleges there being 28 professors; schools (primary and higher primary) 8 for boys, 48 for girls, total 134 classes, 2567 pupils, with 175 instructors; 6 orphanages directed by religious. The important hospitals are dependent on the civil administration but except in the one at Auxerre, the nurses are furnished by the Sisters. The Sisters of Ste. Colombe (Sisters of the Holy Childhood of Jesus and Mary) form a congregation for hospital work, founded in 1842. They occupy the grounds and some of the buildings of the old monastery of Ste. Colombe. The Catholic press includes "La Semaine Religieuse," official organ of the archbishop, and "La Liberté de l'Yonne," a Catholic weekly directed by an ecclesiastic named by the bishop. The congregations of women include Sisters of the Holy Childhood, Carmelites, Daughters of Charity, Sisters of the Good Shepherd of Angers, Presentation Sisters of Tours, Bon Secours Sisters of Troyes, Franciscans Sisters of Providence of Alençon, Augustinians, Ursulines. On account of the situation of the religious in France, it is impossible to give accurate statistics concerning them.

Seoul, (cf. C. E., XVI—84d), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in Corea. It comprises northern and central Corea with the exception of two north-eastern provinces, Ham-Kyeng, which were given to the Benedictine Congregation of St. Ollilien on 1 May, 1921. Following this division there remained to the Vicariate of Seoul seven of the thirteen provinces which form Corea. Its area covers 43,769 square miles and its population numbers 8,429,021, of whom 51,674 are native Catholics, with 120 European and 500 Japanese. The present vicar Apostolic is the Rt. Rev. Gustav Charles Marie Mutel of the Foreign Missions of Paris, b. at Blumetray, 8 March, 1854, ordained 24 Feb., 1877, departed for Corea 5 April following. He was made director of the seminary at Paris in 1885, elected 2 Sept., 1890, and made vicar apostolic of Corea, consecrated 21 Sept., following and named vicar apostolic of Seoul 8 April, 1911, made assistant to the pontifical throne, 24 May, 1921. On 20 Aug., 1920, Rt. Rev. Emile Alexander Devred was named coadjutor with the right of succession. According to the statistics of 1922 the vicariate apostolic is divided into 40 districts and has 612 stations, 156 churches, 24 European missionaries, 26 native priests, 15 catechists, 1 Benedictine abbey (12 monks, 12 brothers, 5 Corean postulants), 1 convent of the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres (11 European and 80 Corean nuns), 1 seminary with 18 seminarians, 1 preparatory seminary, 57 students. The secondary schools are: 54 parochial schools for boys (2122 pupils) 13 parochial schools for girls (1254 pupils); 1 agricultural and industrial school, conducted by the Benedictines (35 pupils). The Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres have charge of 2 orphanages, with 293 orphans. There are also two dispensaries. During the year 1921, 5462 persons were baptized, including 1015 adults, 2502 children of Christians and 1360 children of pagans, and 36,318 Easter communions were made. In the government hospitals, priests are permitted to visit the sick and to administer the sacraments, but they are not permitted to visit the public institutions. Every year a double retreat brings together the European and the native clergy and also whenever a synod is held. A monthly Latin review edited by the Superior of the Seminary is published for all the clergy of the Corean missions. A fortnightly review in Corean is printed at Seoul. In 1917 occurred the death of the pro-vicar Rev. Father Doucet, who for forty years labored with untiring zeal for the propagation of the Faith. During the first ten years he endured all the sufferings of a persecution.

In 1910 Corea was annexed to Japan. Although the Catholics did not suffer thereby, it is noticeable that since then the number of conversions among the pagans has grown less. During the uprising in March, 1919, some Catholics were accused of fomenting disorder and of ill-treating the natives. Upon investigation it was discovered that the police had confused them with some adherents of the Protestant sects who were implicated in the movement. The authorities did not fail to accord justice to the Catholics, and remarked the loyalty which the latter had shown under the circumstances. Since 1908 the cause of the Corean martyrs has progressed. Mgr. Imbert and his companions, eighty-two martyrs who died between 1839 and 1846, passed before the anti-preparatory Congregation on 22 November, 1921. The cause of Mgr. Berneux and his companions, twenty-six martyrs who died in 1866, was introduced. 13 Nov., 1918. The remissorial letters sent to Rome allowed the apostolic process to begin in the Spring of 1921. During the World War thirteen out of thirty missionaries were mobilized and returned to France. Three of them fell on the field of honor, the others returned in 1919, but one of them was so severely gassed that he will be invalided for the remainder of his life. During the war the support which the vicariate had received from the Propagation of the Faith and from the Holy Childhood Society was considerably diminished, but happily the alms which were sent from the United States made up the deficiency. Five perpetual scholarships and nineteen yearly scholarships which were sent by the clergy and faithful of the United States proved of great benefit to the vicariate.

Serajevo (SARAJEVO OR URHBOSNA), ARCHDIOCESE OF (SERAIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—725a), in province of Bosnia, Yugoslavia. Serajevo is a city with over 50,000 inhabitants, the capital of Bosnia, which country with Herzegovina, was annexed to Austria-Hungary in 1908, and was the scene of the murder of the Austrian Prince Francis Ferdinand which started the European war and resulted in the dissolution of the Empire and the joining of Bosnia-Herzegovina to the new kingdom of Yugoslavia. The first archbishop of Serajevo, Dr. Joseph Stader, b. at Brod, diocese of Sirmium (Diakovar), 14 January, 1843, professor of theology at Zagreb, was elected 18 November, 1881, consecrated 30 November following, died 8 December, 1918. His successor has not been appointed. The diocese is administered by the auxiliary bishop, Mgr. John Saric, born in the diocese at Travnick 22 Sept., 1871, canon of the metropolitan, elected titular bishop of Casaropolis 8 April, 1908, and consecrated 28 May following. Canon John Koscak died in 1915. Marian Congregations are forbidden in the schools by the new Government. The Catholic population (1921) numbers 240,000, of whom 230,000 are Croats, the rest Germans, Hungarians, Bohemians, Poles and Rumanians. There are 93 parishes (40 of which are entrusted to Franciscans), 105 churches, 7 convents of men, 18 of women, 79 secular and 96 regular priests, 15 lay brothers, 2 seminaries (1 at Serajevo for the entire province of Bosnia-Herzegovina under the Jesuits), with 197 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 70 students, 6 for girls with 200 students, 1 home for the aged poor, 2 hospitals, 11 day nurseries, 1 association for the clergy. Marian Congregations and the Third Order of St. Francis for the laity exist in nearly all parishes. Four papers are published and the Government gives part support to Catholic institutions.

Serenà, LA, DIOCESE OF (DE SERENA; cf. C. E. XIII—726d), embracing the Coquimbo and Altacarna provinces, Chile, is suffragan of Santiago. Rt. Rev. Carlos Silva Cotapos, b. in the Diocese of Santiago, 10 May, 1868, ordained 21 September, 1891, doctor of civil law and professor at the seminary in 1890, later at the Catholic University from 1902 to 1907, secretary in 1902, chancellor in 1907, principal and vicar general in 1915, was appointed bishop 20 February, 1918, succeeding Mgr. Raymond-Auge Jara (b. 1 August, 1852; d. 9 March, 1917).

There are (1921) 34 parishes, 151 churches, 11 monasteries for men, 18 for women, 52 secular and 50 regular priests, 170 sisters, 1 seminary with 325 seminarians, 1 college for men with 7 teachers and 85 students, 3 for women with 20 teachers and 250 students, 1 professional school with 25 teachers and 1000 pupils, 1 home, 5 hospitals in care of the nuns. The lay charitable centers are in the convents of women. The hospital, seminary, colleges and schools receive Government aid. The Society of St. Joseph is organized among the clergy and numerous sodalities, mostly of women, among the laity. The Chilean daily and four minor periodicals are published in La Serena.

Sessa Aurunca, DIOCESE OF (SUSSANA; cf. C. E., XIII—737d), in Southern Italy, suffragan of Capua. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Fortunato de Santo, b. at Forni di Sopra, 1 August, 1862, elected 25 April, 1914, published 25 May following to succeed the Rt. Rev. Giovanni Battista Diamarc, who died 9 January, 1914. According to 1920 statistics there are: 62,750 Catholics, 42 parishes, 103 churches and chapels, 80 secular priests, and 15 seminarians.

Seton Hall College, South Orange, New Jersey, was founded in 1856 by the Rt. Rev. James Roosevelt Bayley, Bishop of Newark. The new college was named after Mother Elizabeth Seton, aunt of the founder, and was first situated in Madison, N. J., but in 1861 was moved to more spacious buildings in South Orange. The same year the institution was incorporated; by the charter the corporate powers were vested in a board of thirteen trustees with the Roman Catholic Bishop of Newark perpetual trustee ex-officio and President of the Board.

During the Civil War the college so ably withstood its difficulties that, in 1865, under the management of Father McQuade, it had to enlarge its building to twice the original size. In 1867 Father McQuade was appointed Bishop of Rochester and Rev. Michael A. Corrigan, D.D., was chosen president. In 1873 Dr. Corrigan was appointed Bishop of Newark and his brother, the Rev. James H. Corrigan, A.M., succeeded him. Dr. Corrigan resigned in 1888 and Rev. William F. Marshall, whose term of office was marked by great financial success for the college, was his successor, but in 1897 illness forced Father Marshall to resign and Rev. Joseph J. Sinnott, D.D., became president, for two years, until his death. Dr. Sinnott established the Seton Hall High School and his successor, Mgr. John A. Stafford, S.L.L., opened the Bayley Hall Grammar School. After the golden jubilee of the college in 1906 Mgr. Stafford asked to be relieved of the presidency and Rt. Rev. Mgr. James F. Mooney, D.D., LL.D., the present head of the college, was appointed to succeed him.

The college now consists of eight buildings, including the library, in which there is a collection of 25,000 volumes. In 1921 the college had a faculty of 10, a student registration of 82 with 19 graduates; the high school had a faculty of 20 with a student registration of 172. Since 1862 the degrees conferred by Seton Hall College are as follows: Doctor of Laws, 42; Doctor of Science, 1; Master of Arts, 8; Master of Science, 1; Bachelor of Arts, 4.

Seville, ARCHDIOCESE OF (HISPALENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—744b), in Spain. The see is at present under the incumbency of Most Rev. Eustachio Ilundain y Esteban, b. at Pampeluna, 20 September, 1862, professor at the seminary 1891, chancellor and archpriest of the cathedral of Segovia in 1901, rector of the seminary, appointed Bishop of Orense, 14 November, 1904, consecrated 12 March, 1905, promoted to the rank of Archbishop of Seville at the Consistory of 16 December, 1920, succeeding Cardinal Enrique Almaraz y Santos, transferred to Toledo. Statistics for 1920 credit the archdiocese with 293 parishes divided into 23 archpresbyteries, 409 chapels, 1751 priests, 213 convents with 580 religious and 3204 sisters. On 8 Dec., 1917, there was celebrated the third centenary of the vow taken by the canons to defend the dogma of the Immaculate Conception.

Shan-si, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCIANSI SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—752b), in China. It has a Catholic population of 38,014 and 18,300 catechumens, all Chinese. Rt. Rev. Agapito Augusto Fiorentini, titular Bishop of Russaddir, b. at Palestrina (Italy), 27 September, 1866, appointed Vicar Apostolic of Northern Shan-si, 6 March, 1902, resigned in 1909, reappointed Vicar Apostolic of Northern Shan-si, 7 July, 1916, resides at Tai-yuan-fu. The vicariate numbers (1921): 35 missions, 279 churches, 421 stations, 1 convent for men, 1 for women, 22 secular and 20 regular clergy, 2 Brothers, 14 Sisters, 2 seminaries with 55 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 163 students, 1 for girls with 145 students, 1 normal school with 20 students, 327 elementary schools with 327 teachers and 3621 pupils, 2 hospices for aged men with 142 inmates, 2 for aged women with 100 inmates, 1 hospital with 1007 beds, 1 dispensary where 15,663 have been cared for, 8 orphanages with 248 boys and 830 girls, 5 nurseries. The prisons of Tai-yuan-fu admit the ministry of priests. The Third Order of St. Francis is organized among the laity. During the World War none of the missionaries were mobilized, but in the last five years 12 missionaries have died of typhus, prevalent in this district. In 1920 the famine resulting from the drought of the preceding summer caused one million deaths. This was the lowest mortality from this cause in all the provinces, due to the efforts of the missionaries and the Central Committee, founded by the provincial government, who worked zealously to help the suffering poor. At Ping-tin-chou, in the most afflicted district, they maintained at their own expense for a year and a half an orphanage caring for nearly 400 starving boys and girls. In return the government officially recognized the work of the vicariate by decorating it with the medal of civil merit.

Shan-si, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCIANSI MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—752c), in China. The vicariate is entrusted to the Franciscans, and has an entirely Chinese population of whom 32,000 are Catholic. Rt. Rev. Albert Odoric Timmer, O. F. M., titular Bishop of Drusipara, b. 18 October, 1859, consecrated 20 July, 1901, is vicar apostolic, with residence at Lu-an-fu. The vicariate has: 30 parishes, 61 churches, 490 missions, 244 stations, 9 secular and 31 regular clergy, about 100 Tertiary Nuns, 1 theological seminary with 8 students, 1 preparatory seminary with 31 students, 3 colleges for boys with 15 teachers and 185 pupils, 2 for girls with 5 teachers and 56 pupils, 4 normal schools with 4 teachers and 25 students, 250 elementary schools with 265 teachers and 3750 pupils (boys and girls). The work of the mission is carried on by annual missions, catechumenate offices of consultation, and lecture rooms or halls for the pagans. There are 2 asylums of the Holy Childhood, 3 refuges, 2 nurseries. The schools are not supported by the Government but some of the pupils receive a subsidy from the provincial government. The Action Sociale Catholique is organized among the laity.

Shan-tung, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCIANSI TOM ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—752c), in China, comprises a total population of about 9,000,000 and includes three civil prefectures (Teng-chow-fu, Lai-chow-fu, Tsing-chow-fu), and twenty four subprefectures. It is entrusted to the Franciscan Fathers. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Adéodat Wittner, O. F. M., titular Bishop of Milet, b. at Strasburg, 21 November, 1868, appointed coadjutor with future succession, 29 April, 1907, and vicar apostolic 9 September, 1911. He resides at Che-fu. According to 1921 statistics there are 1905 Christian communities. 373 churches or chapels, 15,215 Catholics, 16,533 catechumens. 25 Franciscan Fathers, 3 Brothers, 18 secular priests, 1 upper seminary with 10 seminarians, 1 lower seminary with 22 seminarians, 2 boarding schools for girls with 70 European and 95 Chinese pupils, 198 schools with 2493 pupils, 4 orphanages with 23 boys and 444 girls, 4 hospitals, 1 leper hospital, 5 dispensaries, 1 printing plant with 23 boys, 4 work rooms with 660 girls, 15,186 instructions given to the pagans.

Shan-tung, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCIAN-SI SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—752d), in China, comprises the northwestern part of the Province of Shan-tung, including the cities of Tsi-nan-fu, Tung-chang-fu, Wu-ting fu, Tai-au-fu, and Ling-tsing-chou. It is entrusted to the Franciscans. Rt. Rev. Adalbertus Schmücker, O. F. M., titular Bishop of Elearchia, b. at Olsberg, 6 September, 1878, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Northern Shan-tung, 29 June, 1921. He resides at Tsi-nan-fu. The population of the vicariate is estimated between 13,000,000 and 14,000,000. There are in the vicariate (1921): 43 central stations with resident missionaries, 732 sub-stations, 1900 smaller stations, 442 churches and chapels (besides some 400 oratories owned by Chinese families), 2 clerical seminaries with 54 students, 2 normal schools with 40 female and 22 male students, 179 religious schools with 1327 male and 1913 female pupils, 36 elementary schools with 487 boys and 147 girls, 2 dispensaries in which 13,256 cases have been treated, 2 homes for the aged with 59 male and 48 female inmates, 1 orphanage with 49 boys, 5 orphanages for girls with 364 inmates, besides 671 orphans placed in Christian homes, 1 printing plant. The missionary activity has been greatly hampered on account of the famine which obliged many Christians to migrate, and the help of the missionaries was requisitioned for the distribution of the relief funds.

Sheehan, PATRICK AUGUSTINE, novelist, b. in Mallow, Ireland, in March, 1852; d. at Doneraile, County Cork on 5 December, 1913; son of Patrick and Joanna (Regan) Sheehan. He received his classical education in St. Colman's, Fermoy, and entered Maynooth College in 1869; despite his delicate constitution he completed his theological studies with honors, while still a year below the age for the priesthood, which he received at Cork in 1875. He was sent to England to begin his pastoral career and after serving at Plymouth and Exeter was recalled in 1877 and appointed curate at Mallow, where he spent four years, and later at Queenstown. On 4 July, 1895, he was made parish priest of Doneraile, and in 1905 was made a canon of the cathedral. As early as 1881 Fr. Sheehan had begun writing in the "Irish Ecclesiastical Review" and other periodicals; he was encouraged by Father Matthew Russell, S.J., then editor of "The Irish Monthly" the literary mentor of so many of the Irish writers. His first novel, "Geoffrey Austin, Student," which appeared in 1895, depicted student life in Dublin and was well received. It was followed by "The Triumph of Failure"; "Luke Delmege" and "My New Curate", which attained great popularity. This was due in part, aside from the literary merit, to the fact that the reader was introduced into an unknown but real world, the genuine life of the average Irish priest, with its joys, its troubles, its difficulties and consolations. Canon Sheehan drew largely on the life around him for his characters; in his writings he reveals his ideals and aims as a pastor of souls; there is a vast vista behind the action in his fiction that leads the reader to thoughts of higher things. His novels were written mainly as a recreation, a rest from his pastoral work, which was always his chief concern. Of his later works, "The Blindness of Dr. Gray" and "The Queen's Fillet" were the most successful. "Under the Cedars and the Stars" and "Parerga" are collections of literary and philosophical notes and observations. In addition to the works mentioned above Canon Sheehan wrote "Glenanaar", "Lisheen", "Miriam Lucas", "The Intellectuals", and a volume of poems, "Cithara Mea". "Mariæ Corona" is a volume of sermons in honor of the Blessed Virgin, and "The Graves at Kilmorna", published posthumously, is a novel of the Fenian rising in '67. Shen-si, CENTRAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCEN-SI CENTRALIS; cf. C. E., XVI—84d), in China, separated from Northern Shen-si and erected into a separated vicariate 12 April, 1911. It is entrusted to the Friars Minor. Rt. Rev. Eugenio Massi, O.F.M., titular Bishop of Jaffa, b. in the Diocese of Ripatransone, 13 August, 1875, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Central Shen-si, 7 July, 1916. He resides at Sian-fu. There are in the vicariate (1921): 208 churches, 54 chapels, 11 European and 32 native priests, 38,198 Catholics, 46,559 catechumens, 2040 baptisms of adults, 1092 confirmations, 35 seminarians in the upper seminary and 45 in the lower seminary, 112 schools with 4220 pupils, 4 homes, 2 asylums, 1 orphanage of the Holy Childhood with 20 boys. Institutions in charge of the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary are: 1 orphanage, 6 pharmacies, 3 hospitals (2 for women, 1 for men), 3 schools with 335 pupils, 4 boarding schools with 600 pupils (girls), and 3 laboratories.

Shen-si, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCEN-SI SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—755d), in China. On 12 April, 1911, the Vicariate of Northern Shen-si was divided into two vicariates, Northern and Central Shen-si, and both entrusted to the Friars Minor. Northern Shen-si has a population of 3,000,000 pagans, 2257 Catholics, and 4109 catechumens. Rt. Rev. Celestin Ibañez y Aparicio, O. F. M., titular Bishop of Bagis, b. at Becerril de Campos, Diocese of Palencia, 19 May, 1873, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Northern Shen-si, 10 September, 1911. He resides at Yen-an-fu. Statistics for 1921 credit the vicariate with 5 rural districts, 11 missions, 11 principal residences, 13 churches, 14 chapels, 92 secular Tertiaries, 10 Franciscan priests, 1 upper seminary with 14 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 30 students, 23 primary schools for boys with 266 pupils, 8 primary schools for girls with 76 pupils, 2 orphanages for girls.

Shen-si, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SCEN-SI MERIDIONALIS; cf. C. E., XIII—756a), in China. It is entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Sts. Peter and Paul of Rome. Rt. Rev. Antonio Maria Capettini, titular Bishop of Evaria, b. in the Diocese of Vigevano, 11 January, 1877, was appointed Vicar Apostolic of Southern Shen-si, 8 September, 1919. He resides at Han-chung-fu. The population of the vicariate is 6,000,000, of whom 16,900 are Catholics, all Chinese. There are (1921 census): 55 parishes, 55 churches, 100 missions, 85 stations, 22 secular clergy, 17 European and 25 Chinese Sisters, 2 seminaries with 40 seminarians, 4 colleges for boys with 8 teachers and 110 pupils, 4 colleges for girls with 8 teachers and 200 pupils, 40 elementary schools with 40 teachers and 1200 students, 1 industrial school with 2 teachers and 30 pupils, 5 orphanages, 1 leper hospital, 4 hospices for the aged, 5 homes, 4 asylums, 2 hospitals, 5 refuges, 2 day nurseries. None of the institutions are aided by the Government. Several pious associations approved by the church are organized among the clergy and laity. Among the recently deceased of note are:

Mgr. Pie Joseph Passerini, former vicar apostolic, a zealous worker for the faith, founder of the cathedral, an orphanage, schools, and a hospital, d. 16 April, 1918; Fr. Olinto Tomada, a zealous missionary, d. 25 Jan., 1917; Mother Seraphine Battajola, a religious of Canosa, d. 17 April, 1919, from an infection contracted while caring for the wounded. Of recent years the vicariate has suffered from military anarchy and war, invasion of soldiers, sieges, pillage, flood, and famine. Nevertheless, the progress of religion and its moral influence among the highest classes, civilian and military, is evident. The vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Capettini, was decorated 2 March, 1920, with the Star of the Tiger by the President of the Republic, in recognition for his devotion to the wounded and refugees for two years.

Sherbrooke, DIOCESE OF (SHERBROOKIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII 756d), suffragan of Montreal. The present administrator of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Paul S. La Rocque, who celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of his ordination and the twenty-fifth of his consecration in May 1919. A new community of Sisters known as the Missionnaires de la Chine, have established a house at Sherbrooke. A new cathedral is in course of construction and the episcopal residence has lately been completed. The death in 1918 of the Rev. J. C. Choquette was a severe loss to the diocese. He was a scientist of note, an indefatigable worker in the cause of temperance and a leader of men. According to the statistics of 1922 the Catholic population numbers 100,000. The diocese contains 87 parishes, 5 missions, 145 secular priests, 21 regulars, 560 Sisters, and 30 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries in other dioceses. The Benedictines, Franciscans and Redemptorists have monasteries in the diocese. About 20,000 pupils attend the schools which have been established in every parish. A weekly review called "Le Messager" is printed at the cathedral.

Shields, THOMAS EDWARD, educationist; born at Mendota, Minnesota, on 9 May, 1862; died at Washington, D. C., on 15 February, 1921. Though as a young child he was rather bright, about the age of ten he became backward and his youth was enshrouded by a dullness that arose from alternating phases of physical and mental development. He seemed a hopeless dullard, but in his nineteenth year his normal capacities began to assert themselves, and in 1882 he entered St. Francis College at Milwaukee, where he remained three years. In 1885 he entered the Seminary of St. Thomas Aquinas at St. Paul, Minnesota. He was ordained to the priesthood on 14 March, 1891, after which he spent fourteen months as curate at the Cathedral of St. Paul. In 1892 he enrolled at St. Mary's Seminary at Baltimore, whence he graduated as Master of Arts. In October of the same year, entered Johns Hopkins University, specializing in biology and physiology. He won his doctorate of philosophy there with his thesis entitled, "Effect of Odors and Mental Work on the Blood Flow," in preparing for which he discovered an ingenious improvement of the plethysmograph. On receiving his degree in June, 1895, he was appointed to the chair of natural sciences at St. Paul Seminary. In 1898 he was assigned to pastoral work at St. Joseph's Church in St. Paul, where he seems to have remained until 1902, when he became instructor of physiological psychology at the Catholic University, becoming associate professor of this science in 1905, and professor of psychology and education in 1909. He joined the staff of Trinity College in 1904, and organized there the department of education. In 1908 received the honorary degree of LL.D. from Manhattan College. He founded the summer school for Catholic Sisters at the Catholic University in 1911, and was named its first dean, holding that post until his death. The immediate outcome of this foundation was the establishment of the Sister's College, in October, 1911, for the professional training of members of the educating sisterhoods. He engaged actively in affiliating of Catholic schools and colleges with the Catholic University, and instituted a correspondence school in education for the private instruction and study of Catholic sisterhoods. He inaugurated a movement to restore music to the people, considering it a basic element in the development of intellect and the formation of character, and he developed complete system of musical instruction—vocal and instrumental. In 1920, he undertook, with Mrs. Justine Ward, the construction of a building to be devoted to the school of music of the Sisters' College.

Dr. Shields founded "The Catholic Educational Review," and "The Catholic Education Press," in 1911. He contributed the "Notes on Education" in "The Catholic University Bulletin," from 1907 to 1910. In addition he is the author of "The Index Omnium" (1887); "The Making and Unmaking of a Dullard" (1908); "The Education of Our Girls" (1907); "The Teacher's Manual of Primary Methods" (1912); "The Psychology of Education" (1908); and several treatises on Religion and Reading. He contributed to "The Dolphin," "The Catholic World," "The School Review," and "The Catholic University Bulletin," and wrote a few articles for "The Catholic Encyclopedia."

Shi-koku (SIKOK), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XIII—758b), comprises the Island of Shi-koku, the smallest of the four islands of Japan. The population, according to 1920 statistics, is 3,046,625. The prefecture is entrusted to the Dominicans formerly in the Philippines. Rt. Rev. Joseph Marie Alvarez, O.P., b. at Burgos 16 March, 1871, professed 8 September, 1886, ordained 6 April, 1895, was appointed first Prefect Apostolic of Shi-koku, 2 October, 1904, with residence at Tokushima. There are in the vicariate: 541 Catholics, 3 churches, 5 missions, 11 stations, 8 regular priests, 4 Brothers, 1 seminary with 4 seminarians, 1 elementary school with 69 students, 1 orphanage with 17 inmates, 1 maternity school. In 1918 four high schools were opened, one in each civil prefecture: that in Tokushima is an industrial school, and that in Takamatsu is a commercial school. A housekeeping school, to be conducted by Dominican Sisters, is under construction at Matsuyama. The Confraternity of the Holy Rosary is established at Kochi.

Shipman, ANDREW JACKSON, lawyer and Slavonic scholar, b. in Springvale, Fairfax County, Virginia, on 15 October, 1857; d. at New York on 17 October, 1915; son of John James and Priscilla (Carroll) Shipman. His mother was a lineal descendant of Thomas Carroll, who settled in Maryland in 1725, while the Shipmans came from England about a quarter of a century earlier. He studied at Georgetown, where he entered the Catholic Church, and after graduating became the editor of a local paper, the "Vienna Times," and subsequently assistant manager of a coal-mining company in Hocking Valley, Ohio. There he acquired his first knowledge of several Slavonic languages from the foreign-born miners, whose lay apostle he became. They had arrived in the United States only to find a complete absence of priests speaking their tongues or using their local rite; Shipman saw the danger in which they were and taking the matter up with the hierarchy had their needs attended to. In 1884 he entered the United States customs service at New York, and two years later graduated in law from the University of the City of New York and was admitted to the bar, of which he became one of the most distinguished members. He was probably the greatest lay authority in America on the laws of the Catholic, Episcopal, and Orthodox Russian Churches. He took an important part in the New York Constitutional Convention of 1915. He was a member of the Board of Regents of the University of the State of New York, and an active worker in all the chief Catholic organizations and charitable associations in New York. Apart from the law, his chosen work was for the peoples of Eastern Europe, among whom he was wont to pass his annual vacations. He interested himself in the Slavic, Hungarian and Italian immigrants, he lectured and wrote about Russia, Poland, Ruthenia and the Greek Rites, and on the occasion of the dedication of St. George's Ruthenian Greek Catholic Church in New York, October, 1911, he published "The Holy Mass According to the Greek Rite," in Slavic with his own translation in English. He was advisor to Mgr. Soter S. Ortynsky, the first Catholic bishop of Greek Rite in the United States, and acted as a counsellor of the Syrian Catholics. His zeal is instanced in his exposure in "America" in 1910 of the attempt of the Presbyterians at Newark in New Jersey, New York, and other centres to proselytize the newly-arrived Slavic Catholics by the fraudulent use of the Greek Rite Liturgy and ceremonial, a Presbyterian "Mass." His funeral services were held in St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York. After the solemn requiem Mass, a burial service was conducted according to the Greek Rite by Bishop Ortynsky, attended by Greek, Ruthenian and Maronite priests. Members of the Ukrainian choir chanted the music of the service. This was the first time a burial service according to this rite was held in a church of the Latin Rite in the United States. Shipman was one of the chief promoters of the publication of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, to which he contributed numerous articles.

Shiré, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (SHIRENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—759a), in Nyasaland Protectorate, Africa. In the beginning of 1915 an insurrection fomented by a negro, John Chilembro, the head of a Protestant mission, broke out in Nyasaland, and several Europeans were massacred. The principal Catholic mission, St. Joseph du Nguludi, seat of the Vicar Apostolic, was attacked at night by the insurgents. Most of the missionaries were able to save themselves, but one of them was severely wounded and left for dead, and his recovery was almost miraculous. Six large buildings of the mission were reduced to ashes, the losses amounting to more than 100,000 francs. The government of the Protectorate of Nyasaland (English) indemnified the mission to the extent of £800. Since then the Mission of Nguludi has been rebuilt but the effects of the insurrection are still being felt. When the war broke out in 1914 one Father and one Brother who were in France at the time were mobilized and remained in the French army throughout the war. Father M. Ryo was several times cited in orders of the day and received the Croix de Guerre. The French Government excused the other missionaries from military duty. They offered their services to the English. Nine priests and four sisters during several years worked in the sanitary division of the English army and in the ambulance service and hospitals. All of them were remarkable for their devotion, their endurance and their self-sacrifice. One priest and one Sister died in the service. According to the statistics of 1922 the vicariate apostolic contains 2 churches, 23 chapels, 9 principal stations, 17 succursal stations, 9 houses of the missionary Fathers, 4 convents of the Daughters of Wisdom with 12 sisters, 24 regular priests, 3 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 7 seminarians. The educational institutions are: 1 boarding school for girls, 2 teachers, 25 pupils, 2 training schools, 2 teachers, 30 pupils, 296 elementary schools, 200 teachers, 17,530 pupils. The elementary schools receive an annual allowance of £130 from the government. Two orphanages, 3 hospitals and six dispensaries for the natives exist in the diocese. A catechism, prayer book, Bible history, hymn book and 2 grammars have been printed in Cinyanja, the language of the natives. In 1922 there were 8000 native Catholics, 5130 catechumens, 50 European and 30 Goanese Christians.

Shorter, DORA SIGERSON, poetess, b. in Dublin; d. on 6 January, 1918. Miss Sigerson, who became later Mrs. Clement Shorter, published her "Verses" in 1894. Her other works are "The Fairy Changeling," "The Lady's Slipper," "Ballads and Poems," "The Father Confessor," "The Woman Who Went to Hell," "The Song of Earl Roderick" and "Collected Poems." All her writings are said to be racy of the soil on which she was born, absolutely original and no mere imitative culture product.

Shrewsbury, DIOCESE OF (SALUPIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—759c), in England, suffragan of Birmingham. According to the census of 1921 there were 867,960 inhabitants in the diocese, of whom 67,591 were Catholics of English and Irish extraction. On 8 July, 1914, took place the opening of St. Edmund's Orphanage and Certified Poor Law School, named in honor of Bishop Edmund Knight, second bishop of the diocese. In August, 1920, the Faithful Companions of Jesus celebrated the centenary of their foundation at Upton Hall. Cardinals Bourne and Gasquet, many archbishops and bishops and heads of religious orders were present at the celebration. During the war 9 secular priests went to the front as chaplains, of whom 1 was killed. Numerous war memorials were erected in churches throughout the diocese. The diocese contains 46 parishes, 58 churches, 6 missions, 3 stations, 22 convents for women, 86 secular priests, 12 regulars. The educational institutions are: 12 high schools with 1305 pupils, 42 elementary schools with 11,678 pupils, 1 industrial school with 50 inmates. Of these 40 elementary schools, 1 industrial school and 1 orphanage are supported by the Government. There is one house of retreats in the diocese. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 2 homes, 1 orphanage and poor law school, 1 infant welfare centre. All the institutions admit the ministry of priests. Organizations among the clergy are: Shrewsbury Secular Clergy Fund, Diocesan Conferences. Among the laity: Catholic Young Men's Society, Catholic Women's League, Society of St. Vincent d. Paul, Catholic Needlework Guild and the Rescue Society.

Siam, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF SIAMENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—765), Asia, is governed by Mgr. René-Marie-Joseph Perros, b. at Guewenheim in Alsace, 12 March, 1870, entered the Seminary of the Paris Foreign Missions in 1888, ordained on 15 October, 1893, and sent to Siam in December following, appointed titular Bishop of Zoara and Vicar Apostolic on 17 September, 1909, being consecrated at Bangkok on 30 January, 1910. The diocesan statistics for 1921 record a native population of 5,200,000 (Siamese, Annamites, Chinese), with 26,600 Catholics; 20 missions; 60 churches and chapels; 25 Brothers of St. Gabriel; 51 Sisters of St. Paul of Chartes, Europeans; 96 native Sisters, Lovers of the Cross; 1 seminary with 69 seminarians; 3 boys' colleges, 51 teachers, 2060 students; 3 girls' colleges, 46 teachers, 820 students; 1 normal school, 3 professors, 28 students; 78 elementary schools, 116 teachers, 3961 pupils; incidentally it may be stated that it was the French missionaries in Siam who initiated the education of the native boys and girls; 5 houses for the aged; 2 hospitals; 2 infant asylums. There is an association of the past pupils of the Assumption College. The mission has a printing press for publishing religious books and its two Catholic reviews, "Echo de l'Assomption," a quarterly in English, French, and Siamese; and "Sarassat Christang," a Siamese monthly. As the missionaries in the vicariate are French religious activities were curtailed during the war, the Vicar Apostolic, 13 priests and 9 Brothers having been called to the colors; 2 priests and 1 Brother lost their lives; a priest and a Brother won the croix de guerre and several of their brethren were cited in the orders of the day.

Siberia (cf. C. E., XIII—767c), formerly a part of the Russian Empire, has an area of 4,831,882 square miles, divided as follows:

Province	Area	Population (1915)
Amur	154,795	261,500
Kamchatka	502,424	41,400
Irkutsk	280,429	821,800
Primorskaya	266,486	631,600
Sakhalin	14,668	34,000
Tobolsk	535,739	2,085,700
Tomsk	327,173	4,053,700
Transbaikal	238,308	971,700
Yakutsk	1,530,253	332,600
Yeniseisk	981,607	1,143,900

The Soviet government of Russia controls Siberia, as far east as Lake Baikal. The chief towns with their respective populations in 1913 are Irkutsk 129,700; Tomsk 116,664; Vladivostok 91,464; Krasnoyarsk 87,500; Chita 79,200; Blagoveshchensk 62,500; Novo-Nikolaevsk 62,967; Barnaul 61,330; Khabarovsk 51,300.

HISTORY.—Siberia formed a part of the Russian Empire until the Russian revolution of 1917, when chaos prevailed throughout the land. In 1919, Admiral Kolchak, whose remarkable military successes seemed to promise a unified Siberia under a stable government, established at Omsk the so-called All-Russia government. Upon the appearance of this government, the Allies and Associated Powers, inclined to consider it as a unifying force in Siberia, sent help to Kolchak. His administration however, succumbed to the Reds, who overran Siberia, captured Omsk in November and forced Kolchak to flee to Irkutsk on Lake Baikal, where he set up a new government. The United States government realized by this time the futility of trying to aid Siberia and withdrew her troops in March, 1920. The American evacuation was followed by the withdrawal of Japanese troops from Transbaikal and Amur Provinces. In June, 1920, Japan had completed the evacuation of these provinces and concentrated her troops some 20,000 in number, within a radius of 150 miles from Vladivostok. The fall of Kolchak was followed by a period of chaos. The three provinces of Eastern Siberia were divided into three governments: a government was set up at Verkhneudinsk for the Transbaikal province; another at Blagoveshchensk for the Amur Province and still another at Vladivostok for the Maritime Provinces, all dominated by Reds of the most radical type. In 1920 representatives from the three governments met and in September declared the union of the three states in the Far Eastern Republic of Siberia with its seat at Chita in Transbaikal Province. In January, 1921 the Provincial government held an election in order to organize a Constituent Assembly, which sat in Chita and adopted a constitution. On May, 1921, the Maritime Province, 266,000 square miles in area, detached from the republic and is controlled at present by a secessionist government set up in Vladivostok by a Moderate Social Democrat, S. D. Merkulov. A massacre of 700 Japanese, including the Japanese consul at Nikolaevsk in March, 1920, caused the Japanese government to insist that the Chita government should shoulder the responsibility for that incident and agree upon a plan for settlement before she removed her troops from Sakjali, which occupation was undertaken as a result of the massacre. The Siberian "misadventure" has already cost Japan about $400,000,000. With the presence of Japanese troops in the Vladivostok region, the Far Eastern Republic is powerless to overthrow the Merkulov government at Vladivostok, and thus gain control of the Maritime province which is Siberia's outlet to the sea. Another difficulty encountered by the Far Eastern Republic is the increasing control by the Chinese authorities of the Russian line called the Chinese Eastern Railway, linking Chita with Vladivostok. Since 1917, this railway has gradually passed into Chinese control. There is a possibility that the Chita government will finally merge with the Soviet government of Russia.

According to the constitution of the Far Eastern Republic, there is no functionary corresponding exactly to president in other republics. The Cabinet consists of Secretaries, for Foreign Affairs, Agriculture, Finance, Home Affairs, Communications, Education and Labor. Elected by the National Assembly, these eight Secretaries in turn elect from among themselves a chairman who presides at the Council of Secretaries and who is commonly referred to as President of the Far Eastern Republic (in foreign countries).

Sidgreaves, WALTER, astronomer, b. at Grimsbargh, Preston, England, on 4 October, 1837; d. at Stonyhurst College, 12 June, 1919. Entering the Society of Jesus in his eighteenth year, he was ordained in 1871. He taught at Beaumont College and the English College in Malta, but he is more closely associated with Stonyhurst, especially with its observatory, all the instrumental equipment of which was erected and adjusted by him. He was a pioneer in the study of terrestrial magnetism, having begun his observations in 1863; and as a result his observatory was one of the seven official meteorological stations in the British Isles. He assisted Fr. Perry, S. J., in his magnetic survey of France and in observing the transit of Venus in Kergueland Island (1874) and Madagascar (1882) on behalf of the British Government. Father Sidgreaves, who was elected a Fellow of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1891, and for years was a member of its Council, specialized in stellar spectroscopy, and his remarkable photos of the spectra, especially of the Novæ in 1892 and 1901 won for him a gold medal at the St. Louis Exposition in 1904, and a grand prix at the Franco-British Exposition in 1908.

Siemkiewicz, HENRYK, novelist, b. on 4 May, 1846, at Vola, Okrzejska, Siedlce, Poland; d. on 14 November, 1916. He made his studies at the University of Warsaw, was editor of the newspaper "Słowo" in 1869, and began his fiction work with the novel "Na Marne" (In Vain) in 1870. In 1876 he came to the United States and remained for some time in California, and he travelled also in Central Africa. Nearly all of his novels have been translated into English by Jeremiah Curtin. Besides his larger books, he published also a number of short stories which were fully up to the level of his other library products. Nearly all of them are inspired by the patriotic motive of sustaining his countrymen in their national sufferings and are said to have a deep significance for his Polish readers: His "Quo Vadis" is the first one that made him known to the English-speaking world. That, "Pan Michael," "With Fire and Sword," and "The Deluge" are rated by some as the most brilliant of his books. They have been frequently dramatized with great success. In 1905 he received the Nobel Prize of Literature.

Sigüenza, DIOCESE OF (SEGUNTINA; cf. C. E., XIII—728). in Spain. suffragan of Toledo, has an area of approximately 4188 square miles with a population of 155,000 practically all Catholics. The statistics for 1921 record 353 parishes with 471 churches, 384 secular and 20 regular priests, 2 Brothers, 2 religious houses for men, 12 convents with 232 Sisters (Franciscans, Conceptionists, Bernardines, Ursulines, Benedictines, Little Sisters of the Poor, Sisters of St. Anne, Sisters of Charity), 1 home, 4 hospitals, 1 seminary with 132 seminarians. The present incumbent of the see, Mgr. Eustaquio Nieto y Martin, was born at Zamora in the Diocese of Madrid-Alcala, on 12 March, 1866, ordained in 1891, appointed œconomus and later rector of the Concepcion Church in Madrid, named bishop of Sigüenza on 22 August, 1916, and consecrated on 27 December following, on the resignation of Mgr. Toribio Minguela y Arnedo (q. v.).

Simla, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SIMLENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—796), in India, established in 1910, is still governed by the Most Rev. A. E. J. Kenealy of the English Capuchins, who have charge of the mission. He was b. in Wales, 1864, entered the Franciscans 1879, was ordained 1887, taught philosophy 1888-89; first rector of the Franciscan College, Oxford; general depositor of his order 1908; consecrated 1910. The ecclesiastical boundaries are on the North Kashmir and Kafiristan, on the South Rajputana, on the East Agra, and on the West Lahore. In 1921 the diocesan statistics record the total population as about 5 millions (Hindus, Mahomedans, Punjabus, Ladakhus and a variety of mountain tribes), Catholics numbering 2361; 7 parishes; 11 churches; 1 mission; 20 stations; 12 Capuchin and 3 secular priests; 44 nuns; 1 women's training college, 5 teachers, 32 students; 3 girls' high schools, 40 teachers, 448 students; 2 elementary schools, 6 teachers, 100 pupils. All these schools receive a grant-in-aid from the Government. There are sodalities of the Children of Mary and the Franciscan tertiaries, and a Catholic Club at Simla. Among those who have died since 1912 may be mentioned Fr. Denis, O.S.F.C. (10 Dec., 1914), who fled from Rome when it was captured by the Piedmontese and devoted his remaining years to the missions; Fr. Amphian Plunket (10 Jan., 1915), born in the United States, who was a Christian Brother for years in India, and was later ordained. Among the notable events have been the establishment of the "Simla Times," a Catholic weekly, by Archbishop Kenealy; the opening of a missionary colony at Madonnapur in Sirsa; and the golden jubilee of St. Francis High School, Simla. Despite the small number of priests, Simla supplied three chaplains during the war. Fr. Stanislaus O'Brien, O.S.F.C., ranking as a major, saw service in France and on sea, was awarded several medals, and died after his return from service owing to the hardships he had endured for nearly seven years.

Simony (cf. C. E., XIV—1a), may be an offence against the Divine or merely against ecclesiastical law. The former is deliberate intention of buying or selling for a temporal price anything intrinsically spiritual—e.g., the sacraments or indulgences—or anything temporal annexed to something spiritual in such a way that the temporal cannot exist without the spiritual—e.g., an ecclesiastical benefice—or a spiritual thing which is even partially the object of the contract—e.g., the consecration in the sale of a consecrated chalice; the latter is the giving or exchanging of a temporal thing annexed to a spiritual for a similar thing, or a spiritual thing for another spiritual thing, or even a temporal thing for a temporal thing, if this is forbidden by the Church on account of the danger of irreverence towards something spiritual resulting therefrom. Under the Code in speaking of simony the words buy, sale, exchange, etc., are used in a wide sense, so as to include any agreement, even non-executed or tacit in which the simoniacal intention can be deduced from the circumstances, even if it has not been expressly manifested. There is no simony, however, when an offering is accepted or asked not as a price for, but on the occasion of spiritual ministrations, for the support of religion and its ministers, when this is done in accordance with the sacred canons or a recognized legitimate custom—e.g. offerings for Masses, marriages, baptism, etc. But as the Code says "in the administration of the sacraments the minister must not for any cause or on any occasion, ask for or exact directly or indirectly, anything beyond the offering fixed for the whole ecclesiastical province by the provincial council or at a meeting of the bishops of the province with the approval of the Holy See." If a priest, therefore, should demand more than the statutory or customary fee he would be guilty of at least disobedience and injustice and, according to some, even of simony.

A suspicion of heresy is incurred by anyone, not excepting a bishop, who knowingly administers or receives any sacrament simoniacally; in addition a cleric, but not a bishop, would incur suspension reserved to the Holy See. If simony is committed in the conferring of any ecclesiastical office, benefice, or dignity, it renders the collation null and void; this is the case if the beneficiary was not aware of the simoniacal act of the collator and a third party, unless the simony was committed against the positive wish of the beneficiary or without his knowledge but with the intent to defraud him; persons guilty of this form of simony incur excommunication simply reserved to the Holy See; they lose ipso facto and forever whatever right of election, presentation or nomination they may have had, and if they are clerics they are to be suspended. It is expressly laid down in the law that any deduction from the revenue or compensation or payment to be made to the collator, patron or other person, by the cleric at his induction is simoniacal. Those who traffic in indulgences incur excommunication reserved simply to the pope. The censure formerly affected those who trafficked in other spiritual favors as well; those who trade in Mass stipends are to be punished by the ordinary if necessary by suspension or privation of benefice or office, or in case of lay persons by excommunication—formerly the penalty was excommunication incurred ipso facto.

Sion, DIOCESE OF (SEDUNENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—15, 364), Switzerland, dependent directly on the Holy See, almost co-terminous with Le Valais. The present Bishop, Mgr. Victor Bieler, b. at Tchermen-Brigue, on 17 March, 1881, was ordained on 7 July, 1907, and after acting as chancellor and professor of canon law was appointed on 26 May, 1919, in succession to Mgr. Abbet, who had died on 12 July, 1918. The diocese has 133 parishes, of which 2 are in Vaud; in addition there are 4 parishes depending on the Abbot-Bishop of St. Maurice. There are 150 churches and chapels, 1 abbey (St. Maurice), 5 religious houses for men, 3 for women; 208 secular and 116 regular priests; 1 seminary with 15 seminarians; 3 cantonal colleges; 8 boys' secondary schools, 3 girls'; 18 schools of domestic science (girls); 2 agricultural schools; 3 cantonal normal schools; in 1914 there were in Le Valais 641 primary schools (448 French, 193 German), taught by 642 teachers (of whom 292 were women); 9 infants' schools, 3 homes for the old and poor (Souste, Sierre, Sion); 1 inebriates' home; 1 insane asylum; 1 deaf-mute institute; 6 hospitals—these are private but are organized and directed in a Catholic spirit; 2 free refuges for poor travelers (at the Simplon and the Great St. Bernard). All the public institutions allow the ministrations of priests. The insane asylum, 3 cantonal colleges and their annexes, and 3 normal schools, are entirely government-supported, while partial support is granted to all primary schools, domestic science schools, parish libraries and charitable institutes. Among the clergy is a clerical insurance society against ill-health, the Association of Priest Adorers, etc., while the laity have the "Association populaire des Catholiques suisses". There are no Catholic papers that are non-political. The population numbers 120,000, two-thirds French, one-third German. During the War, the inhabitants welcomed and aided the wounded, the interned, the refugees, and especially the children of the belligerent nations, without distinction; in addition the Catholic students assisted the poor students in Austria. The State and the Church are entirely separated. The cost of the higher and the public obligatory education is borne by the State of Valais and the communes; all the other institutions mentioned alone except the few specially noted were established and are administered privately but are aided also by the State.

Sioux City, DIOCESE OF (SIOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—18b), in Iowa, suffragan of Duquenne. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Edmund Heelan, h. at Elton, diocese of Limerick, 5 Feb., 1868, studied at Dublin, Ireland, ordained 24 June, 1890, elected titular bishop of Gerasa, 21 Dec., 1918, and made auxiliary bishop of Sioux City, consecrated 8 April, 1919. He was made Bishop of Sioux City at the Consistory of 8 March, 1920, succeeding Rt. Rev. Philip J. Garrigan, who died 14 Oct., 1919. The diocese has a Catholic population of 66,914, which includes small groups of Poles, Lithuanians, Italians and Bohemians. In 1922 the diocese contained 107 parishes, 37 missions, 144 churches, 130 secular priests, 12 regulars, 5 lay brothers, 500 Sisters and 27 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries in other dioceses. The educational institutions are: 1 college for men, 30 high schools with 60 teachers and 400 students (150 boys and 250 girls); 1 academy with 10 teachers and 30 girl students. A diocesan orphanage (St. Anthony's House) has lately been established in the diocese. There are also 5 hospitals. Societies among the clergy are the Eucharistic League; among the laity, Knights of Columbus, Ancient Order of Hibernians, etc. During the war, five priests served as chaplains in the army.

Sioux Falls, DIOCESE OF (SIOUXORMENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—16d), in South Dakota, suffragan of St. Paul. The Catholic population consists of 69,775 white inhabitants and 1067 Indians. In 1922 the diocese contained 114 parishes with churches and resident pastors, 83 mission churches, 144 secular priests, 12 regulars. In 1921 Bishop Thomas O'Gorman founded the new Columbus College at Sioux Falls, in charge of the priests of the diocese. The faculty consists of 12 priests and 3 lay professors; there are 187 students. The other educational institutions are 7 high schools, 1 normal school with 82 pupils; 32 elementary schools with 5842 pupils. There are five hospitals in the diocese. All state institutions admit the ministry of priests. Societies among the priests are: the Eucharistic League, Purgatorial Society; among the laity: Holy Name Society, League of the Sacred Heart, Holy Childhood Society. Ten priests of the diocese served with the American army in the World War, one of whom was killed. Rt. Rev. Thomas O'Gorman, the last bishop of Sioux Falls, died 19 Sept., 1921. His successor has not yet been appointed.

Sire, DOMINIQUE, Sulpician, h. at St. Jory in the Diocese of Toulouse on 12 March, 1827; died there on 11 December, 1917. He studied at St. Sulpice and after his ordination in 1851 taught in the seminary at Le Puy, and later at St. Sulpice. During the Paris Commune he acted as a delegate for the exchange of hostages. His great work was the compilation of translations of the Bull "Ineffabilis", by which the dogma of the Immaculate Conception was promulgated, in all the known languages and dialects. Only one copy in fifty folio volumes with hand-illustrations was made, and this is preserved in the Vatican.

Sobral, DIOCESE OF (SOBRALENSIS), in the State of Ceara, Brazil, suffragan of Fortaleza. It was erected 10 November, 1910, by separation from the diocese of Fortaleza of which it formed the eastern portion, with a population of 450,000. The first and present bishop is Rt. Rev. José Tupinamba da Frota, h. at Sobral in 1882; he studied at the South American College, Rome, was ordained in 1905, elected 24 January, 1916, and consecrated 30 June in the cathedral of Balna. No statistics are furnished.

Social Guild, CATHOLIC. See CATHOLIC SOCIAL GUILD

Society of the Blessed Sacrament. See BLESSED SACRAMENT, FATHERS OF THE Society of Jesus (cf. C. E., XIV—81a).—The World War proved to be a very severe test of the Society's vitality. No less than 2014 of its young and active men, some of whom were occupying responsible positions in churches, colleges and universities, were summoned to do service in the armies of the contending nations in France and elsewhere, not only as chaplains and stretcher-bearers, but as soldiers in the trenches or officers in the army and navy. As the entire Society had only 17,205 on its rolls at that time, many of whom were incapacitated for any kind of work by age or infirmity, the effect was most disastrous. In France alone 855 Jesuits were mobilized. Of these 165 died in the service. How many returned from camp, crippled or incurably ill, is not recorded. It is worth noting that the 855 French Jesuit army and navy men gained 1056 distinctions; nevertheless when the war was over they found much of the old anti-clerical spirit as pronounced as ever, with the prospect of a denial of a corporate existence for the Society in the country and no hope of recovering its expropriated churches and colleges.

The wholesale withdrawal of the educational staffs will explain the collegiate wrecks in France, Italy and Belgium. Even the buildings which had been converted into hospitals were uninhabitable for some time after the cessation of hostilities. In the missions the effects of the upheaval were also felt severely. Thus the French Jesuits had to leave their posts in Alexandria, Aleppo, Damascus, and elsewhere, for the Turks were on the German side in the fight. Even the great university of Beyrut closed its doors and in the Bombay district of India the English Government objected to the presence of the German Jesuits who had labored there for years. An attempt was made by their American brethren to fill their places, but the necessary permission was so long delayed by the Government, that the Americans went to the Philippines instead, while the already overworked Belgian Jesuits of Calcutta did their best to fill the gaps in Bombay.

During the war the colleges of Budapest and Kalocsa in Hungary suffered from the alternate victories and defeats of the Austrians and Russians, but their lot was still worse when after the war the Bolsheviks invaded and wrecked the houses, sent their inmates adrift or to jail, after ordering them to write down a declaration of their withdrawal from the Society. Poland also had a hard experience during the Russian and Ruthenian conflict.

At the beginning of hostilities it was thought prudent for the Father General and his Assistants, on account of their complex nationality, to withdraw from Rome for the time being. The General sought the seclusion of Zizers in Switzerland, but as the Jesuits are not allowed in this little country permission was granted only on condition of their living in strict privacy, and even that concession could not have been obtained had not the President of the Republic happened to be a Catholic. At the close of the war they returned to Rome.

The emergence of new nationalities in Europe as a result of the struggle, necessarily called for a readjustment of the racial and national units in the Society, independently of other reasons, such as the size of some of the provinces. These new provinces were variously grouped under the larger sections of the Italian, German, Spanish, French, English and American Assistancies. Of these Assistancies the Italian is numerically the weakest. In 1921 it had only 1415 members as against 4229 in the Spanish and 4359 in the German Assistancy. Not only did it gain nothing by this new arrangement, but it lost 149 who were transferred to the American division.

The Italian group includes the Roman, Neapolitan, Sicilian, Venetian and Turin Provinces. The Roman had its Gregorian University and Biblical Institute, but both were badly crippled during the war. Its novitiate also at Castel Gondolfo had only a very limited number of novices and juniors; there was no tertianship, and its theological students had dwindled to nineteen theologians. No philosophers appeared on the lists. The explanation of this wreck is given by the constantly recurring phrase in the catalogue militiam agit, "he is in the army." Even of the nineteen theologians nine are so labelled. All of the philosophers had been drafted. On the whole the Roman Province furnished 18 priests, 41 scholastics and 14 lay brothers to the combatants. Similar conditions prevailed in the Venetian section. Scholastics and novices were housed in the same building as well they might be, for 18 philosophers, 10 juniors, 2 novices and 6 lay brothers were under the colors. Turin had only 2 theologians, 7 philosophers, 6 juniors and 12 novices, all of whom lived in one house at Chieri. There were 12 priests, 30 scholastics and 12 lay brothers with the troops. Sicily had colleges at Messina, Catania and Malta but as 17 of its priests and 11 of its scholastics were in camp the colleges were in a moribund state. Finally, Naples had to furnish the army with 59 Jesuits, leaving in the scholasticate only 7 theologians and no philosophers, while its novitiate counted only 6 scholastics and 5 lay brothers. The entire membership of its province amounted to only 340.

Prior to the war the German Assistancy was composed of the Provinces of Austria, Belgium, Galicia, Germany and Holland. The enormous size of both Germany and Belgium, as well as the appearance of new nations, compelled another arrangement, so that the German Assistancy is now made up of the Provinces of Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, South Germany, North Germany, Hungary, Holland, Yugoslavia and Poland.

Austria has 3 colleges, a scholasticate, a novitiate, a professed house, and 6 residences with a membership of 359. Belgium has 13 colleges, 8 residences, 2 novitiates, a scholasticate, an apostolic school, 2 houses for retreats, and 1201 members. The bilingual difficulty which is at present an acute political issue prevents the division of Belgium into two or three provinces. The Province of Germany, however, has been cut in two: Lower and Upper Germany; the former with 2 colleges, a house of retreats, a house of writers, a novitiate, a scholasticate, and 12 residences; the latter with a college, a house of writers, a novitiate and 2 residences. The partition of the personnel is 649 for the lower and 634 for the upper section. As the German Jesuits are now allowed back in their country, from which they had been exiled ever since the time of the Kulturkampf, new changes must necessarily occur. Hungary, which was formerly part of Austria, has a novitiate, 2 residences, 1 college and 2 which are as yet incubate. The membership of the new province is 196. The vice-province of Czechoslovakia counts only 164 members, but has 4 colleges, a novitiate and 4 residences. The vice-province of Yugoslavia counts only 117 on its register. It has a novitiate, a seminary, 2 colleges and 2 residences. Holland comprises 4 colleges, a scholasticate, a house of retreats, a novitiate and 8 residences. The membership is 587. Finally Poland has a scholasticate, a novitiate and tertianship and 15 residences, and 464 members.

As Waldeck Rousseau's Association Laws of 1901-04 had robbed the Society of all its property in France we find a continual recurrence in all the catalogues of the words collegia dispersa, residencia dispersa, which means that some of the members of the extinct establishment are living here and there in rented houses, writing, preaching or teaching wherever the opportunity presents itself. Hence the Jesuit conscripts returning to civil life after winning great glory for their country have nowhere to go except to these restricted quarters, for they find that much of the old anti-clerical spirit is still in France and there is little if any hope of recovering the expropriated colleges and churches. Three of the French provincials are still living outside of France. The Province of France numbers 732 against 700 in Champagne. It has a college at Canterbury, which is likewise a juniorate. Its scholasticate is on the Isle of Jersey. Lyons also finds shelter for its scholastics at Hastings, England, but it has continued to have a tertianship at Paray-le-Monial and an Apostolic School at Thonon. Like the other two provinces Lyons is wrecked. Counting those at home and on the missions its members run up to 681.

Until recently the Spanish Assistancy consisted of the Provinces of Aragon, Castile, Toledo, the dispersed Province of Mexico and Portugal. A new province has now been added in the mother country, which is known as Leon, which has 521 members, besides another in Spanish America called the Argentine-Chile Province, already with 396 members. Even Mexico has 327, and has found entrance into Chihuahua, Guatemala, Nicaragua and San Salvador. Argentine-Chile has a novitiate besides 3 seminaries, 5 colleges with a sixth just beginning, and five residences. Since the revolution the Portuguese province has ceased to exist in Europe.

The English Assistancy has undergone no change, but in the American, New England has been severed from the Maryland-New York Province and is in process of adjustment. The Provinces of California and New Orleans have also been established.

Substantially all the provinces have foreign missions, in Europe, Asia, Africa and America. They are in Alaska, Central and Southern Africa, Ceylon, China, Japan, India, Egypt, Syria, Turkey and elsewhere, among Moslems and pagans, semi-civilized, or utter barbarians and degraded savages. One of the most interesting of them all is perhaps that of the lepers, four or five thousand of whom are being cared for by 20 Jesuits in India, Madagascar, the Philippines, Java, Ceylon, Colombia, Ecuador, the Lesser Antilles, Jamaica and even in Spain.

In 1921, the Society had 17,540 members, of whom 8586 are priests, 4957 scholastics, and 3997 lay brothers. It is divided into 31 provinces grouped into 6 assistancies. The Superior General is the Very Reverend Father Wladimir Ledochowski.

Socorro, DIOCESE OF (DE SUCCURSU; cf. C. E., XIV—118c), in Colombia, suffragan of Bogota. Mgr. Antonio Vicente Arenas, b. at Zapatoca in 1862, was vicar general when he was elected at the consistory of 28 May, 1914, in succession to Bishop Toro, transferred to Santa Marta and now bishop of Antioquia (q.v.). The diocese has 230,000 inhabitants, 50 parishes, 2 congregations of men and 3 of women. A diocesan seminary was established in 1919.

Sofia and Philippopolis, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF.—The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. Vincent Pejov, O. M. Cap., who succeeded as vicar Robert Menini (d. 14 Oct., 1916), titular Archbishop of Gangra, whose administration of the vicariate was one of prudence and wisdom and resulted in the founding of many Catholic works. The Balkan war of 1912–13, which involved the vicariate, was followed shortly by the World War of 1914–18, in which 3 priests served as chaplains. The Catholic population of 19,000 is largely Bulgarian, formerly followers of the Paulician sect, but converted to Catholicism by the Franciscan Fathers. In the cities of the vicariate, especially Sofia, the Catholic population is partly foreign. There are 20 secular and 37 regular priests and 18 lay brothers; 13 parishes and 29 churches; 2 convents for men and 7 for women; 2 colleges for boys with 30 teachers and 800 students, and 3 for girls with 34 teachers and 900 students; 2 elementary schools with 8 teachers and 300 students; 2 asylums; 2 hospitals, and 4 religious associations among the laity. The government does not contribute to the support of the Catholic institutions.

Soissons, DIOCESE OF (SUSSIONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—130c), in France, suffragan of Reims. In 1920 occurred the death of the Rt. Rev. Pierre-Louis Péchenard, who had administered the diocese since 1907. He reorganized the diocese after the law of Separation had become effective and was active in restoring the churches which had been destroyed during the war. His successor is the Rt. Rev. Henri-Joseph Binet, b. at Juvigny 8 April, 1869, ordained at Soissons 22 Oct., 1893. He joined the army and was decorated with the Legion of Honor, was vicar general and archdeacon of Laon, elected 16 June, 1920, took possession of the see 31 July, consecrated 24 August and published 16 Dec. following. During the war three-quarters of the diocese was laid waste by the fierce battles which raged on the Aisne front and the continuous fighting which lasted from May to November, 1918. More than 200 churches were completely demolished and 300 were badly damaged. In many places Mass was celebrated in the chapels of the barracks. Eighty of the clergy were cited in orders of the day, the present bishop and four priests were decorated with the Legion of Honor and several others received the military medal. Immediately after the armistice the priests returned to the devastated regions and courageously began the work of restoration. In nearly all the districts the Union Sacré continued; the clergy were invited to bless the flags of the former combatants and the monuments which were erected to the dead soldiers. The following persons of note have died since 1912: M. Hurier de Crécy-sur-Serre, an ardent champion of Catholicism; Mme. Hugues de St. Quentin, who was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. With great devotion and zeal she helped to restore the homes of the devastated region of St. Quentin. She died in 1921. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains 578 parishes, 869 churches, 8 convents for women, 488 secular priests, 1200 Sisters, 2 seminaries and 95 seminarians. Schools existing in the diocese are: 14 high schools, 130 teachers (550 boys, 1000 girls), 35 elementary schools; 100 teachers (1600 pupils). The schools are not supported by the Government. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 2 homes, 4 asylums, 2 hospitals, 1 settlement house, 10 nurseries. One Catholic paper is published in the diocese. The following organizations exist among the clergy: Mutual Aid Society, Relief Fund. Among the laity: 6 Conferences of St. Vincent de Paul, 1 Mutual Aid Association, 30 societies for young men and women, 4000 branches of the Patriotic League of France.

Solicitation, (cf. C. E., XIV—134d).—Any confessor found guilty of the crime of solicitation is to be suspended from saying Mass and hearing sacramental confessions, and may even be declared unable to exercise again the function of confessor because of the gravity of his offence; he is to be deprived of all benefices, dignities and the right of active or passive voice and to be declared incapable of again acquiring these privileges; in a very grave case he might also be canonically degraded. If anyone personally or through another lays a false accusation of the crime of solicitation against a confessor before his superiors he incurs ipso facto excommunication specially reserved to the Holy See, from which he cannot be absolved in any case unless he has formally retracted his calumny and repaired the wrong he has done as far as possible, and has been given a severe long penance. False accusation is a sin reserved to the Holy See on its own account, the only instance in canon law of such a reservation; for in any other case when a crime is punished by a censure reserved to the pope the sin is reserved only in virtue of the censure. SLATER in Ecc. Rev., LIX (Philadelphia, 1918), 458–63; GEARIN, ibid., LX, 61–9.

Solimões Alto, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (SOLIMÕES SUPERIORIS; cf. C. E., XIV—135), in Brazil, is bounded by the Vicariate of Llanos de San Martín, and the prefectures of Rio Negro, Tefé, Ucayali, and São Leon des Amazonas. It is confided to the Capuchins of the Seraphic Province (Italy), and is divided into 4 large parishes, São Paulo de Olivença, Remate de Males, Tonantins, and Urutuba, which are intersected by numerous rivers and are peopled by a civilized and an uncivilized populace.

Since 1910 the mission has lost 3 of its zealous workers: Frei Jucunds of Soliera, Frei Agatangelo of Spoleto and Frei Julio of Nova, whose deaths at the early ages of 42, 27, and 25 respectively were due to the hardships of such an undeveloped mission and the severity of the climate. The Fathers are supported entirely by alms from Propaganda and different societies in Europe. The mission statistics for 1922 record: 20,000 Catholics; 4 parishes; 2 churches and 12 chapels; 6 Capuchin Fathers and 1 lay brother; 2 Catholic associations or circles; 1 high school with 20 pupils; 2 primary schools with 30 pupils. The government does not contribute to the support of these schools. The first and present prefect apostolic is Frei Evangelist, b. at Cefalonia, Italy, on 5 May 1882, entered the Capuchins in 1898, and was made superior of the mission and prefect apostolic in September, 1910. He resides at Tonantins.

Solomon Islands, NORTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM SALOMONICARUM; cf. C. E., XIV—138a), comprises (1) the islands of Choiseul and Shortland in the British Protectorate, the island of Isabel being since 1912 included in the Vicariate Apostolic of the Southern Solomon Islands; (2) the late German islands of Bougainville, Buka and other small islands presumably under the Australian administration and included politically in the New Guinea territory. The first prefect apostolic, Mgr. Joseph Forestier, appointed in 1898, died 3 May, 1918, after a humble hidden life of suffering and sacrifices, in realization of his motto, "Good makes no noise, noise does no good." He had spent eighteen years in the Solomon Islands, having previously labored in Samoa for fifteen. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Maurice Boch, S. M., elected 18 May, 1920, who makes his residence at Poporag on Shortland. Malaria, black-water fever and dysentery are prevalent in these islands and all the missionaries who came to establish the mission in 1898 have been carried off by disease. The sanitary conditions are now improving owing to the clearing of land and drainage of swamps. The missionaries' chief difficulty is the learning of native languages and dialects, which are numerous and difficult.

The native Catholic population in 1922 is 3024, but there are only eight Catholics among the white population, which consists chiefly of government officials and plantation overseers. There are 2 churches, 8 districts, 11 stations, 14 regular priests (Marists), 8 Sisters, 2 lay brothers, 3000 catechumens, 6 training schools for catechists, with 80 students, 16 elementary schools with 809 pupils taught by 9 priests and 7 Sisters, 1 industrial school with 20 pupils, 8 orphanages in connection with the Sisters' schools, 9 dispensaries. Among the clergy the Apostleship of Prayer, the Association of Priests Adorers, the League of Priestly Holiness, and the St. Joseph Association for the Agonizing have been organized, and among the laity the Apostleship of Prayer and the Confraternity of Mount Carmel.

On 30 December, 1914, occurred the death of Rev. Joseph Bertet, S. M., a victim of his zeal in evangelizing Choiseul. He was only 29 and had been only two years on the mission. Rev. Charles Flaus, S. M., d. 29 December, 1920, at Rockhampton, Queensland, of disease contracted during his 10 years of apostolate. He had been one of the founders of this mission, to which he came from Fiji, where he had spent seven years and was sent to Germany to found a house of missionaries at Meppen in Hanover. After five years he returned to the Solomon Islands in 1905, to resume his labors, but his strength failed and he had to go to Australia where he continued his work for souls.

On 10 December, 1914, an Australian fleet arrived at Rieka to take possession of Bougainville, an island attached by Germany to its former colony of the Bismarek archipelago. The boundary which cut this prefecture in two remains. From being Anglo-German it has become Anglo-Australian, politics not having taken into account the real geographical situation or the new boundary which it makes necessary.

Solomon Islands, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., XIV—138b).—By a decree of Rome, dated 1 June, 1912, the Prefecture Apostolic of the Southern Solomon Islands was erected as a Vicariate Apostolic with new boundaries including, Ysabel, New Georgia, Guadalcanar, Florida, Malaita, San Christoval, Santa Cruz and adjacent islands. A brief dated 2 June, 1912, appointed Rev. J. M. E. Bertreux, S. M., Vicar Apostolic of the new Vicariate and titular Bishop of Musti. He was consecrated at Nantes, France, 28 Oct., 1912. Bishop Bertreux died at Rua Sura 4 Jan., 1919. His successor is the Rt. Rev. Louis Marie Rancas of the Marist Congregation and titular Bishop of Telepte. He was b. at Verrons-Arvey, 1 Feb., 1879, professed 15 June, 1902, left for the Solomon Islands 6 Sept., 1903, elected bishop 13 July, 1920; named Vicar Apostolic of the Southern Solomon Islands, 15 July, 1920, consecrated at Sydney 27 Dec., 1920, and published 16 Dec., following. In spite of the death of several priests and Sisters of the mission, victims of the unhealthy climate of these islands, much progress has been made in evangelizing the natives, especially those of the islands of Guadalcanar, San Christoval and Malaita. At the end of the year 1921 the mission comprised: 12 Marist Fathers, 3 lay brothers, 12 nuns of the Third Order of Mary, 8 churches, 109 chapels, 8 schools for boys (410 pupils) 5 schools for girls (276 pupils). The Catholics number 3866, neophytes 2275.

Solsona, DIOCESE OF (CELSONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—138), in Lerida, Spain, suffragan of Tarragona, is governed by Mgr. Valentin Comellas y Santamana as Apostolic Administrator. Mgr. Comellas, who succeeded Bishop Benlloch y Vidal (raised to the cardinalate 7 March, 1921), on 18 December, 1919, was b. at Caserras, in the Diocese of Solsona on 5 June, 1861. The diocesan statistics for 1921 record 150 parishes; 480 churches, chapels and oratories; 1 seminary with 98 seminarians; 1 home for the aged; 10 hospitals; 12 parish magazines, 1 official ecclesiastical bulletin, 8 Catholic weeklies. Only the Government schools receive State aid, but they are entirely Catholic, as are the inhabitants. The following are the religious institutes not already mentioned in C. E., loc. cit.: men, Franciscans (Berga); Brothers of the Christian Schools (Berga and Molterusu); Dominicans (Apostolic School, Solsona); Capuchins (Tarrega); women, Pious Institute of Charity; Sisters of the Blessed Virgin; Josephines (Cardoza); Franciscan Tertiaries of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary (Villanova; Miralcamp); Servants of the Passion (Polla de Lillet); in all 46 religious houses, with 438 religious, of whom 198 are Sisters.

Sonda Islands, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM SUNDÆ MINORUM), in Oceania, was erected 16 September, 1913, and entrusted to the Fathers of the Divine Word. Rev. Peter Noyen of that congregation is the first prefect. The statistics for 1920 report 45,700 Catholics, served by 24 Fathers of the Divine Word, 15 lay brothers, 4 Jesuit Fathers, 6 lay brothers, 17 Franciscan Sisters from Heijthuisen, Holland, 6 Sisters Servants of the Holy Ghost from Uden, 64 Catholic schools with 5978 boys and 4303 girls. The residence is at Lavantoecka, island of Florès.

Sonora, DIOCESE OF (DE SONORA; cf. C. E. XIV—145), in Mexico, suffragan of Durango, is governed by Mgr. Juan Navarette, b. in Oaxaca on 12 August, 1886; graduated doctor of theology, philosophy, canon and civil law at Rome; driven into exile during the Revolution; appointed to the see on 13 January, 1919, and consecrated at Aguascalientes on 8 June following. He succeeded Mgr. Valdespino y Diaz, who was transferred to Aguascalientes on 10 January, 1913. As one might naturally construe from the lengthy episcopal vacancy, the diocese suffered very severely during the Mexican Civil wars, and from the activity of the sectaries. The population, however, is practically all Catholic and besides Spanish Mexicans, includes creoles, mestizos and Indians. The latest diocesan statistics report 28 parishes, 85 churches or chapels, 19 secular priests, 5 seminarians, 25 Sisters, 1 boys' college, 5 girls' colleges with 25 teachers and 500 students. There is a Catholic propaganda sheet with a circulation of 30,000.

Sorrento, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SURRENTINENSIS; cf. C. E. XIV—151b), in the province of Naples, Southern Italy. Most Rev. Giuseppe Giustiniani, who had succeeded to the see in 1886, died 6 July, 1917, and was succeeded by the present incumbent Most Rev. Paolo Iacuzio, b. at Forino, 1862, elected bishop of Capaccio in 1900, promoted 9 July, 1917. From January to April, 1918, he was apostolic administrator of Capaccio and was appointed to the same office for Castellamare di Stabia 23 January, 1920. The statistics for 1920 give a Catholic population of 55,900 divided into 36 parishes and served by 266 secular and 34 regular priests. There are 16 seminarians, 197 Sisters, 235 churches and chapels. On 10 December, 1914, the church of St. Michael at Piano was made a minor basilica.

Sorrowful Mother, SISTERS OF THE, a community with mother-house in Rome, founded in 1883, by Mother Mary Frances Streitel who was also the first mother general. In 1889 the Sisters came to America where they devoted their lives to the education of children and the care of the sick. The American novitiate is at Marshfield, Wis., where ample means are provided to prepare the Sisters for their profession as teachers and nurses. The congregation numbers 300 Sisters, 6 novices, and 6 postulants. They are represented in the Archdiocese of Santa Fé and the Dioceses of Green Bay, La Crosse, Newark, Oklahoma City, Superior, Wichita, and Winona. They have charge of the following institutions: 1 sanitarium; 10 hospitals; 1 orphanage, and 5 schools. Their rules have been approved by the Holy See.

South Carolina (cf. C. E., XIV—157b).—The area of the State is 30,989 square miles. In 1920 the population was 1,683,724, an increase of 11.1% since 1910. Of this, 17.5 was urban; 82.5 was rural. The average number of persons to the square mile is 55.2 as against 49.7 in 1910. Since 1910 three new counties have been organized from parts of six others. South Carolina has 15 cities of which Charleston, with a population of 67,957, is the largest. The others include: Columbia, 37,524; Spartanburg, 22,638; Greenville, 23,127. The negro population exceeds the white population, the whites numbering 818,538; the negroes 864,719, but the percentage of negroes is decreasing, 55.2% in 1910, 51.4% in 1920. Allendale (77.6%), Beaufort (78.4%), Fairfield (76.1%), Counties have the greatest percentage of negroes. Of the population ten years and over 220,667 (18.1%) were illiterate. Among the native whites, the illiterates numbered 38,639; among the foreign-born whites 391; among the negroes, 181,422. The illiterate white males of voting age numbered 17,385; the illiterate white females, 15,988; the illiterate male negroes, 69,185; female negroes, 76,842.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—According to the census of manufactures taken in 1919, there are 2004 establishments, with an average of 79,400 wage earners, a capital of $374,538,000, products worth $381,454,000.

Agriculture is more than holding its own in the State, the number of farms in 1920 being 192,693, an increase of 9.2% since 1910. The value of all farm property was $953,064, of live stock, $91,518; of all crops, $437,121,837. The chief crops were oats, 3,597,835 bushels, valued at $4,317,400; corn, 27,472,013 bushels, $54,944,026; wheat, 630,911 bushels, $1,634,062; rye, 50,342 bushels, $143,477. More than one fourth of the land is devoted to cotton, South Carolina being the third State in the production of cotton, producing 1,476,645 bales, valued at $259,889,520. Tobacco is also extensively grown, 71,193,072 pounds, worth $23,493,714 in 1919.

In 1919 there were 75 national banks with a capital of $96,757,000; 342 state banks with a capital of $14,820,000, and 28 savings banks with a capital of $9,697,647. On 1 January, 1920, the State debt amounted to $5,382,059; the assessed value of real property $207,829,170; of personal property $152,670,741. The railroad mileage is 3824. Recent improvements to the Savannah River have made it navigable for over 200 miles from Savannah to Augusta, Ga. Charleston, with its fine harbor, is a great commercial port, its imports in 1919, being $2,618,869, exports, $21,407,596.

EDUCATION.—Private and parochial schools must give their instruction in the English language. There shall be exempt from taxation all schools, colleges, and institutions of learning, except where the profits are applied to private uses; provided, that as to real estate, the exemption shall not extend beyond the buildings and premises actually occupied. Private schools shall report to county superintendent relative to enrollment, attendance, teachers, grade, and amount of work. Persons in charge of private educational institutions shall make such statistical reports to state superintendent as he may require. Private school to be lawfully attended by children of compulsory school age must be approved by the State Board. Among the laws passed in 1920 was an act encouraging teaching of agriculture, industry, and domestic science in the public schools. A State Board of correctional administration was established in 1918 and under its control were placed the South Carolina Industrial School and the State Reformatory for Negro Boys and the new State Industrial School for Girls. In the same year a State Training School for the Feeble-Minded was opened. In 1919 an equalization fund for needy schools was provided by the state, guaranteeing a minimum school term of 7 months in any school district voting an 8 mill tax. Provision was made for improvement of school conditions in industrial centres. School attendance is compulsory for children between the ages of eight and fourteen, for four months in the year, or during the school term, if it is shorter than four months. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded.

In 1920 there were in the State 2332 schools for white children employing 753 men teachers, and 5646 women and teaching 226,065 whites, with an average attendance of 153,511. For negro children, there are 2502 public schools employing 670 men and 2630 women, teaching 251,980 pupils with an average attendance of 177,940. The total revenue of both white and negro schools was $7,659,536.10 out of which was expended $5,894,917.43 for whites and $765,481.75 for negroes. The State per capita expenditure in 1920 was $26.08 for whites, $3.04 for negroes, $13.94 average for both races. There are 26 institutions of higher learning for whites and 10 for negroes. Of the 26 institutions for whites, 8 are non-sectarian and receive a total state support of $1,067,935.71; 7 are Presbyterian; 5 are Baptist; 3 are Methodist, and 3 are Lutheran. The University of South Carolina has 47 officers and faculty, 579 students, and a total income of $240,184.37; Clemson Agricultural College has 170 officers and teachers, 1014 students, and an income of $388,422.57; The Winthrop Normal and Industrial College has 127 officers and an income of $680,798.49.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—During the governorship of Coleman L. Blease (1911–15) several conflicts took place between the executive and the judiciary and legislature. Governor Blease clashed with the State Supreme Court over judicial appointments, refusing to commission any appointees except his personal friends. He exercised his veto to an extraordinary degree, vetoing more bills in his term of office than his predecessors had in twenty years. He pardoned so many convicts that the prison population was depleted. He was nevertheless re-elected in 1912 and the following year revoked the commissions of notaries public, state constables and officers in the State. On 11 January, 1915, he disbanded the organized militia of the State and resigned the following day. His successor revoked the order of disbandment. Marriage licences were required by law in 1911, and regulations made for their insurance. In 1912 electrocution was provided as a means of capital punishment. South Carolina voted for prohibition in 1915; in 1920 free tuition in the State institutions was given to ex-soldiers.

During the European War South Carolina contributed 53,482 soldiers or 1.42% of the United States Army. The South Carolina members of the National Guard joined the 30th Division at Camp Sevier, South Carolina, and those of the National Army, the 81st Division at Camp Jackson, South Carolina. The summary of casualties among the South Carolina members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 50 officers, 1088 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 14 men; wounded, 162 officers, 2603 men.

South Dakota (cf. C. E., XIV—160d).—The area of the State is 77,615 square miles. In 1920 the population was 636,547, an increase of 9 per cent since 1910. Of this, 16% was urban; 84% was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 8.3 as against 7.6 in 1910 and 5.2 in 1900. South Dakota has 68 counties, 4 of which are unorganized. Since 1910 four new counties have been organized from 3 unorganized counties and parts of 2 organized counties. The largest cities are:

Sioux Falls, 25,202; Aberdeen, 14,537; Watertown, 9400. There are five Indian reservations, two of which comprise the 4 unorganized counties of the State. The native whites of native parentage number 308,598; of foreign parentage, 141,341; of mixed parentage 86,817. The foreign born (82,391) came chiefly from Norway (16,813), Russia (11,193), Germany (15,674), Sweden (8573). There are also 16,384 Indians. Among the population ten years of age and over (482,195), there are 8109 illiterates.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—The output of the farms of the state for 1919 is as follows: corn 91,200,000 bushels, worth $108,528,000; wheat 30,175,000 bushels, worth $72,420,000; oats 53,650,000 bushels, worth $33,800,000; barley 19,250,000 bushels, worth $22,138,000; rye 6,500,000 bushels, worth $8,125,000; flaxseed 1,160,000 bushels, worth $4,930,000; potatoes 4,450,000 bushels, worth $8,550,000; hay 1,158,000 tons, worth $21,033,000.

The number of farms is 74,637 (34,636,491 acres), of which 1198 are irrigated. Agricultural products shipped out of the state in 1918 returned $270,536,000. In 1917 the State produced gold to the value of $7,364,233; lime, cement, and other minerals, also stone, $973,443; mica, $11,008; in 1919 the value of the gold produced fell to $5,267,600.

The latest census of manufactures gives the following summary: establishments, 1414; persons engaged, 9034; capital, $30,933,630; salaries and wages, $9,981,625; cost of materials, $42,985,870; value of products, $62,170,582. The principal industries ranked by the value of their products are: butter-making, flour and grist mill products, bread and other bakery products, printing, publishing, newspapers and periodicals. The products of the creameries were valued at $10,806,000; of the flour mills, $3,873,000.

The Constitution limits the bonded debt of the State to $100,000 over and above the debt of the territory of Dakota assumed by the State at its foundation. The State at present has no bonded debt. The assessed value of real and personal property in 1919 was $1,846,456,090; of moneys and credits, $110,876,049; of corporate property, $137,802,039. The railroad mileage is 4278.

EDUCATION.—The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: All private school instruction and all private instruction accepted in lieu of public school instruction shall first be approved by the county superintendent who shall exercise supervision over such schools and such instruction and shall exercise the right of visitation and inspection thereof and may revoke his approval of such instruction at any time. Instruction shall be given in all common schools of the State, both public and private, in the English language only. Religion shall be taught in English. No person shall be permitted to teach in a private school any of the branches to be taught in the public schools unless such person shall hold a certificate entitling him to teach the same branches in the public schools of the state. All teachers in public and private schools must take oath of allegiance. No public appropriation to aid any sectarian school shall ever be made (VIII—16). Branches to be taught in public and private schools are: reading, writing, orthography, arithmetic, primary language and English grammar, United States and South Dakota history, physiology and hygiene, civil government and drawing. Patriotic instruction shall be given one hour each week. School attendance is compulsory for all children between the ages of 8 and 16 for the entire school term up to the 8th grade. After a child reaches the sixth grade, the period of attendance may be reduced to 16 continuous weeks. A child welfare commission was established in 1919. Free tuition is given to war veterans in all state institutions. The population of school age numbers 211,870, of whom 144,441 (68.2%) are attending school.

About one-third of the school lands has been sold for the sum of $17,000,000 which returns an annual revenue of interest and rentals of over a million dollars. The expenditure for school purposes in 1920 was $11,620,117. Elementary and secondary education is free to all from 6 to 21 years of age. Between the ages of 8 and 16 it is compulsory on all not otherwise taught. In the 4749 elementary schools in 1920 there were 78,746 pupils and 4873 teachers; 421 secondary schools with 1018 teachers and 12,694 pupils. The government maintains three Indian schools in the State at Flandreau, Rapid City, and Pierre. There are four normal schools, a school of mines, an agricultural college, and a university (60 instructors and 961 students). The agricultural college has 67 on its faculty and 1096 students (1918).

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1911 the distribution of lands of the Sioux Indian Reservation was begun at Gregory. There were 4000 homesteads and 50,000 applicants. Provision was made for indeterminate sentence for criminals, the length of the sentence being determined by the Warden and Board of Charities and Corrections. In 1912 the new Richards Primary Law was adopted, so as to do away with party elections. In 1916 State-wide prohibition was adopted. In 1917 the office of State Sheriff was created, the city manager plan of governing cities approved, a Workmen's Compensation Act adopted, and a school survey provided for. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 4 December, 1919; the Prohibition Amendment on 20 March, 1918. In 1917 the South Dakota National Guard was called into Federal Service and entrained at Camp Greene, Charlotte, North Carolina. According to the figures prepared by General W. A. Morris, South Dakota's contribution of men was as follows: voluntary enlistments, 10,268; selective draft, 21,517; navy and marine, 1006. A total of 141,243 registered for the selective draft. South Dakota soldiers went over with the first contingents sent across and continued to go at intervals until November, 1918, but as they were brigaded with no reference to states it is impossible to follow units to any extent; the veteran Fourth South Dakota, however, was chiefly apportioned to the 146th, 147th, 148th Field Artillery, went to France in December, 1917, and January, 1918, and rendered valiant service. The summary of casualties of South Dakota men in the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 13 officers, 541 men; prisoners, 16 men; wounded, 43 officers, 1254 men.

Southwark, DIOCESE OF (SOUTHWARCENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—162d), suffragan of Westminster, England. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Peter Emmanuel Amigo, who has administered the diocese since 1904. The following clergymen and distinguished laymen have died since 1921: Canon Thomas Scannell, joint author with Dr. Wilhelm of a manual of Catholic Theology (Wilhelm and Scannell). He revised the "Catholic Dictionary" and prepared the new edition (1918); Canon Halloran, who for sixty years was attached to the mission of Our Lady Star of the Sea, at Greenwich, London, S. E.; the Duke of Norfolk, well known for his munificent generosity to the Church and for his interest in and support of Catholicity. In 1918, twenty-four of the secular clergy of the diocese were serving as chaplains in the army and navy. Rt. Rev. Anthony Alphonse De Wachter, auxiliary to Cardinal Mercier, was charged with the spiritual interests of the Belgian war refugees. He resided at the bishop's house during the four and a half years of his stay in England, the episcopal residence being placed unreservedly at his disposal and made the headquarters for his work. As the diocese of Southwark was the nearest to the seat of war, many hospitals were opened there which were faithfully attended by the priests of the diocese. In 1921 the diocese contained 674 parishes, 158 churches, 150 private chapels, 70 stations, 37 religious houses for men, 142 for women, 280 secular priests, 257 regulars, 9 homes for lay brothers, 1 seminary with 100 seminarians. The following colleges and schools exist in the diocese: 17 colleges for men, 200 teachers; 64 colleges for women, 500 teachers; 2719 boys and 7059 girls attend the various high schools; 94 elementary schools, 22,757 pupils; 2 industrial schools, 14 teachers; 20 Poor Law Schools. Elementary schools as well as Poor Law, industrial and reformatory schools receive Government appropriations. Charitable institutions in the diocese are: 3 homes, 5 hospitals, 2 refuges, 3 settlement houses, all of which admit the ministry of priests. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers 160,000. The Catholic paper of the diocese is called the "Southwark Record." The following societies have been established for the priests: the Apostolic Union and the Priests' Eucharistic League. There are nine societies for the laity.

Sovana and Pitigliano, DIOCESE OF (SOANENSIS PITILIANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—165b), in the province of Grosseto, Central Italy, suffragan of Siena, with the residence at Pitigliano. Mgr. Riccardo Carlesi, b. at Prato in 1869, came to the see 8 July, 1916, in succession to Bishop Cardella, who governed it from 1896 and died 6 February, 1916. The Catholic population numbers 38,500. There are 48 parishes, and 78 churches and chapels served by 96 secular and 10 regular priests, 8 Brothers and 23 Sisters.

Soviet.—The word is derived from the Russian, meaning Council. In the modern sense it is used to describe a form of revolutionary organization and is more specifically applied to the organization of the Communist governments which were set up in different countries during the years following the World War. Thus Soviet Governments were formed in Russia, Hungary, Georgia, Armenia, and Ukraina. In Russian governmental law the word Soviet has been used in different ways since the first part of the nineteenth century. For instance: the supreme administrative power was vested in the Council of Ministers, acting under the authority of the emperor. On the other hand, the supreme legislative power in Russia was vested in the Imperial Council, together with the Imperial Duma, both houses acting under the authority of the emperor. The legislative authority of the Imperial Council corresponded to that of the Senate in the United States, the House of Lords in England, and the Senate in France. The specific meaning attached to the word Soviet had its origin in 1905 at the time of the first outbreak of the revolutionary movement in Russia, when the extremist leaders in Petrograd and other Russian cities induced the industrial workers and employees in different lines of trade to elect their representatives to the Central Council or Soviet, the institution of which was designed to control the revolutionary movement. Following out this program the workers in Petrograd, Moscow, and elsewhere elected their respective deputies, each factory sending its own delegates to the Soviet of this or the other city. The Soviets thus elected became the revolutionary centers in which the plans were worked out for the overthrow of the imperial Government, and through which they were actually put into operation.

In most instances the elections of the Soviets were merely staged and the representation of the factories consisted in self-styled agitators who had nothing in common with the shop-workers themselves. The first Petrograd Soviet of Workers' Deputies was controlled by Trotzky (Bronstein) and Parvus (Helfandt), both of whom were professional agitators and have never been manual workers themselves. The brief history of the first Petrograd Soviet was identified with different criminal outbreaks and the looting of public property (banks, the treasury, etc.). The first Moscow Soviet of Workers' Deputies was engaged in the organization of the armed uprising against the Government in 1905. During that stage the make-up of the Soviets was heterogeneous, for practically all revolutionary, radical and Communist factions were represented therein. With the defeat of the revolution of 1905, all Soviet organizations were dissolved by the Russian Government and many of their members were tried and imprisoned. In 1917, simultaneously with the outbreak of the March Revolution, Soviet organizations were hurriedly formed, first in Petrograd and Moscow, and later in other Russian cities. Although at that time the Soviets had no official standing, their influence upon governmental affairs became so great as to overshadow the significance of the officially recognized Provisional Government. Moreover, Kerensky who after the March Revolution became the head of the Provisional Government, was vice-chairman of the Petrograd Soviet of Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies. In 1917 the make-up of the Soviets was augmented by the representation of revolutionary army units and the poorer peasants. Thus, the recognized title of these revolutionary organizations was "Soviets of Workers', Soldiers' and Peasants' Deputies." During the first five months subsequent to the revolution the Soviets were composed of revolutionists belonging to the different extreme factions, such as the Bolsheviks, Mensheviks, Social Revolutionists and People's Socialists. Gradually, however, the influence of the Bolsheviks or Communists became dominant and by August, 1917, the Soviets practically everywhere fell under the complete control of the Communists. In the same proportion as the Soviet influence grew the Provisional Government was losing its prestige. Soviets became the controlling factor not only in the economic life but also in military affairs in Russia. Every regiment and army unit had a local Soviet of its own which took upon itself the interference with the orders of the regimental commanders and sometimes even of the supreme command. Conditions resulting therefrom were disastrous as the activities of the different army units became thoroughly disorganized and military operations became impossible.

During this phase of the history of the Soviets a new tendency was manifested, namely, plans were worked out for the centralization and coordination of the activities of the various local Soviets. To attain this end the latter were urged to elect their representatives, who were sent to the capital where they formed an All Russian Central Soviet, which in turn elected an executive committee in which the supreme administrative power was vested. With the overthrow of the Provisional Government the Soviets automatically seized the state control. The official "Constitution" of the Soviet system was adopted at the Fifth All Russian Congress of Soviets in July, 1918, according to which the "Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic" is governed by the All Russian Congress of Soviets, which in turn is composed of representatives of local, urban and provincial Soviets. The All Russian Congress of Soviets is convoked at least twice a year by the All Russian Central Executive Committee. In the intervals between the sessions of the All Russian Congresses of Soviets the supreme power is exercised by the All Russian Central Executive Committee. Paragraph 31 of the Soviet "Constitution" provides that "The All Russian Central Executive Committee is the supreme legislative, executive and controlling organ of the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic." The same Central Executive Committee forms a Council of People's Commissars for the purpose of the general management of the affairs of the Soviet Republic, and it also has authority to form different departments or People's Commissariats for the purpose of conducting the various branches of government. The Central Executive Committee considers and enacts all measures and proposals introduced by the Soviet of People's Commissars, or by the various departments issuing decrees and regulations of its own. At the same time the Council of People's Commissars has the right to issue its decrees, resolutions and orders, notifying the All Russian Central Executive Committee of all orders thus issued.

The Soviet or Council of People's Commissars is composed of seventeen Commissars: (a) Foreign Affairs; (b) Army; (c) Navy; (d) Interior; (e) Justice; (f) Labor; (g) Social Welfare; (h) Education; (i) Post and Telegraph; (j) National Affairs; (k) Finances; (l) Ways of Communication; (m) Agriculture; (n) Commerce and Industry; (o) National Supplies; (p) State Control; (q) Supreme Soviet of National Economy; (r) Public Health. The Soviet of People's Commissars is accountable to the All Russian Congress of Soviets and the All Russian Central Executive Committee. The organization of local Soviets comprises Soviet organizations of four categories: (a) Regional; (b) Provincial; (c) County; (d) Rural or Volost, the latter being the smallest administrative division of the Russian State. Each local Soviet elects an executive organ of its own, the membership of which in regional and provincial Soviets does not exceed twenty-five; in county Soviets, twenty; and in rural Soviets, ten. These Executive Committees are responsible to the Congress which elects them.

In addition, the Soviet "Constitution" provides for so-called "Soviets of Deputies." These are organized in the following way: In cities, one deputy is elected for each one thousand inhabitants. The total number of deputies is not less than fifty and not more than one thousand members. Other settlements, such as towns and villages, of less than ten thousand inhabitants, elect one deputy for each one hundred inhabitants, the total being not less than three and not more than fifty deputies. The term of the deputy is only for three months. The Soviets of Deputies, in turn, elect Executive Committees to deal with current affairs. These Committees are also accountable to the Soviets which elect them. This complicated and clumsy governmental system makes it impossible to administrate governmental affairs in a way that would be more or less efficient. Conflicting decrees are issued by the hundreds of different local Soviets. Moreover, even within the central state organization contradictory orders are given by the Soviet of People's Commissars, the All Russian Central Executive Committee and the All Russian Congress of Soviets—the three bodies acting in a large degree independently one from the other. The Commissars themselves have admitted on various occasions that such a system of government is bound to result in a complete paralysis of the governmental machine. Thus, Nevsky, formerly Commissar of Ways and Communications, and Rykoff, in charge of the Supreme Council of National Economy, as far back as 1920, addressing the All Russian Congress of Soviets, gave a complete account of the shortcomings of the Soviet system, picturing in the darkest colors the state of Russian economic life.

In spite, however, of these warnings, and the proven collapse of the whole governmental system, which is in a state of complete decay, no measures have been adopted to improve the situation. In various countries revolutionary movements have been accompanied by attempts to set up Soviets of rebellious Workers' and Soldiers' Deputies. The notorious Communist rule in Hungary (1918-19), under the dictatorship of Bela Cohen (Kuhn), assumed the shape of a Soviet administration. In the same way, in November, 1918, the mutinous sailors of the German fleet, after an uprising in Kiel, organized a Council or Soviet of Workmen, Soldiers and Sailors. This revolutionary outbreak was followed by a similar Soviet movement in Hamburg and other ports and German industrial districts. By the Fall of 1918, Soviets were established in nearly every center of importance in Germany, and their tactics became identified with the agitation for world revolution and the destruction of the capitalist régime in Germany itself. The German Soviet movement, similar to that in Russia, was dominated by the Bolshevik faction, which is known in Germany as the Spartacus group (q. v.). The Soviet system both in Russia and elsewhere expresses practically the program of proletarian dictatorship.

BORIS BRASOL.

Spain (cf. C. E., XIV—169b).—The kingdom has an area of 190,050 sq. m., but including the Balearic and the Canary Islands and the Spanish possessions in Africa, the total area is 194,783 sq. m. The census of 1910 gave 19,950,817 inhabitants, but the estimated population in 1919 was 20,738,844.

AGRICULTURE.—The soil of Spain is subdivided among a very large number of proprietors. In 1919, 3,300,965 acres were under vines and produced 7,914,252,192 pounds of grapes; in 1918, 3,852,910 acres under olives yielded 1,403,831 pounds. Silk culture is carried on in Valencia, Murcia, and other provinces. There are 26 cane sugar factories and 40 beet sugar factories in Spain. The production in 1917 totalled 80,034,580 kgs. The normal agricultural production in 1919 was: wheat, 70,352,992 bushels; barley, 35,623,758 bushels; rye, 11,835,142 bushels; maize, 12,882,452 bushels; oats, 9,555,392 bushels; total, 140,249,736 bushels. Oil, 255,202 tons; wine, 543,904,788 gallons.

FISHERIES.—In the Spanish fisheries the total number of boats employed in 1917 was about 15,293, of which 751 were steamers; fishermen, 86,287; the value of catch about 87,229,047 pesetas, representing a total weight of 135,607 tons. The most important catches are those of sardines, tunny fish, and cod. In Spain there are 677 factories, with 19,320 workmen for the preparation of sardines and fish-preserves.

RELIGION.—Religious liberty prevails in Spain, but the whole population except 30,000 adheres to the Catholic faith. The law of 1910 allows the public exercise of all creeds in Spain. In the year 1919 the religious orders in Spain numbered 807 communities of men and 3585 of women. The number of male religious was 9667; of female 37,849. Some of these religious communities have taken up sections of the most desolate and wild lands in Catalonia and the North, lands which have never been profitable or even cultivated, and erected monasteries there after the manner of the Middle Ages or of the energetic missionaries in the Far West.

EDUCATION.—The elaborate system of education created by the law of 1857 has not been rigidly enforced, but various improvements have been effected, especially by a law of 9 June, 1909, which made education obligatory. The country is divided into eleven educational districts with the universities as centres. There are seventeen government schools of commerce, and the national government maintains twenty-five manual training schools. There are also 26,103 public schools and 5669 private schools, with 2,604,308 pupils. Besides the 58 secondary institutions, or middle class schools, there are 253 annexed schools or colegios, preparatory to the cultural institutions. Educational conditions in Spain are improving. In 1917 the amount expended by the Government upon primary education was $6,894,235, an increase of 33 per cent since 1902; on secondary education, an increase of 48 per cent; on special schools of 161 per cent. The appropriation for university education in 1916 was twice that of 1902. By royal decree of 25 August, 1917, there was organized with the Ministry of Public Instruction a foundation for the study and encouragement of the education of deaf mutes, the blind and the mentally abnormal. The establishment of the Commission for the Enlargement of Studies and Scientific Investigations, La Junta para de Estudios e Investigaciones Científicas, composed of eminent educational and scientific experts, chosen with "due regard" to the diversity of intellectual and religious tendencies of Spain, is of doubtful value as the universities are really deprived of initiative and freedom. It supports Spanish students in foreign countries and encourages new types of educational institutes as well as scientific and sociological research.

CHARITY.—In 1919 there were sixty-three hospitals in the capitals of the country, Madrid has eight: Provincial, Princesa, Clínico de San Carlos, San Juan de Dios, Nino Jesus, V. O. T. de San Francisco, Jesus Nazareno, Nuestra Señora del Carmen. On 1 January, 1919, there were 2732 patients, and with 21,790 admitted during the year, the total number of patients included 12,604 men and 11,918 women. The five asylums of Madrid, including the Hospicio de Madrid, Asilo de Nuestra Señora de la Paloma, Asilo de Vallehermoso, de Santa Cristina, and de Nuestra Señora de Las Mercedes, sheltered in 1919 a total of 5059 people. There are sixty emergency hospitals in the country. The number of insane people (2185) added in 1919 to those already present in the asylums of the capitals brought the total up to 9187. The number of leprosy cases treated in 1914 was 874 and in 1920, 1039, an increase of 165.

Special mention should be made of the work of the Society of Saint Vincent de Paul in Spain. Owing to the incomplete data given for the year 1919 the figures published are those for 1918. In that year 621 conferences and meetings were held; 10,549 families were visited; 1212 marriages regulated; 444 children legitimized; 5202 children and 2487 adults were instructed; personal taxes, 23,332 pesetas; funds: income, 1,105,055 pesetas; expenditure, 1,039,543 pesetas. In all, the number of benevolent institutions were 11,274; their funds amounted to 548,811,447 pesetas, the average fund of each institution 48,679 pesetas; their total revenues, 15,995,619 pesetas, the average income of each foundation, 1418 pesetas; average fund for each inhabitant, 26.49 pesetas.

DEFENCE.—Military service in Spain is compulsory. The total term of service is for 18 years, divided into the following: 1 year recruits in deposit; 3 years active army (first standing); 5 years active army (second standing); 6 years reserve; and 3 years territorial reserve (not yet organized). In 1916 a central general staff of the army was appointed. The country is divided up into eight territorial districts, each under a Captain-General. The peace establishment for 1920 was fixed at 216,649 men of all ranks (64,355 in Morocco), and the total strength of the field army would probably be about 300,000 combatants. The army is organized in 16 divisions, each of 2 brigades and 1 of artillery. There are also the Guardia Civil and the Carabineros, the former a constabulary, the latter a military police used as customs guard on the frontier, both recruited from the army and under military discipline. Outside the Spanish peninsula there are the three military commands of Melilla, Ceuta and Larache in Morocco, also the Balearic Islands and the Canary Islands.

GOVERNMENT.—The various provinces and communes of Spain are governed by provincial and municipal laws. Since 1 January, 1918, every commune has its own elected ayuntamiento, consisting of from five to fifty regidores, or concejales, and presided over by the Alcalde, at whose side stand, in the larger towns, several tencientes alcaldes. The entire municipal Government, with power of taxation, is vested in the ayuntamientos. Half the members are elected every two years, and they appoint the alcalde, the executive functionary, from their own body. Members cannot be re-elected until after two years. Each province in Spain has its own Assembly, the Diputación Provincial, the members of which are elected by the constituencies. The diputaciones provinciales meet in annual session, and are permanently represented by the comision provincial, a committee appointed every year. The Constitution of 1876 secures to the diputaciones provinciales and the ayuntamientos the government and administration of the respective provinces and communes. Neither the national executive nor the Cortes has the right to interfere in the established municipal and provincial administration, notwithstanding which pressure is too frequently brought to bear upon the local elections by the Central Government. During the World War, Spain maintained strict neutrality.

POLITICAL SITUATION.—The various political parties at present are the Conservatives, Liberals, Reformists, Republicans, Regionalists (Catalonia), Carlists, and Independents. Until a recent date all the progressive elements in the country were republican, anti-clerical and Jacobin. The monarchy was reduced to seeking a basis in the rural population, which, for several causes, among which lack of proper communications and an insufficient standard of education are prominent, were politically passive. The result was a political system, based on the predominance of local demagogues, called in Spain caciques. The cacique keeps the constituency in hand for the benefit of the Government's candidate, and in exchange, the Government puts all the power of the State at the service of the local activities of the cacique. Throughout the Restoration period the actual working of the system was entrusted to a political machinery composed of two parties, the Liberals and Conservatives. The Conservative party, now in power, stands for the old order of things in general, the "make haste slowly" principle; its adherents are of various shades of opinion. The majority of them are heart and soul for the present monarchy and for a constitutional Spain. Others are "Carlists" and hark back to the older regime. Others want to see no change whatever—they are the "stand-patters" of the party. Others are strong clericals and see in any change an attack on the vested rights of the Church. The Liberal party believes in developing Spain to the extreme limits of pure Constitutionalism without actually destroying the monarchy, no matter what interests may suffer. The majority of its adherents are strictly constitutional and devoted to the monarchy. They want the broadest measure of modern political invention, whether Spain is ready for it or not. Then comes the Republican party, which may be described as being in the same relation (in the inverse order) to the Liberals as the Carlists are to the Conservatives. They are anti-constitutional and anti-monarchical, and desire a republic in Spain. They follow the Radicals, who are the apostles of discontent, and whose members are of all shades of opinion, theorists, Socialists, and some of the "white glove" or philosophical school of anarchy. They are divided into various groups, such as Regionalists, Independents, etc.

The situation in Spain today is the result of the contemporaneous maturing of two movements, each aiming at a transformation of the political and social order of the nation. The one is called in Spain the "regionalist movement," and the other, the Spanish manifestation of the same social unrest that is sweeping the world, is industrial in character and aims at nothing less than social revolution. The regionalist movement, as a whole, is a concerted attack on the central Government. It is, in other words, a political movement aiming at a decentralization of governmental control by a recognition of the great historic "regions" of Spain, to be erected into autonomous or even into independent States. In two regions particularly, this agitation for regional autonomy is intensified by a local nationalistic propaganda of more or less ancient origin. The Basques and Catalonians, by virtue of their Spanish language, literature, and race, are appealing to the principle of self-determination for "oppressed nationalities." The enthusiasm for the movement has made it powerful enough to become an issue throughout the peninsula. With one-tenth of the total population of the nation, Catalonia pays one-fifth of the taxes, buys one-half the imports, and sells one-third of the exports of the whole nation. It is, therefore, difficult to reconcile the Catalonians to the control of the central Government. Moreover, Catalans feel alien from Castilians, Andalusians from Galicians.

In direct contrast to this movement is the "Spanish" movement, lacking the separatist patriotic animus, but aiming simply at a political re-organization of the nation as the moral and social renovation of government in Spain. The proposed reorganization has, however, been radical enough to arouse determined opposition in the central Government.

At present there is division in the ranks of the Socialist party. This has strengthened the Syndicalist movement, which is economic, not political. The Socialists have met with bitter and uncompromising opposition from the established order and in their present attitude are bound to remain a negative or at most a merely critical force in the politics of the nation. However, they have been an important factor in the present industrial unrest of Spain. Other contributing causes are the privations of the economic crisis and the agitation in military circles. The consequent widespread strikes and disturbances brought about the rise and fall of several ministries and at times the placing of the whole country under martial law. The dissatisfaction in the army is due to what is held to be favoritism, certain officers receiving advancement through court influences, and also to the insufficiency of pay and lack of adequate military organization. This resulted in the organization by the officers, the gendarmerie and customs officials of juntas for the defense of their interests. So great was their influence in 1917 that the army was in actual revolution and the political situation in Spain was most critical. The military juntas are reactionary and are opposed to labor organizations.

Labor unions, or sindicatos Catolicos, as they are called, have been formed, however, and are still being formed among the miners, railroad men, and men of other trades; classes of social work have been established, employers are instructed in the proper treatment of their workmen. Casas Sociales with recreation rooms, co-operative stores, theatres, have been established in a few cities; and last but by no means the least, practically the entire population has been formed into an association called El Sindicato Agricola. With the help and guidance of Father Nevares as its prime mover and guiding star it has, since its establishment ten years ago enrolled as associates 600,000 families, representing about three million souls. These are formed into a nation-wide union of 6000 sindicatos or local branches with divisions in each province, while individual towns are subject to the province. It is truly democratic in organization; the workmen or farmers of each town elect their representative, the representatives of the towns elect the chief of each province, and the last named elect the general director of the confederation. Each federation or local branch takes care of the temporal welfare of the associates, interests itself in all disputes between workmen and employers, makes loans, and has a loan fund as well as a sick fund. The organization of other unions, or sindicatos, of workmen of various trades is similar to that of the Agrarian Federation. The railroad union has 6000 or 7000 associates. Its worth was exhibited in the railway strikes of 1916 and 1917, when its members, not being convinced of the reason and justice of the strike, refused to strike.

The policy of reconstruction is at present much discussed in Spain. It comprises the following objects: (1) the nationalization of the main railroad lines and change of legislation in regard to the less important lines; (2) regulation of concessions of water-courses; (3) extensive appropriation for public works; (4) changes in the mining regulations; (5) agricultural credit; (6) organization of agricultural education and of reforestation; (7) the creation of an organized body to shape economic policies during the transition period. Included also is the construction of a large system of railways. In 1917 it was estimated that the hydro-electric power utilized in Spain is equal to 2,000,000 tons of coal, a present value of $80,000,000. It is necessary to exploit water power on account of the coal shortage. The industrial situation in Spain has been unique for two reasons, one being that a considerable proportion of employers has been limited to companies whose directing bodies resided abroad. This circumstance introduced into labor questions a national consideration together with difficulties of international law. It is proposed now that all concessions for the use of water power and mines must be limited to individuals and companies living in Spain.

Spalato and Macarska, DIOCESE OF (SPALATENSIS ET MACARSCENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—207d), in Jugoslavia, suffragan of Zara, in 1917 had a Catholic population of 201,149 with about 10,500 schismatics and about 3000 Protestants. There are 98 parishes, 281 secular and 79 regular priests. Mgr. Gjivoic, who succeeded to the see 11 July, 1911, died 27 February, 1917. He was succeeded by one of his two auxiliaries, resident at Macarska, Rt. Rev. George Caric, born 1867, elected titular bishop of Ceramus and auxiliary to the bishop of Spalato, 1906, being consecrated at Rome by Cardinal Merry del Val. He died 17 May, 1921, and the see is still vacant. Mgr. Vincent Palunko, titular bishop of Rhodiopolis and auxiliary to the bishop of Spalato (elected 1904) resides at Spalato.

Spalding, JAMES FIELD, b. at Enfield, Connecticut, in 1839; d. at Boston on 9 August, 1921. The conversion of Mr. Spalding to the Faith in 1891 provoked a storm among the Protestants like that caused by Newman's abandonment of Anglicanism in 1845. He graduated from Williston Seminary, Easthampton, Mass., and in 1862 from Williams College. He was then a Congregationalist, but was dissatisfied with its doctrine and becoming Episcopalian about 1868, he was ordained deacon by Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts. After rectorships at Ithaca, N. Y., and Portland, Conn., he was assigned to Christ Church, Cambridge, in 1879. It was not till twelve years afterwards that he entered the True Fold, announcing as his reason that he found the Episcopalian Church and the entire Anglican community permeated with rationalism and free thinking and unbelief.

Spalding, JOHN LANCASTER.—Scholar, distinguished churchman and first Bishop of the Diocese of Peoria, Illinois, b. at Lebanon, Kentucky, 2 June, 1840; d. at Peoria 25 August, 1916. He received his education at Mount St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, the University of Louvain, Belgium, and the American College in Rome. After his ordination to the priesthood, he was designated as one of the assistant priests at the Cathedral in Louisville, Kentucky, and later was made secretary to the Bishop of Louisville and chancellor of the diocese. From 1872-77 he was stationed at St. Michael's Church in New York City, where he had gone to write the life of his uncle, the Most Rev. Martin John Spalding, seventh Archbishop of Baltimore. Appointed first bishop of the See of Peoria 27 Nov., 1876, he was consecrated in New York City by Cardinal McCloskey 1 May, 1877. He was very active in the cause of Catholic higher education and was one of the prime movers in the establishment of the present Catholic University at Washington, D. C. He also coöperated quite actively in the movement for Catholic colonization of the West, and in 1902 he was appointed by the President of the United States as one of the arbitrators in the anthracite coal strike. At the height of his power and prestige, he was stricken with paralysis 6 Jan., 1905, and three years later he was compelled to resign from the active administration of his diocese and was given the title of titular Archbishop of Scitopolis. Among his writings may be mentioned, "Life of the Most Rev. Martin J. Spalding, D.D."; "Religion, Agnosticism and Education," "Socialism and Labor," and his essays.

Spartacus Group.—Under this name is known the extreme faction of the German Socialist movement. The pretext for the birth of this group was the dissension among German Socialists on their attitude toward the World War, and more specifically the voting for the war credit. While on 4 August, 1914, immediately after the outbreak of the European War, the Socialist representatives in the German Reichstag unanimously voted for the war credit, nevertheless the debates which preceded this voting indicated that there was a difference of opinion among the Socialists with regard to the vital issue of military preparedness. Karl Liebknecht was among the most violent antagonists of the Hugo Haase Socialist faction, which stood for the support of the Imperial German Government. In December of the same year, when the German Chancellor made a plea for additional war credits, Liebknecht voted "no." The final organization of the Spartacus Group dates back to 1917, when Liebknecht and Rosa Luxemburg came out openly against the tactics of the Independent Socialist Party, accusing them of liberal or petty bourgeois tendencies. Simultaneously the Spartacus Group combined its efforts with the so-called group of the Internationale and started extensive propaganda among the German workers and soldiers, advocating an immediate social revolution, with the final aim of establishing proletarian dictatorship. This movement was largely influenced by the Bolshevik revolution in Russia. Financially the Bolsheviks came to the assistance of the revolutionary movement in Germany by appropriating 10,000,000 rubles for propaganda purposes abroad. This fund was dispensed through the Bureau of International Revolutionary Propaganda. Millions of leaflets and pamphlets were circulated by the Spartacides, both in Germany and Austria. The fundamental aim of the Spartacus Group was made clear in an appeal to the German workers in connection with the Brest-Litovsk parleys. Therein it was stated: "There is only one means of putting an end to the present butchery and misery of the workers—the overthrow of the government and the bourgeois class, in the way this was accomplished in Russia." The Spartacus Group also advocated a general strike as a measure calculated to bring about stoppage in war industries, paralyzing all economic activity.

With the overthrow of the Imperial German Government, Liebknecht and his associates endeavored to establish control over the Congress of Soldiers' and Workers' Deputies, which was convoked in Berlin. In this, however, the leaders of the Spartacus movement failed completely and the majority of the 450 delegates constituting said Congress repeatedly voted in favor of the platform of the Independent Socialists, adhering to Kautsky and Haase. The climax of the influence of the Spartacus Group among the German workers came at the time when one of the well-known leaders of German Social Democracy, Scheidemann, joined the German Republican Government announcing his program of social reforms as opposed to and distinguished from the tactics of violent social revolution along the lines advocated in the Communist Manifesto of Karl Marx. Armed uprisings spread over Germany, with the Spartacides invariably leading the rebellious workers and the demoralized soldiery. In 1919 the political situation in Germany became critical. Berlin and other large cities were actually besieged by Communist workers, and the whole country was on the verge of a social cataclysm. The Moscow Soviet Mission in Berlin became the headquarters of revolutionary agitation. Spartacan tactics grew more aggressive every day, until finally the German Government was compelled to arrest Rosa Luxemburg and Karl Liebknecht. Their arrest was the turning point in the development of the revolutionary movement in Germany. When put under arrest in Berlin, Liebknecht and Luxemburg had to be conveyed from one prison to another. While on their way, they were shot and instantly killed by the soldiers under whose guard they were. The actual circumstances of Liebknecht's and Luxemburg's deaths, however, still remain dubious. With the elimination of these two Spartacan leaders, the whole movement lost its impetus. The milder factions of German Social Democracy again assumed control over Socialist activities. In 1920 the different German Socialist factions began to investigate independently the conditions in Soviet Russia. German revolutionary workers proceeded to that country in the hope that they would find there ideal social conditions. However, the situation which they actually found converted them into conscious and implacable enemies of the Soviet régime. In this connection the report of one of the German Socialist leaders, Dittman, who also studied the Soviet experiment in Russia herself, produced a great impression on the minds of the German workers, and dealt a grave blow to the Spartacus movement. Aside from those mentioned above, the Spartacus Group counted among its leaders Franz Mehring, the author of the "History of the German Social Democracy." Theoretically the Spartacus Group always declared itself in favor of orthodox Marxism, while in matters of practical action it advocated an alliance with Soviet Russia for the purpose of forcibly introducing Communism into western countries, with the assistance of the combined Russian and German Red Armies.

Speyer, Diocese of (SPIRENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—214d), in Bavaria, suffragan of Bamberg. The present diocese is a remnant of the former diocese situated on the right and left banks of the Rhine to within a distance of nineteen miles of Stuttgart. It comprises, moreover, parts of the dioceses of Strasburg, Metz, Trier, Mainz, and the now suppressed diocese of Worms and since 1815 it is coterminous with the Pfalz, a political territory created by the Congress of Vienna. The real date of its foundation is 23 Sept., 1821, on which day the papal Bull of circumscription was published. During the administration of Bishop, afterwards Cardinal, Geissel, and even more so under that of Bishop Weis, the work of building up the diocese was begun. Due to the World War and the revolution of 1918, many changes have since taken place. The constitution of the Republic has brought about the separation of Church and State, although the final separation has not yet definitely taken place. The State, which is bound to compensate the Church, by reason of the secularization, has been unable from technical financial reasons to pay the indemnities. Consequently the incomes of the benefices are supplemented by voluntary contributions from the State, which the latter has the power to withdraw at any moment. The bishops are also concerned with regard to the salaries of the priests. They do not wish the clergy to be paid by the State, as in that case the Government would have control over them. The independence of the Church even in financial matters has been inaugurated by the religionsgesellschaftliche (religio-social) tax legislation, which grants the Church the right of taxation such as has been the case in Prussia during the past twenty years. The democratic Government has already granted some privileges to the Church, such as the right to make new foundations without the approval of the State. One of the most difficult problems of the future will be the maintenance of denominational schools, the only privilege which the church has retained in regard to the schools being the supervision and teaching of religious instruction. Those who wish to teach this branch must have the Missio Canonica, without which a teacher cannot receive an appointment in the denominational schools. The law in regard to the religious education of children will lead to many evil results. Even a child of fourteen is now lawfully able to withdraw from the Church. Owing to the low value of the currency, it will be impossible to build churches as heretofore, which will prove a drawback to the spiritual development of the people. Before the war about 8,000,000 marks were annually expended for this purpose, but now ten times that amount would not suffice.

The present incumbent of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Ludwig Sebastian, b. at Frankenstein, 6 Oct., 1862, ordained 17 Aug., 1887, elected 31 July, 1917. The diocese contains 243 parishes, 94 chaplaincies, 373 churches, 4 missions. There are about 1,000,000 inhabitants, four-fifths of whom are Catholics. The following clergymen and laymen of prominence have died since 1912: Rev. Joseph Bischoff (Conrad v. Bollanden), a writer of prominence; Rev. Jacob Frederick Bussereau, founder of the Congregation of St. Paul for men and women for the care of the abandoned and destitute; Cardinal v. Bettinger, formerly dean of the cathedral of Speyer; Rev. Dr. Joseph Zimmermann, capitular of the cathedral, political defender of the Church; Prof. Jacob Reeb, founder of an educational institute for homeless boys. The zeal and activity shown by Bishop, now Cardinal, Michael von Faulhaber during the war is worthy of the highest praise. He forbade any criticism of the bishops of the Entente, visited the trenches at the risk of his own life, held conferences for the military chaplains and preached to them. In the beginning of the war seventy young priests became chaplains and served in the hospitals. A number of theological students were killed and some lost their vocation. The clergy who remained in their parishes comforted the afflicted, kept in communication with those at the front, tried, when possible, to procure food for the starving. Many of the church bells were taken by the Government.

Spiritism (cf. C. E., XIV—221b).—On 17 April, 1917, the Congregation of the Holy Office in reply to a query declared that it was not permissible to attend at spiritistic seances of any kind, even as a spectator, with a tacit or express protestation against having any communication with evil spirits.

Spisz (Zips), DIOCESE OF (SCERPUARIENSIS).—cf. C. E., XV—761b). The late Bishop Alexander Parvi; died 24 March, 1919, and was buried with great honor. He built an entirely new home for the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul of Leutschau, collecting for this purpose more than 400,000 crowns, and also erected a training school for teachers. On 9 December, 1915, Marlin Kheberich, domestic prelate, was preconized titular Bishop of Sabrata and appointed Auxiliary Bishop of Spisz, the first time such an appointment had occurred in Spisz in over one hundred years. Upon the death of Bishop Parvi, Bishop Kheberich was unanimously elected Bishop of Spisz; but the newly created republic of Czechoslovakia having since embraced the entire diocese he resigned the bishopric, remaining, however, auxiliary bishop and major mitred provost of the ancient chapter of Spisz. During the World War both clergy and laity voluntarily sacrificed their wealth to their country. The bishop is Mgr. John Vojtassak, who was chancellor of the diocese when he was elected at the consistory of 16 December, 1920. The Catholic population of 244,000 is attended by 220 secular and 14 regular priests, assisted by 8 lay brothers. There are 166 parishes with 166 churches and 100 mission churches; 123 public chapels; 7 convents for men and 5 for women; 1 seminary with 6 professors and 21 students; 1 Catholic daily and 2 other periodicals. The principal religious organization among the clergy is that of Saint Joseph; such associations among the laity are many and varied. The Government at present contributes generously to the support of the Catholic institutions.

Spokane, DIOCESE OF (SPOKANENSIS).—This diocese was established on 17 December, 1913, and comprises the following counties in the State of Washington: Oskanogan, Ferry, Stevens, Pend Oreille, Douglas, Grant, Lincoln, Spokane, Adams, Whitman, Benton, Franklin, Walla Walla, Columbia, Garfield and Asotin, and covers 30,192 square miles of territory. The first and present administrator of the diocese is the Rt. Rev. Augustin F. Schinner, b. at Milwaukee 1 May, 1863, ordained 7 March, 1886, elected first bishop of Superior, 13 May, 1905, consecrated 15 July, published 11 December following; he resigned 15 January, 1913, and was transferred 18 March, 1914, published 28 May following. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contains: 28,608 Catholics, including Irish, Germans, Italians and about 1500 Indians, 46 parishes, 97 churches, 51 missions, 59 stations, 2 convents for men (Jesuits and Franciscans), 1 monastery for women (Poor Clares), 7 convents for women, 51 secular priests, 39 regulars, 32 Jesuit lay brothers, 1 Franciscan brother, 299 sisters who teach in academies and parish schools. Educational institutions in the diocese are: 1 university, 32 professors, 615 students, 5 academies, 473 students (35 boys and 438 girls); 1 normal school, 43 students; 1 training school for nurses; 16 parochial schools. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 1 orphanage, 4 hospitals, 1 House of the Good Shepherd. Societies among the clergy are: St. Joseph's Ecclesiastical Society for aged and infirm priests; among the laity: Catholic Social Betterment League and several fraternal organizations. A diocesan magazine called "The Inland Empire Catholic Messenger" is published monthly.

Springfield, DIOCESE OF (CAMPFONTIS; cf. C. E., XIV—236d), in Massachusetts, suffragan of Boston. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Thomas M. O'Leary, b. 1875, ordained 1897, elected 16 June, 1921, consecrated 8 September following, succeeding Bishop Beaven (d. 5 October, 1920). The Catholic population of the diocese is 332,758. There are: 366 secular priests, 26 regular priests, 188 churches with resident priests, 26 missions with churches, 2 colleges with 915 students, 2 academies, 72 parochial schools with 34,085 pupils, 5 orphan asylums with 626 orphans, 35,751 young people under Catholic care, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 8 hospitals, 1 infant asylum with 90 inmates, 5 homes for the aged poor with 326 inmates, 3 homes for working girls.

Stanislawow, DIOCESE OF (STANISLAOPOLIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—247a), of the Greek-Ruthenian Rite in Galicia, Poland, suffragan of Lwow (Lemberg). Almost the entire diocese was laid waste during the World War; many of the churches were desecrated, destroyed or burnt; many priests were driven out of the country, and many died in prison, but in spite of the numberless adversities they never failed in true apostolic zeal for their flocks. The laity proved staunch defenders of their country, and every town of the diocese suffered the death of at least 19 of its youth. The present bishop is Mgr. Gregory Chomyszyn, born at Chomyszyn in 1867, elected 16 April, 1904, to succeed Mgr. Szeptycki, promoted to Lwow. Among the clergy of note recently deceased are: Jeremias Gommickij, O.S.B.M., the first rector of the theological seminary at Stanislawow, and founder of the convent of the Sisters Servants of the Blessed Virgin Mary, exiled into Symbirok, Russia, where he died in 1916; Analbert Halibej, spiritual director of the theological seminary, butchered by Polish soldiers in 1919. Of the Catholic population of 1,022,000, those belonging to the Greek Rite are Ukrainians. The Redemptorist Fathers of Stanislawow embraced the Greek Rite in 1919 and founded their first such monastery within the city itself. There are 538 secular and 22 regular priests and 12 lay brothers; 22 deaneries; 433 parishes; 234 mother churches with 298 affiliated churches and 64 chapels; 5 Reformed Basilian monasteries for men; 2 monasteries for women; 1 convent for women with 15 foundations; 1 theological seminary; 1 college for boys with 70 students, and 1 for girls with 40 students; 1 normal school for girls with 6 teachers and 200 students; 9 orphanages; 12 day nurseries. The government has established normal schools everywhere; about 5 seminaries for teachers of the normal schools, and 8 gymnasia. The religious organizations among the clergy are: Society of the Immaculate Conception, and Association of St. Peter; and among the laity: Association of St. Nicholas, Apostleship of Prayer, and charitable Association of St. John.

Stanley-Falls, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE STANLEY FALLS; cf. C. E., XIV—247), in Belgina Congo, is still governed by Mgr. Gabriel-Emile Grison, titular Bishop of Sagalassus. Mgr. Grison was born at St. Julien, in the Diocese of Verdun on 25 December, 1860, and ordained in December, 1883. He joined the priests of the Sacred Heart of St. Quentin in 1886 and was professed on 13 September, 1887; he was superior in Ecuador in 1890, and was sent to the Congo mission in 1897, becoming Prefect Apostolic of Stanley-Falls on 4 August, 1904; appointed Vicar Apostolic on 12 March, 1908, and consecrated at Rome by Cardinal Gotti on 11 October following. The vicariate has 13 Franciscan Sisters; 348 native catechists; 22,929 Catholics and 20,042 catechumens; 2991 baptisms were administered last year. The war called away 6 missionaries, who were under arms during the four years—3 in France, 3 in Kamerun. All of them returned safely, but four of them have been sent to Kamerun to replace the German Fathers, who had that mission formerly. There are now 30 priests and 5 lay brothers in charge of 11 missions: St. Gabriel, Stanleyville (2), Avakubi, Lokandu, Banalya, Basoko, Bafwalaka, Beni, Yanonge and Ponthierville. All the last four have clay-wall churches, the others have brick churches in Roman or Gothic style; there are at least 250 small rural chapels. The Franciscan Missionary Sisters of Mary have establishments at St. Gabriel, Basoko, and Stanleyville (left bank); the Marist Brothers have charge of the state school at Stanleyville (right bank). There are 11 central schools with 1249 pupils; and 116 rural schools taught by catechists with 1292 pupils. The Sisters have 3 girls' schools with 120 pupils; the Brothers have a primary school at Stanleyville with 300 pupils; a clerical school with 14 pupils; and a professional school with 50 pupils. In October, 1921, petite séminaire was opened at Bafwalaka with 22 students. Each mission, except Stanleyville (right bank), has a dispensary and in case of necessity takes in abandoned children. The Sisters have a small leper-hospital at St. Gabriel and visit the lazaret for sleeping-sickness victims, 2 miles from Stanleyville, three times a week; they have charge, moreover, of the European and the native hospitals of the Grand Lacs Railway at Stanleyville (left bank). In addition the mission has 14 workshops and 3 farms where the natives are taught masonry, carpentry, gardening and agriculture.

Stanton, WILLIAM JEROME, Jesuit missionary b. at Staunton, Illinois, 8 February, 1870, d. at St. Louis, 10 March, 1910, the son of Thomas Stanton and Regina Helen Brawner. Stanton entered the Jesuit novitiate near Florissant, Missouri, 16 July, 1887. In 1894 he was sent to teach in St. Ignatius College, Chicago, and in 1895 to Detroit. In 1896 he was sent to a newly opened college at Belize, the capital of British Honduras, Central America. Here he found time to collect specimens of insects, crustaceans, reptiles, etc., the fauna of British Honduras. In 1899, he returned to St. Louis for his theology, but was sent in 1901 to Manila where he studied at the observatory of the Spanish Jesuits and was ordained in 1902, the first American priest to be ordained in the Philippines. In 1904 he returned to America and soon after left for Europe where he spent his tertianship at Manresa near Barcelona, Spain. Exceptional scientific gifts and equipment marked him out for fine work in entomology but he preferred to go as a missionary to the Indians he had seen on his vacations some years before in British Honduras. In October, 1905, he went back to Belize and soon left for the west of the colony to begin a new mission among the Mayo Indians. He opened the mission alone and worked there for five years in face of every hardship, preaching, teaching, being the Good Shepherd to the half civilized natives of the district. At the end of 1909, although his quest for souls had been most fruitful, the years of hardship had ruined his health and Father Stanton was forced to return to St. Louis where he died of cancer.

Stoeger, JOHANN BAPTIST, Redemptorist lay brother, b. at Ennersfeld, near Vienna, on 4 October, 1810; d. at Eggenburg, Austria, on 3 November, 1883. He was received into the Redemptorist Congregation as a coadjutor brother 18 March, 1840. The forty-six years which he passed in religion in the humble role of assistant cook and baker he sanctified by his humility and his devotion towards the Blessed Sacrament and Our Lady. He died with a reputation of unusual holiness and the cause of his canonization was introduced at Rome on 22 December, 1915.

Stone, JAMES KENT, afterwards and better known as FATHER FIDELIS, Passionist, b. in Boston 10 November, 1840, d. 14 Oct., 1921. He was a grandson, on the maternal side, of the famous jurist, Chancellor James Kent. His father was the Rev. John Stone. He graduated at Harvard in 1861, studied for a time at Göttingen in Germany, saw service in the American Civil War and became an Episcopal minister in 1866. He had been professor of the classics and president in Kenyon College, Ohio, and of Hobart College, New York. He became a Catholic in 1869, after a perusal of the appeal of Pope Pius IX to the world outside of the Church to enter the fold. He was received, on 8 December, at Madison, N. J., by Dr. Wigger, then pastor of the church, and subsequently Bishop of Newark. The "Invitation Heeded" was written to explain his conversion. He was ordained priest by Cardinal McCloskey, 21 December, 1872, and entered the Paulist Community, but in 1878 subsequently became a Passionist, his two young daughters having been adopted by Michael J. O'Connor of San Francisco. The mother of these children had died some years previously. He spent three years in Rome and was then sent to South America, where he labored for twelve years as provincial consultor, master of novices and provincial. He preached at Harvard in 1896 and 1897 and in 1901, at the request of President Eliot, took charge of the 1400 pupils who attended the Summer school. In 1908 he was recalled to South America, where he remained until 1914 and was then assigned to Mexico but was unable to enter the country because of the civil wars that were raging there. In 1919 he retired to Norwood Park, Chicago, and for two years was a victim of great physical suffering. There his daughter joined him and brought him to her home in California where he had the happiness of saying Mass until two days before his death. His famous book, "The Invitation Heeded," had gone through seventeen editions and had been translated into several languages.

Strasbourg, DIOCESE OF (ARGENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—313b), in France, directly dependent on the Holy See. In 1918 Alsace was restored to France and the religious situation under the Concordat with Germany was maintained. Rt. Rev. Charles Joseph Ruch was nominated by the French Government and appointed bishop of Strasbourg 1 August, 1919. He was b. at Nancy 24 September, 1873, ordained 17 July, 1897, elected titular bishop of Gerasa and coadjutor bishop of Nancy, 14 June, 1913, consecrated 16 July. He was appointed bishop of Nancy 21 October, 1918, and transferred to the see of Strasbourg in 1919, succeeding Rt. Rev. Adolph Fritzen, who died in that year. According to the statistics for 1921, the diocese contains 720 parishes, about 860 churches, 1 monastery for men (Trappists), 15 convents for men, about 1100 secular priests, 20 religious orders of women, 1 seminary with about 160 seminarians. The educational institutions in the diocese are: 1 university at Strasbourg, 15 professors, about 180 theological students, 2 colleges for men, 12 boarding schools for girls. The charitable institutions are in a flourishing condition. Among them are several juvenile institutions, 1 institution for the blind, 1 for the deaf and dumb. All the public institutions admit the ministry of priests and most of them are in charge of Sisters. There are in the diocese the following congregations of men: Franciscans, Capuchins, Dominicans, Congregation of the Holy Ghost, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, White Fathers of the African Missions, Brothers of the Christian Doctrine, Marist Fathers. Two associations have been founded in the diocese for the defence of Catholic rights, Catholic League of Alsace and the League of Parents. Four German and two French dailies are published in the diocese.

Strassmaier, JOHANN NEPOMUK, Assyriologist, b. at Hagenberg, Bavaria, on 15 May, 1846; d. at London on 11 January, 1920; son of Johann Evangelist and Theresa (Pichler) Strassmaier. After preliminary studies at Hagenberg and Metten, and a brief stay in the Seminary of Ratisbon, he entered the Jesuit novitiate at Gorheim near Sigmaringen. He studied philosophy at Maria Laach and with two hundred fellow-Jesuits served in the ambulance department of the German Army during the War of 1870, being awarded a medal and certificate for fidelity to duty. This availed him but little, for with his fellow-religious he was exiled soon after by the German Protestants and took refuge at Alost in Belgium. The following year he crossed over to England and completed his studies at Ditton Hall and St. Beuno's (Wales), being ordained in 1876. Two years later he was sent to London, where he began his intensive life study of the Babylonian remains in the British Museum. As a result of his labours he published six valuable tomes of Assyrian texts, translations and studies: "Alphabetisches Verzeichnis der assyrischen und akkadischen Wörter" (1886); "Wörterverzeichnis zu den babylonischen Inschriften in Museum zu Liverpool" (1886); "Inscriptionen von Nabonidus" (1886-89); "Inscriptionen von Nabuodonosor" (1889); "Inscriptionen von Cyrus" (1889). Later he published the inscriptions of Cambyses and Darius. With Joseph Epping, S. J., he undertook the testing of the Babylonian Calendar-Tablets and Observation-Lists, and after eight years' study and calculation they produced their remarkable "Astronomisches aus Babylon," which contained quite a number of fundamental discoveries regarding Babylonian astronomy and chronology. One of the greatest Oriental scholars of the age, Father Strassmaier was in addition one of the best-known and most popular spiritual directors in London.

Stuart, JANET ERSKINE, Superior General of the Society of the Sacred Heart, b. at Cottesmore, Rutland, England, 11 November, 1857; d. at Roehampton, London, 21 October, 1914. She was the youngest daughter of Rev. and Hon. Andrew Stuart, son of the second Earl of Castlestewart, the male representative of the royal Stuarts. She became a Catholic in 1879, and three years later entered the novitiate of the Sacred Heart at Roehampton, where she became secretary to Reverend Mother Digby (q. v.). Professed in 1889, she then became mistress of novices, and in 1894 succeeded Mother Digby as Superior. When five years later Mother Digby as superior general visited her convents in the United States, Canada and Mexico, Mother Stuart accompanied her and in 1901 was sent to visit the houses of the Society in the West Indies and South America. In May, 1911, on the death of Mother Digby, with whom she had worked for twenty-nine years, Mother Stuart was called to France as vicar general, pending the election of a new superior general. The following August she was herself elected to that office, and went to Rome to get the blessing of the Holy Father on her generalate. Later she visited her convents in the eastern part of Europe and finally those in Australia, New Zealand, and Japan, returning to England by way of America, where she gathered together the superiors of the various houses in the vicariate at Manhattanville, N. Y., and made with them an eight days retreat. The last months of Mother Stuart's life were saddened by the events of the war; the Sacred Heart Convent at Liège fell into the hands of the Germans and the nuns fled to Brussels; several days later word was brought to her that two of her religious in Tournai had been shot. She was cut off from communication with her other houses on the continent, and with the help of friends she left the mother house at Ixelles and went to Roehampton, where she died several months later. Mother Stuart's wide and deep culture, her breadth of view, her understanding of children, her perfect balance, her choice spirit as well as her distinction of style, are shown in her two published works "The Education of Catholic Girls" (1911), which established her reputation as a great educator; and the "Society of the Sacred Heart" (1914), a character sketch, exquisitely etched, of the institute of whose exalted type of spirituality she was such a perfect expression.

Suau, PIERRE, historian, b. in Guadeloupe, West Indies, on 7 June, 1861; d. on 15 August, 1916. For a long time on the editorial staff of the Etudes, Father Suau, besides contributing to its pages, is the author of several books which attracted considerable attention, notably his "History of St. Francis Borgia," "Heroic Spain," "The Society of Jesus," "Rudolph Hequiviva," and others. His "France in Madagascar" was crowned by the French Academy. He was a quick, incisive writer whose broad strokes which sketched a landscape or depicted a character, immediately held the attention of the reader. He was educated at Toulouse and Angers and became a Jesuit in 1878. On a scrap of paper, written long before his demise, were found the words: "I request that no one be permitted to write the smallest necrological notice about me."

Sumatra, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XIV—333c), embraces the island of Sumatra and some of the lesser surrounding islands, including Banka and Billiton. The inhabitants number 6,300,000, of whom 145,000 are in Banka and 68,500 in Billiton. The Catholic population is 6754; and includes 5081 Europeans, 912 Japanese or Chinese and 706 Malays. There are 180,000 Protestants, 600,000 pagans, and the rest mostly Mohammedans. The principal mission centers are: Padang, Medan, Kolta Radja, Sawah Loento, Font de Kock, Palembang, Telok Betong, Tandjong Sakti, Sambong in Banka, Manggar in Billiton. The soil is rich and well cultivated, yielding tobacco, coffee, tea, rubber, pepper, wood, etc. The principal mineral products are petroleum, coal and gold. The present prefect apostolic is Rt. Rev. Mathias Brans, who succeeded the late Bishop Liberatus Cluts, d. 23 April, 1921, after a life of zealous labors, first among the people of Borneo, and lastly in the Prefecture Apostolic of Sumatra. Seventeen Capuchins look after the 7 larger and 15 lesser stations and the 15 churches, and frequently during the year journey to about 100 different localities to attend the resident Catholics. They are assisted in their labors by 4 Capuchin lay brothers, 41 Sisters of Charity from Tilburg, and 19 lay catechists. For the purpose of teaching the young, the Brothers of the Congregation of Tilburg and the Franciscan Sisters from Dongen in Holland are expected to take up their residence in the prefecture this year (1922). There are 10 elementary schools with 30 teachers and 815 pupils; 1 high school with 4 teachers and 42 pupils; 2 orphanages, 1 for boys with 40 children, and 1 for girls with 68 children. The Government to a certain extent contributes to the support of the orphanages and to some of the Catholic schools. In Padang the laity have the Society of St. Vincent de Paul and in Medan an organization for social uplift, and one for political ends.

Superior, DIOCESE OF (SUPERIORENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—336c), in Wisconsin, suffragan of Milwaukee. According to the statistics of 1922 there were 57,509 Catholics in the diocese, including 54,224 whites and 3285 Indians. Rt. Rev. Augustin Francis Schinner, first bishop of the diocese, resigned 15 Jan., 1913, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Joseph M. Koudelka, b. at Clatsowo, diocese of Budweis, 8 Dec., 1852, ordained 8 Oct., 1875, consecrated auxiliary bishop of Cleveland and titular bishop of Germanopolis 25 Feb., 1908, transferred to Milwaukee as auxiliary bishop, 4 Sept., 1911, appointed to the see of Superior, 6 Aug., 1913, made assistant at the pontifical throne 13 July, 1917. He died 24 June, 1921. He founded the diocesan home for orphans in 1914, and was a zealous missionary among the Slavic races. The see is still vacant. During the war 3 priests became chaplains in the army, 1135 Catholics joined the army, 220 joined the navy. Of these 27 were killed and 49 wounded. The diocese contains 68 parishes, 153 churches, 85 missions, 28 mission stations, 11 convents for men, 29 for women with 256 sisters, 98 secular priests, 21 regulars, 7 lay brothers and 5 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries in other dioceses. Educational institutions include 2 high schools, 1 academy, 22 elementary schools with 4355 pupils, 2 industrial schools with 302 pupils. There are 8 hospitals and 1 orphan asylum in the diocese. Ten public institutions admit the ministry of priests. Two associations exist among the clergy and eight among the laity.

Susa, DIOCESE OF (SEGUSIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—345a), in the province of Turin, Southern Italy, suffragan of Turin. It reports 62 parishes, 130 secular priests, a convent of Friars Minor Conventuals, (the building being an example of perfect Gothic), an institute of Sisters of the Third Order of St. Francis, founded by Rt. Rev. E. G. Rosaz, bishop of Susa (d. 1913), which has other foundations at Turin and in Switzerland; an institute of the Sisters of St. Joseph with foundations within and without the diocese, with hospices for pupils of the primary and secondary schools. There is a diocesan seminary with 60 seminarians. The Franciscan Sisters have charge of a home for old people and of an orphanage for girls; the Sisters of Charity of a hospital and infant asylum and the Sisters of St. Joseph of an elementary poor school, which is supported by the Government. A mutual benevolent association is established among the clergy and among the laity there are circles for Catholic youth and groups of Catholic women with their own constitutions and residences. "La Valsura", a Catholic weekly, is published by the Tipografia Pia San Carlo. The clergy took an active part in all the committees formed during the war to assist the families of the combatants. The priests of the city founded and maintained for four years the only Casa dei Soldati. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Umberto Rossi, elected at the Consistory of 13 June, 1921, succeeding Mgr. Giuseppe Castelli, who was bishop of Susa from 1911 until his transfer to Cuneo.

Suspension (cf. C. E., XIV—345d), is a censure by which a cleric is deprived totally or partially of his office or of his benefice or of both office and benefice. Suspension from office means that one is forbidden to exercise the power of orders or of jurisdiction, or to act as an official administrator; suspension from jurisdiction generally forbids any act of jurisdiction, whether ordinary or delegated, in either forum; suspension from divine functions forbids any exercise of the power of orders which one has obtained through ordination or by a special privilege; suspension from orders forbids any exercise of the power of orders obtained through ordination as distinct from the power of jurisdiction or the powers received by special privilege. Suspension from sacred orders forbids any exercise of the power of orders received through major ordination; suspension from a particular order forbids any act of that order, and the suspended party may not confer that order on another or receive a higher order himself, or exercise it if he received it in spite of this prohibition.

No suspended cleric may be promoted to a higher order. Anyone exercising an order from which he has been suspended becomes irregular. While suspension imposed by the common law of the Church affects the offices or benefices held anywhere by the suspended party, an ordinary cannot suspend a cleric from a particular office or benefice held in another diocese. Just as in the case of excommunication, a cleric who is suspended from the administration of the sacraments or sacramentals cannot lawfully administer them unless when he has been requested by the faithful to do so. He may always consider the request legitimate, unless he was suspended by a condemnatory or declaratory sentence, in which case it is only in danger of death that the faithful may ask for absolution, or, if there is no other priest present, for the other sacraments or sacramentals. Again, no cleric under suspension after a declaratory or condemnatory sentence can validly exercise the right of election, presentation, or nomination, or acquire any ecclesiastical dignity, office, benefices or pension. If such a sentence were pronounced any pontifical favor received later by the suspended cleric would be of no effect, unless the suspension was mentioned in the rescript.

Suspension reserved to the Holy See is incurred ipso facto (a) by a consecrating bishop, the assistant bishops or priests, and the bishop consecrated when the consecration takes place without an Apostolic mandate—general suspension; (b) by clerics promoted to orders by simony or receiving or administering any other sacrament simoniacally—general suspension; (c) by one who has presumed to receive orders from a person censured by sentence, or from a notorious apostate, heretic, or schismatic—suspension from divine functions; those, however, who acted in good faith in receiving these orders are prohibited from exercising them, until they receive a dispensation; (d) it is incurred for a year by anyone who ordains a person not subject to him without proper dimissorial letters, or his own subject without testimonial letters from the ordinaries of the places where he lived long enough to contract a canonical impediment, or by one conferring major orders on a candidate who lacks a canonical title, or (apart from a privilege) on a religious who does not belong to a house situated in the territory of the ordaining bishop, unless the bishop of the place of residence of the religious consents or is of a different Rite or is absent or not holding ordinations at the specified times or has died and left no one with episcopal orders in his place—suspension from conferring orders; (e) by a religious in major orders whose profession has been declared null by reason of his deliberate deceit—general suspension; (f) by a chapter or those who admit a person elected, presented or nominated, before he exhibits the requisite letters—suspension from the right of election.

Suspensions reserved to the ordinary are incurred ipso facto: (a) by a cleric who without his ordinary's leave cites anyone enjoying the privilege of the forum before a lay judge—suspension from office; (b) by a fugitive religious in sacred orders who has left his community, but with the intention of returning—general suspension reserved to his higher superior.

Non-reserved suspension is incurred ipso facto: (a) by a priest presuming to hear confessions or to absolve from reserved sins, without obtaining the necessary jurisdiction—suspension from hearing confessions; (b) by those who with malice have had themselves ordained without dimissorial letters or with false ones, or before the canonical age, or without having received the lower orders—suspension from the order received; (c) by a cleric who presumes to resign his ecclesiastical office, benefice, or dignity into lay hands—suspension from divine functions; (d) by an abbot or prelate nullius who has neglected to obtain the necessary episcopal blessing within the fixed time—suspension from jurisdiction; (e) by a vicar capitular who unlawfully grants dimissorial letters for ordination during a vacancy—suspension from divine functions; (f) by religious superiors who unlawfully presume to send their subjects to be ordained by an external bishop—suspension from saying Mass for a month.

Suspension ex informata conscientia.—This extraordinary remedy may be applied by the ordinary only when the usual method of procedure cannot be followed without grave inconvenience. The decree is generally not necessarily to be in writing and should contain the exact date, an express statement that the suspension is ex informata conscientia, and indication of the duration, which must be temporary, unless the suspension is inflicted as a censure, in which case the cause must be stated, and furthermore should clearly mention what acts are prohibited. The suspended cleric may appeal to the next higher superior. An important change is that, while it may never be inflicted for a notorious crime, it may be imposed for a public offence: (a) if the crime is revealed to the ordinary by unimpeachable witnesses who alone can prove it but who cannot be induced to give evidence in court, and no judicial proof can be obtained from others; or (b) if the cleric himself prevents the judicial investigation from being begun or completed; or (c) if the judicial process would involve a conflict with the civil law or probably cause scandal. It rests with the bishop in his discretion and charity to reveal the cause or crime to the cleric involved.

Swatow, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in China, was erected on 6 April, 1914, under the name of Chaochau, by separation from the Prefecture Apostolic of Kuan Tom (Canton); on 18 August, 1915, the name of the vicariate was officially changed to Swatow. The mission has an area of 50,000 square miles and embraces the civil prefectures of Chaochau and Kie-yang and five sub-prefectures of Honitchow, viz., Chang-ning, Lu-feng, Lung-chuan, Lien-ping, Ho-ping. It is bounded on the north by the vicariate of Southern Kiang-si and Fu-kien, on the east by the vicariate of Amoy and the Chinese Sea, on the south by the Chinese Sea and on the west by the Vicariates of Hong-kong and Canton. The islands in the Chinese Sea belonging to the civil districts mentioned above are under the jurisdiction of the vicar. The vicariate, which has a population of six millions, mostly of the Holo and Kakra races, is under the spiritual care of the Foreign Missions. The first and present vicar Apostolic is Mgr. Adolphe Rayssac, b. at Lunan in the diocese of Cahors, France, on 4 November, 1866; studied at Figeac, Montfaucon, and Cahors, entered the Missions Etrangères at Paris in August, 1887; ordained on 21 Sept., 1889; set out for the Chinese mission three months later. Mgr. Rayssac was appointed vicar apostolic on 17 July, 1914, and consecrated at Hong-kong on 3 May, 1915. From March, 1915, till February, 1917, he was Apostolic administrator of Canton. He resides at Swatow. The statistics of the vicariate for 1917 recorded 22 European and 7 Chinese priests; 224 churches and chapels; 33,695 Catholics; 594 adult baptisms, 3107 infant baptisms (1978 being of pagan parentage); 77 confirmations; 5794 annual and 70,186 devotional confessions; 5208 Easter and 114,619 devotional communions; 76 boys' schools with 1490 pupils; 12 girls' schools with 497 pupils; 5 orphanages with 148 orphans.

The notable events in the vicariate since its erection are as follows: In October, 1915, Father Louis Etienne, when travelling to Swatow to report in accordance with the French military law, was shot and stabbed by brigands; but he recovered after eight months in a hospital at Hong-kong; in 1916 the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres were withdrawn from the vicariate; in 1917 the southern armies defeated the northern forces, but in June, 1918, Swatow was recovered by the Peking Government. A very violent earthquake occurred on 13 February, 1918, killing hundreds in Swatow and on the island of Namoa. In Swatow the Catholic church was badly shaken and is beyond repair, while in Chaochowfu the tower of the beautiful church of Notre Dame Auxiliatrice was thrown down and the walls of the building split.

Sweden, (cf. C. E., XVI—347a).—The area of the monarchy is 173,035 square miles and the population on 31 December, 1920, was 5,904,000, including 4,161,000 in the rural communes and 1,743,000 in the cities.

EDUCATION.—In 1919 there were 77 public secondary schools with 27,384 pupils, 51 high schools with 3486 pupils, 2 high and 7 elementary technical schools with about 4000 pupils, 17,085 elementary schools with 24,265 teachers and 700,841 pupils, and 5 navigation schools. Education is compulsory and free, and children not attending the public schools must furnish proofs of being privately educated. There are 2 universities at Upsala and at Lund, also medical, philosophical, and law faculties at Stockholm and Göteborg.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS.—According to the Poor Law ordinances issued in 1918, the communes are obliged to assist children under 16 years of age, if necessary, and all those who are disabled from disease, old age, and infirmity. In each commune, which constitutes a poor district, there is a board of public assistances. In 1919 a total of 256,441 received relief (140,973 in country parishes, 115,468 in towns).

GOVERNMENT.—Sweden is a constitutional monarchy, with a King and a Parliament of two houses. The King must be a member of the Lutheran Church, and exercises his power in concert with the Council of State and the Dict. The provincial administration is entrusted in Stockholm to a High Governor and in each of the 24 governments to a prefect, who is nominated by the King. Ecclesiastical affairs and questions relating to the primary schools are dealt with by the parish assemblies, presided over by the pastor of the parish.

RELIGION.—The mass of the population belong to the Lutheran Church, recognized as the State religion. There are 12 bishoprics, and 1587 parishes (1920). Upsala is the metropolitan see. The clergy are chiefly supported from the parishes and proceeds of church lands. The Jews number about 6000.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—In 1919 the number of farms in cultivation was 428,758, of which 120,788 were of 2 hectares and under; 270,511 of 2 to 20 hectares, and 34,883 above 100 hectares. The harvest in Sweden was between 50 per cent and 75 per cent more abundant than normal, but the demand was not equal to the supply. In order to allay the discontent caused by the fact that large quantities of foreign wheat was being imported, while Swedish wheat was lying unbought, the government raised the duty on imported grain. In 1920, 286,535 tons of wheat were produced, 1,024,757 tons of oats, 1,677,545 tons of potatoes, 3,599,014 tons of sugar beet and fodder roots; and 4,499,896 tons of hay. In 1919, the value of all crops was estimated at 2145 million kroner (1 krona=$.268). The public forests in Sweden (mostly on crown lands) have an area of 8,193,981 hectares, and in 1918 yielded 5,636,240 cubic metres of timber. In the same year, 289,113 men, 50,516 women, 34,980 boys and 10,671 girls (under 18 years of age) were employed in the factories. On 15 July, 1921, the Sales Union which had regulated the price of timber, was dissolved, and the sales of timber, which had shrunk to a low level, improved. A new eight-hour week law went into effect on 1 January, 1920. Foreign competition has been severely felt in the iron and steel trade. About 4,981,110 tons of iron ore were mined in 1919; of these, 2,418,989 tons were exported. Of the 493,701 tons of pig iron mined in 1919, 81,578 tons were exported. In Sweden, 45,108 persons were engaged in mining. The foreign trade of Sweden in 1920, included exports valued at £127,421,500 and imports valued at £187,415,833. At the end of 1919, the railway mileage in Sweden was 9392, of which 3409 miles belonged to the state. The total revenue was estimated at £71,926,810, the expenditure, £46,792,777. On 1 January, 1921, the total debt, chiefly contracted for productive purposes, was 1,270,440,927 kronor, or 217 kronor per head of the population (96 in 1910). The assets in the state were 1,207,806,233 kronor.

DEFENCE.—The military forces of Sweden are recruited on the principle of universal suffrage. The peace standing (1920) is about 86,507 men. The Swedish navy is used entirely as a coast defense force.

RECENT HISTORY.—During the World War, Sweden maintained the strictest neutrality, although its shipping suffered greatly from the submarines and the allied blockade. After the war, Sweden claimed the Alland Islands, which were, however, awarded by the League of Nations to Finland. On 26 May, 1919, the Swedish Parliament granted full national suffrage to women, who in 1909, had been given municipal suffrage. In June, 1919, the Swedish Congress of Independent Socialists at Stockholm, voted to join the "Third International at Moscow" and adopted a resolution favoring Bolshevik principles. In 1920, a marriage law was passed depriving the husband of personal guardianship over the wife and of legal right to dispose of the wife's property. The wife could acquire property in her own right. If both parties desired a divorce, no court action was required, the parties merely registered before a judge, and the marriage was automatically dissolved. A trade agreement with Soviet Russia was signed in February, 1922. A consultative referendum on the question of alcohol will take place in August, 1922.

SWEDEN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, is under the guidance of Mgr. Albert Bitter, titular bishop of Doliche. He was born in 1848 at Melle, in the diocese of Hildesheim, was ordained in 1874, and spent his early priestly life as a missionary in Sweden, first in Stockholm and then in Göteborg. Later he went to Mecklenburg and returning to Sweden was raised to the episcopacy and appointed vicar apostolic 1893. To his apostolic labors is largely due the sure if slow progress of the Church of Sweden. Although liberty of conscience has not yet been formally proclaimed in the Swedish Constitution, it is a practical fact; religious orders are allowed to develop without government interference and the Sisters of St. Joseph and the Grey Sisters of Breslau conduct several schools there. In 1921, the first Catholic daily, the "Credo", was published by the same publishers who had issued a Catholic review of that name two years earlier. Statistics for 1921 give 15 priests, 17 churches and chapels, 5 stations and a Catholic population of 2558.

Swedenborgians.—I. General Convention of the New Jerusalem in the United States of America. In 1912 a very complete Book of Worship was adopted by the General Convention. In recent years this sect has suffered a decrease in nearly all particulars. In 1921 it reported 101 churches, 99 ministers and 6519 members.

II. General Church of the New Jerusalem. This sect centers its main energies on the religious education of children through the three parochial schools which it supports. Its higher educational center is at Bryn Athyn, Pa., where also an experiment at reviving the medieval guilds was attempted in the erection of a stately cathedral under the direction of Ralph Adams Cram. The guild experiment was not entirely successful and the architect, Mr. Cram, withdrew from the undertaking.

Foreign missionary work is carried on in Sweden, Belgium, France, Switzerland, South Africa, Brazil, and Canada. There were in 1916, 6 stations, 5 American missionaries, 5 churches and 310 members. In 1921 they reported in the United States 15 churches, 35 ministers, and 733 members, showing a slight decrease in members since 1912.

Switzerland (cf. C. E., XIV—358a), a federal republic in Central Europe, divided into 22 cantons, three of which are divided into half cantons. On 1 December, 1920, the area was 15,976 square miles and the population 2,861,508. According to the 1910 census the inhabitants of Switzerland were classified by native tongue as follows: 2,594,186 spoke German, 793,264 spoke French; 302,578, Italian; 23,031 spoke other languages. The number of foreigners resident in Switzerland in 1920 was 412,306. In 1919 there were 74,205 births, 30,731 marriages, and 57 deaths and still births. The number of emigrants in 1920 was 9276. The largest cities with their respective populations are: Zurich, 206,120; Basle, 135,385; Bern, 103,385; St. Gall, 69,733; Lausanne, 67,858. With the exception of the Moravians and two Lutheran parishes in Geneva, all the Protestants of Switzerland belong to the Evangelical Church. The great majority of these belong to the "National Churches," organized according to cantons. There are differences in details in the constitutions of these cantonal National Churches. Besides these there are also large independent Protestant Churches and Evangelical sects of the most varied kinds. In the census the Old Catholics are not counted as independent confessions, but are enumerated among the Catholics. In addition to the Old Catholic bishop, the Christian Catholic National Church is administered by a national synod which meets annually; besides the Old Catholic priests and the bishop, its membership includes delegates elected by the parishes. The Swiss Jews are united for worship into several communities, which are organized in accordance with the laws of the Confederation for associations.

According to the census of 1 December, 1920, the number of Protestants amounted to 2,218,589 (57 per cent of the population), of Catholics, 1,586,826 (41 per cent), and of Jews, 20,955 (2 per cent). The Protestants are in a majority in twelve cantons, and the Catholics in ten. Of the more populous cantons, Zurich, Bern, Vaud, Neuchâtel, and Basle are mainly Protestant while Luzern, Fribourg, Ticino, Valais, and the Forest Cantons are mainly Catholic. The Jesuit order and its affiliated societies cannot be received in Switzerland, and the foundation of new convents and religious orders is forbidden. The Catholic population is governed by the sees of Basle and Lugano, Chur, St. Gall, Lausanne and Geneva, and Sion.

GOVERNMENT.—The constitution of 29 May, 1874, which is still in force, provides for a President and Vice-President, elected for one year, and a Parliament of 2 Chambers, a Ständerat or State Council, and a Nationalrat or National Council. The first is composed of 44 members, two for each canton and the Nationalrat has 180 members, chosen by the people, one for each 20,000. The executive administration of the Confederation is divided into 7 departments, each of which is under the direction of a member of the Federal Council. When business relative to a particular department is considered in the legislature, the Councillor who manages that department attends, answers questions, gives explanations, and joins in debate. Besides its general administrative (including financial) work, the charge of foreign relations and of the army, the Council supervises the conduct of the permanent civil service of the Confederation. By the law of 1914 the Department of Foreign Affairs, which was in charge of the President of the Council and which was changed every year, became permanent and comprised three sections: viz. Foreign Affairs, Internal Affairs and Commerce. The initiative and referendum prevails, but is seldom used, only three times on 62 laws passed between 1905 and 1919. Three of the cantons are politically divided—Basle into Stadt and Land; Appenzell into Ausser Rhoden and Inner Rhoden, and Unterwald into Obwald and Nidwald. Each of these parts of cantons sends one member to the State Council. In 1919 a new group of Peasants, Artisans, and Bourgeois won 26 seats in the National Council. A Civil Code, combining the old Teutonic customary law with the principles of modern French law was enacted in 1912. A penal code is being prepared (1919).

EDUCATION.—The statistics for 1918 give 302 kindergartens, 4229 primary schools with 13,371 teachers and 555,353 pupils, 527 secondary schools with 49,170 pupils, and 1877 teachers, 128 middle schools with 26,608 pupils and 1708 teachers. There are also special schools and seven universities. The Academy of Neuchâtel was transformed into a university in May, 1909, but without the faculty of medicine.

SOCIAL CONDITIONS.—There is a Federal Insurance Law, entitling all Swiss citizens to insurance against illness and accident (passed in June, 1911). Accident insurance is obligatory in industrial establishments under the Federal Liability Law and is administered by the Swiss Accident Insurance Institution. On 31 December, 1919, the prison population consisted of 3187 of whom 400 were women.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—Agriculture.—It is estimated that there are 250,000 separate farming properties averaging less than 15 acres in size, by far the greater part of which are occupied and worked by the owner or members of his family. In 1920, the production was as follows: wheat, 97,600 metric tons; oats, 45,200 metric tons; potatoes, 768,700 metric tons; rye, 37,200 metric tons. According to the estimates of the Swiss Milk Office, created by the Government in 1917 to regulate the provisioning of the country, milk production for 1913 was estimated at 273,000 metric tons, with a constant decrease during the war years to 186,000 tons in 1919. The amount of milk utilized in the manufacture of cheese, butter, and condensed milk, in 1919 (53,000 tons) was only half the amount used in 1913. In view of the innumerable strikes in the surrounding countries, the labor situation in Switzerland has been very calm. The forty-eight-hour week became effective for all Swiss industrial establishments on 1 January, 1920. At the end of 1919 there were 20 central trade unions in the country with a combined membership of 223,588. A Federal Labor Bureau was established in 1921 with jurisdiction over all labor questions, including the drafting of bills regulating relations between employer and employee. The Bureau was designed to act also as an intermediary between the Swiss government and the labor organizations of the League of Nations. In 1918 there were 9317 factories, including 1222 watch establishments with 46,500 employees, of whom some 25,000 were male. The railway mileage of Switzerland in 1920 was 3381, besides 34 miles of foreign railways in the Confederation. The state railways are being electrified. In 1920 the foreign trade of Switzerland included: imports valued at $712,777,052, and exports, valued at $550,553,435. In 1921 the revenue of the government was estimated at £14,333,600, and the expenditure at £20,937,600. The public debt of the country, exclusive of the railway debt, amounted on 1 January, 1921, to £84,234,264, mostly at 5 per cent. The floating debt was £10,280,000. The total debt was thus £74,514,264.

DEFENCE.—Switzerland depends for defence on a national militia; service being compulsory and universal. The number of soldiers in peace time is about 140,000. In 1920 the military budget was £1,930,989.

The position of Switzerland in the Great European War (1914), completely surrounded by belligerent Powers, was one of great difficulty. The nation as a whole was extremely anxious to maintain neutrality, though in their sympathies the Swiss people were sharply divided. The country suffered acutely from economic difficulties. Besides maintaining its army on a war footing for the duration of the war, Switzerland became a clearing house for the refugees, wounded, and prisoners of the belligerents, while exiled monarchs and international diplomats made it their headquarters. After the Revolution in Germany, the small districts of Busingen, Jestelten, and Lottstalten in Baden declared themselves united to the canton of Schaffhausen. In the popular referendum held on 15 May, 1920, 11½ cantons voted for and 10½ against joining the League of Nations. The popular vote favored it by 400,000 to 300,000.

Sydney, ARCHDIOCESE OF (SYDNEYENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—365b), in Australia. In 1917, 12 parishes were separated from the archdiocese to help form the new diocese of Wagga-Wagga. In 1921 the centenary of the foundation of the church in Australia was solemnly celebrated at Sydney, the hierarchy of Australasia attending. On 8 June, 1913, the Archbishops of Sydney and Melbourne laid the foundation stone of the new cathedral and £11,000 were subscribed on that day. It is hoped that the work will be completed in five years. The archdiocese is in a flourishing condition, due in great part to the zeal and energy of its present administrator, Most Rev. Michael Kelly. He was b. at Waterford, Ireland, 13 Feb., 1850, ordained 1 Nov., 1872, rector of the Irish College at Rome, 1891, elected titular Archbishop of Achrida 16 July, 1901, and coadjutor of the archdiocese of Sydney, consecrated 15 Aug. following, succeeding the late Cardinal Moran, 16 Aug., 1911. In his episcopate was founded the Apostolic Delegation in Australia, Mgr. Cerretti being the first delegate. According to the statistics of 1922 the archdiocese contains 86 parishes, 177 churches, 156 secular priests, 105 regulars, 270 brothers, 1668 nuns. There are 3 seminaries in the archdiocese with 182 seminarians. Educational institutions are: 43 high schools, 369 teachers, 5345 students; 144 elementary schools, 705 teachers, 34,932 pupils. No census of the Catholic population has been taken since 1911. The following institutions exist in the archdiocese: 2 homes (1 conducted by the Little Sisters of the Poor, 1 for infirm priests), 9 hospitals, 3 refuges. All the public institutions admit the ministry of priests. Hospitals receive small donations from the government. There are two Catholic weekly newspapers: the "Catholic Press" and the "Freeman's Journal." The official records of the war show that Catholics enlisted in proportion to the population. Chaplains were sent from time to time with the different divisions. Two of them were decorated with the Officer Order of the British Empire.

Sylvestrines (cf. C. E., XIV—372d).—The Congregation of Sylvestrines is formed by several monasteries swjuris; and has a superior general, who, with a procurator general and a secretary general form the governing body. They are elected for six years only by the capitular Fathers assembled in general chapter. There is no vicar general. The mother-house of the congregation is the Monastery of St. Sylvester on Monte Fano, though the superior general resides at the monastery of St. Stephen on Monte Cacco. Revised constitutions of the congregation were confirmed by Alexander VIII in 1690, but the present constitutions are those approved by Gregory XVI, 4 May, 1838. The monasteries in Portugal are entirely extinguished. Those in Brazil were ruled by a vicar, but owing to the difficulties of communication and local differences, in the course of time they passed over to the Cassinese Congregation of Benedictines, under which some of them still exist. There were formerly monasteries of Sylvestrine Nuns, which, however, have ceased to exist. Among the saints of the congregation are: Simonettus, Philip of Recanato, Paulinus Bigazzini of Perugia, Bonapara Ghisleri of Jesi, John the Solitary, Benvenuto of Arcevia, Simon of Roccacontrada, Bartholomew a Cingulo, and many others. The principal records of the congregation are still in manuscript in the general archives.

Synod (cf. C. E., XIV—388a).—Under the new regime a diocesan synod is to be held in each diocese at least every tenth year, to treat exclusively of the special needs of the clergy and laity of the diocese. It can be convoked only by the bishop or by the vicar general if specially delegated, but not by the vicar capitular, and is to be held ordinarily in the cathedral. The following persons are to be invited and must attend—if they are unable to be present they must inform the bishop of their inability: the vicar general; the cathedral canons or diocesan consultors; the rector of the higher diocesan seminary; the vicars forane; a representative of each collegiate church, chosen by its chapter from among its members; the parish priests of the city in which the synod is being held; at least one parish from each vicariate forane, chosen from among those who are charged there with the cure of souls; abbots de regimine; and of the superiors of each clerical order or congregation in the diocese, appointed by the provincial, unless when the provincial house is in the diocese and the provincial himself prefers to attend. The bishop may, if he pleases, invite all the religious superiors and any of the secular priests; he can punish any of those who neglect to be present after being summoned, except exempt religious not acting as parish priests. Those who attend have merely a consultative vote, the bishop being the sole legislator; he alone signs the synodal constitutions, which, if promulgated in the synod, begin to bind ipso facto, unless the contrary is expressly provided. In each diocese there are to be selected not more than twelve priests skilled in canon law, who need not belong to the diocese, to whom the bishop is to delegate power to act as judges; the bishop decides the number that ought to be appointed and submits the names to the synod for its approval; if between synods any vacancies occur the bishop can fill them after consulting the cathedral chapter; the former judges are called synodal; the latter pro-synodal, but they are otherwise identified in the eyes of the law. They hold office ordinarily until the next synod, but may be re-appointed and may not be removed by the bishop except for grave cause and after consulting the cathedral chapter. The Code does not mention any obligation on the part of the bishop to send the names of the judges to Rome, as was formerly the case.

Syon Abbey (cf. C. E., XIV—394c).—On 21 April, 1920, the fifth centenary of the first profession of monks and nuns of the Bridgettine monastery of Syon was celebrated. In honor of this event Pope Benedict XV restored to the monastery of Syon its former privileges of perpetual abbacy and solemn vows. On 4 May, the anniversary of the canonical election of the first abbess of Syon, Rev. Dame Mary Teresa Jocelyn was blessed and installed by the Bishop of Plymouth.

Syra, DIOCESE OF (SYRENSIS, cf. C. E., XIV—395a), one of the Cyclades Islands in the Greek Archipelago, suffragan to the Archdiocese of Naxos and Tinos. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Anthony Macrioniti, succeeded to the see in 1912 upon the promotion of Bishop Darmanin to the Archdiocese of Corfu. He was born in Smyrna in 1853, studied at the College of Propaganda, and was chancellor of the Archdiocese of Smyrna until his appointment as bishop. The Catholic population of this island numbers about 10,000, living mostly in the old town or in a few outlying villages. There are a commercial school for boys conducted by the Christian Brothers—and an academy under the Vincentian Nuns, who also conduct a hospital. The Capuchin Fathers have had a residence and church here since the Seventeenth Century, and the Jesuits have been established on the island since the Eighteenth Century. The 1920 statistics credit it with 25 secular and 6 regular clergy, and 20 churches or chapels.

Syracuse, DIOCESE OF (SYRACUSENSIS, cf. C. E., XIV—397c), in the state of New York, suffragan of New York. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. John Grimes, b. at Lisnagrey, Ireland, 25 Jan., 1856, ordained 19 Feb., 1882, rector of the cathedral of Syracuse, elected titular bishop of Himeria, 1 Feb., 1909, and coadjutor bishop of Syracuse, published 29 April, consecrated 16 May following, succeeded the Rt. Rev. Patrick Ludden, 6 Aug., 1912. The diocese contains 98 parishes, 137 churches, 39 missions, 5 convents for men, 6 for women, 483 Sisters, 143 secular priests, 18 regulars, 4 lay brothers, 25 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries of other dioceses. The educational institutions include: 11 high schools, average attendance 946 (402 boys, 544 girls); 3 academies with 43 teachers, average attendance 579 (boys 321, girls 258); 34 elementary schools with 430 teachers, attendance 16,344. The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 8 hospitals, 5 settlement houses, 1 home at Syracuse called the Ludden Home for Working Girls. Regular Sunday services are held at nine public institutions. Associations existing among the clergy are: Eucharistic League, Clerical Fund, Society for Infirm Priests. Among the laity: Knights of Columbus, Catholic Welfare, Society of St. Vincent de Paul and the usual Catholic societies. A paper called "The Catholic Sun" is published at Syracuse.

Syria (cf. C. E., XIV—405a).—While four of the Catholic Oriental Rites have archbishops in Syria, the Latins are organized in the Vicariate Apostolic of Aleppo. This flourishing vicariate was almost ruined during the war. Most of the missionaries, including the Sisters, were expelled; almost all the churches, schools, colleges, and other institutions were closed or taken over by the Turkish Government. The few workers who remained were helpless to stay the devastation. After the armistice in 1918, the missionaries and Sisters began to return to undertake the work of restoration; but even in 1922 not all the vicariate has been blessed with peace, Christians are still being slaughtered, especially in parts of Cilicia and Northern Syria, where six of the Fathers had already been slain. Most of the faithful, abandoning everything, have followed the French forces into exile. The Vicar Apostolic of Aleppo is ex-officio Apostolic Delegate to Syria. The present incumbent Mgr. Frediano Giannini, titular Bishop of Serres, was born at Bozzano in the diocese of Lucca, Italy, on 16 June, 1861; he joined the Friars Minor on 8 August, 1876, was professed on 22 November, 1881, ordained on 21 December, 1883; he was appointed custodian of the Holy Land, and on 19 January, 1905, named vicar apostolic and Apostolic Delegate. In March, 1920, he was decorated with the Cross of the Commanders of the Légion d'Honneur by General Gouraud in the name of the French Government. In 1921 the vicariate comprised 28 quasi-parishes and missions, 49 houses of clerical religious, 15 of lay religious, and 90 of Sisters; there are 170 priests, all regulars, 130 Brothers and 669 Sisters of different congregations. There are about 7600 Catholics of the Latin Rite and 635,000 of various Eastern Rites.

The Jesuit University at Beirut has faculties of philosophy, theology, medicine, science, Oriental letters, law, architecture. The university and college have about 1000 students. Annexed to the university is a seminary for students of various Eastern Rites with thirty-four seminarians. The university astronomical observatory is located at Ksara on Mount Lebanon. The faculties of law and architecture are dependent on the University of Lyons, and the faculty of medicine belongs to the French Government; but all three are under the direction of the Jesuits who have the appointment of the professors. In addition in 1919-20 there were 15 colleges for boys with 3630 pupils, and 10 for girls with 2230 pupils; 120 elementary schools for boys with 10,016 pupils, and 64 for girls with 11,284 pupils; today (1922) the pupils number over 30,000; finally there is a normal school for men, and one for women. Most of the teachers in the schools, most of which are aided by the French Government, are religious, while the remaining teachers are dependent on them. The different Catholic Oriental Rites have also colleges, schools, and institutions of their own; but the Latin schools receive pupils of all rites, and even schismatics and infidels. The Catholic orphanages contain more than 1000 children, who, in addition to an elementary education, receive suitable manual and technical training. There are 3 founding asylums; various dispensaries; 3 hospitals; numerous ouvroirs or workrooms, where poor girls can get suitable employment; 1 home for the aged; numerous religious sodalities for boys, girls, men and women, with thousands of members; conferences of St. Vincent de Paul in most of the larger cities; workingmen's societies; circles for the young; catechetical societies. Provision is made for giving the spiritual exercises to ecclesiastics and the faithful, especially Orientals. The Jesuits at Beirut have an excellent printing press, where they publish the journal "Al-Bachir" and the periodical, "Al-Machreq," both in Arabic.

Capuchin Mission.—The Capuchin Syrian mission was established as early as 1825. Its present superior is Fr. Jerome de Lyons. The Fathers have charge of six quasi-parishes or missionary districts at Beirut, Mersina, Antioch, Tarsus, Baaldath and Khodulek; with 10 churches and 7 stations, 30 Franciscan Third Order sodalities with 2850 tertiaries. They have organized and now direct 29 charitable institutions—refuges, work-rooms, sanatoriums, and especially orphanages—with 4700 inmates or beneficiaries. In 1910 they had 106 schools with 6000 pupils; as a sequel to the war they have had to curtail their efforts in this field, but they have already 24 schools—3 of which are colleges—with 62 teachers and 335 students. All the schools and institutions receive Government aid.

Sao-chwan, EASTERN; VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (So-ciensis orientalis; cf. C. E., XIV—419a), with residence at Chiong-King-fu, China, is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Celestin-Felix-Joseph Phouvelkon, titular bishop of Dansara, to which see he was elected on his appointment to this vicariate in 1891. The mission reports for 1920-1921 a Christian population of 58,102, 64 parishes and 729 mission stations, 103 secular priests, 37 of whom are French and 66 Chinese; 4 Brothers, 53 Sisters, of whom 7 are Europeans; 211 schools for boys with 4168 pupils and 159 for girls with 3116 pupils. There are a theological seminary with 25 seminarians and a lower seminary with 60 students, and a probatorium with 45 students. There are a Carmelite convent with 10 nuns, a hospital conducted by the Franciscan Missionaries of Mary (7 Sisters), 1 native convent of the Sacred Heart with 41 Sisters, who conduct 2 hospitals; 1 home for aged women, with 102 inmates, 2 orphanages with 394 orphans. "La Vente" a weekly published in Chinese with a supplement in French, has about 2000 subscribers. A printing press with bindery attached issues Chinese and French books.

Székesfehérvár (GERMAN STUHLWEISSENBURG, DIOCESE OF ALBAEREGALENSIS, cf. C. E., XIV—317b), in Hungary, suffragan of Esztergom. The present bishop of Székesfehérvár is Dr. Ottokar Prohászka, famous preacher and leader of the Hungarian Catholic movement, b. at Nyitra 10 October, 1858, professor of theology in the University of Budapest, elected bishop 11 December, 1905, consecrated in Rome by Pius X, 21 December following, succeeding Mgr. Varosy, promoted to Kalocsa. The Catholic population of 289,772 is for the most part Hungarian; about 3000 are either German or Slavonic. Hospitals were erected during the World War and equipped with the necessary furnishings and provided with ample food for the care of the inmates. Among the recently deceased of note is Ferdinand Zichy, founder of a political faction that defended the cause of Catholicism in the public assemblies. There are 146 secular and 33 regular priests and 12 lay brothers; 99 parishes, and 132 churches; 6 monasteries for men, and 1 for women; 1 seminary; 2 colleges for boys with 4 teachers and 78 students, and 3 for girls with 9 teachers and 132 students; 1 high school with 14 teachers and 270 boys students; 147 normal schools with 268 teachers and 20,738 pupils; 3 industrial schools with 23 teachers and 400 pupils; 1 hospital; 2 orphanages; 1 day nursery. The Government supports the Catholic institutions liberally and all the public schools and gymnasia admit religious instruction. The clergy have an association for mission work; and among the laity there is a popular Catholic organization. One Catholic daily is published.

Szombathely or (STEINAMANGER), DIOCESE OF (SABARIENSIS), suffragan of Esztergom in Hungary. Szombathely was an episcopal see even before the invasion of the Huns, but King St. Stephen gave it to the Bishop of Veszprem and, in 1777, the see was reconstituted. The present incumbent is Count John Mikes von Zabola, born at Zabola, Diocese of Transylvania, 27 June, 1876, elected 11 December, 1911. Bishop Mikes was imprisoned in Budapest during the Bela Kuhn regime in 1919 and rescued by Catholic railroad workers. In the diocese there are 463,511 Catholics, 194 parishes, 711 churches, and stations, 5 abbeys and 6 titular abbots, 2 titular provosts, 8 monasteries for men and 20 for women with 288 members, 1 seminary with 42 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 2 teachers and 70 students, 5 colleges for girls with 210 students, 423 elementary schools with 780 teachers and 63,607 pupils, 5 industrial schools, 3 homes for poor, 6 Catholic publications and various associations of the clergy and laity.

Tabasco, DIOCESE OF (TABASQUENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—423b), in the Republic of Mexico, suffragan of Yucatan, with episcopal residence at San Juan-Bautista. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio Hernandez, born in Tepijulco, 23 July, 1864, served as a canon of the Cathedral and vicar general of the diocese of Chilapa, and was appointed bishop 2 December, 1912, succeeding Rt. Rev. Leonardo Castellanos, app. 22 March, 1908, d. 19 May, 1912. The diocese embraces a population of about 100,000. No recastati

Tacambaro, DIOCESE OF (TACAMBARENSIS), in Mexico, erected by a decree of 29 July, 1913, which took seven parishes from the diocese of Michoacan and 16 from Zamora and formed them into the new diocese. However, on account of political troubles the diocese was not really organized until recently, when the first bishop was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Leopoldo Lara, 23 December, 1920. He was born in Quiroga, diocese of Michoacan in 1875 and was serving as a pastor there when he received his appointment. Statistics for the diocese are not yet published.

Tahiti, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (INSULARUM TAHITI; cf. C. E., XIV—430a), comprises the most important of the Society Islands. It is entrusted to the missionaries of Picpus and has its episcopal residence at Papeete. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. André-Athanase Hermel, appointed titular Bishop of Casium and coadjutor to the former vicar 15 May, 1905, succeeding as vicar in March, 1908. According to 1920 statistics the vicariate comprises a total population of 39,230, of whom 7770 are Catholic, 29,760 Protestants (of whom many are Mormons), and 1700 Pagans. The mission is served by 30 missionary priests, 2 lay brothers, 15 Brothers of Ploërmel, 80 catechists, 54 churches or chapels, 22 Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, 1 school for boys, 3 schools for girls, and 13 schools for both boys and girls.

Taigi, ANNA MARIA, BLESSED. See ANNA MARIA TAIGI, BLESSED

Taiku, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE TAIKOU; cf. C. E., XVI—85b), was formerly part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Corea. By a decree of 8 April, 1911, the northern part was taken to form the Vicariate Apostolic of Taiku, and entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. Rt. Rev. Florian-Jean-Baptiste Demange, of this congregation was named the first Vicar Apostolic, and appointed titular Bishop of Adrassus, 8 April, 1911. The vicariate takes its name from the city of Taiku where the episcopal residence is situated. By latest statistics, 1920-21, the total Catholic population of this territory numbers 30,672; it has 17 European missionaries, 7 native priests, 7 Catechists, 2 European Sisters and 11 native Sisters, 15 districts, 71 churches and chapels, 403 mission stations, 27 schools for boys with 734 pupils, 5 schools for girls with 364 pupils and 119 orphaned infants receiving care. During the year the sacraments were administered as follows: 405 adults baptized after receiving instruction, 303 aulted baptized at the point of death, 1533 children of Christian parents and 1310 children of Pagans baptized when dying; annual confessions, 20,828; confessions repeated 52,749; Easter communions, 20,360; communions repeated, 174,424; confirmations, 365; marriages, 301; extreme-unctions, 421; and holy viatica, 282. At the close of the year the vicariate counted 528 catechumens.

Tamaulipas (or CIUDAD VICTORIA), DIOCESE OF (TAMAULIPANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—440c), comprises the Mexican State of the same name and seven parishes in the State of Vera Cruz, suffragan of Linars. The present bishop is Mgr. José Guadalupe Ortiz, b. at Momax, diocese of Zacatecas, 12 December, 1867, elected 24 January, 1919, and consecrated 18 June following, to succeed Mgr. Guzman, deceased. The revolution impeded to a great extent the progress of the Church in this state. The episcopal residence is at Ciudad Victoria, the capital of Tamaulipas. The Catholic population is given at 315,000 although the figures probably mean nominal Catholics. There are 30 parishes, 45 churches, 25 secular priests, 15 sisters, 4 colleges for girls with 20 teachers and 400 students, and 1 asylum.

Tananarive, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE TANANARIVE; cf. C. E. XVI—85b), in Madagascar, with residence at Tananarive. It comprises the territory formerly known as the Vicariate Apostolic of Central Madagascar. It is entrusted to the Society of Jesus, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Henri de Lespinasse de Saune, titular Bishop of Rhizus, appointed coadjutor to the Vicar Apostolic of Central Madagascar, Rt. Rev. Jean Baptiste Cazet 18 February, 1900, succeeding as vicar 30 August, 1911. The Franciscan Missionaries of Mary have arrived in the vicariate recently to work among the lepers. They have a novitiate here, as have also the Sisters of Providence of Corence, and have also founded a hospital at Tananarive. Mgr. Dantin, who was appointed to be the first Vicar Apostolic of Betafo, was consecrated here, his consecration being the first that has ever taken place in the capital of Madagascar. An upper seminary has been established for recruiting native clergy, and the Premonstratentian Fathers have been introduced into the territory to work in the region of Vatomandry. An organization for the native Catholic youth, "Knights of the Sacred Heart of Jesus," has been established, and a society of native religious under the patronage of St. Francis Xavier has been founded. A bi-monthly review is published in Malgache and a French monthly, "Messager du Sacré Cœur de Tananarive," is also published. During a recent epidemic one of the missionaries devoted himself entirely to caring for the needs of the stricken people. During the World War a number of the missionaries were mobilized and called to France and two were killed at the front. A number of the native Catholics also served in France and the Orient. At home the Catholics took an active part in all patriotic endeavors. Reverend Mother Zénaïde, superior of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny, and a missionary in Madagascar for almost fifty years, was given the Priz Lange, by the French Academy, and the government conferred upon her the medal of honor, gold medal of Madagascar and the rosette of an Officier d'Académie, in recognition of the signal services rendered to the sick and wounded of the French Army by her and her community, and for their devotion to the moral and religious progress of the Malgaches. The vicariate now (1922) counts a total of 108,000 baptized Catholics, 6 parishes in the city of Tananarive, 362 churches besides 50 houses where the faithful gather to practice the Faith, 12 convents of women, 44 missionary priests, 133 Sisters, 40 Brothers, 20 of whom are Brothers of the Christian Schools, 1 seminary, 35 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 290 students, 1 for girls, 119 elementary schools with 179 teachers and 17,702 pupils, 1 hospital, 10 homes, 12 workhouses and 6 orphanages. The two civil hospitals and 1 leprosy hospital admit the priests when it is requested. On 8 May, 1921, the feast of St. Joan of Arc was celebrated with great splendor in Tananarive.

Tanganika, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, in former German East Africa, now under a British mandate, confided to the White Fathers with residence at Notre Dame de Karema. The vicar apostolic is Mgr. Joseph-Marie Birraux, b. at Bernex, France, 27 November, 1883, novice at Maison Carrée, ordained at Carthage, 1908, missionary at Tanganika 1911. At the declaration of war the territory of the vicariate was a German colony and the missionaries were interned but were later given their liberty, probably through fear of the natives; they suffered great privations until the arrival of the English and Belgians. In 1919 Father Birraux was attacked by gripe and he left for Algiers on the advice of the doctor. Returning, he was elected vicar apostolic and titular bishop of Ombus 22 April, 1920, and was consecrated at Bernex 23 June following. The inhabitants of the district number about 3,000,000 negroes, 18,871 of whom are converted Catholics. There are 13 missions, 13 churches, 13 stations, 6 convents of women, 30 White Fathers, 10 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 65 seminarians, 4 of whom are in theological studies, 241 elementary schools with 255 teachers and 16,906 pupils.

Taranto, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TARENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—450c), in southern Italy. The see is filled by Most Rev. Orazio Mazzella, born in the diocese of Benevento in 1860, appointed titular Bishop of Cyme 11 February, 1896, promoted to the archdiocese of Rossano 24 March, 1898, made an assistant at the pontifical throne 15 February, 1901, and transferred to Taranto 14 April, 1917. He succeeded Most Rev. Giuseppe Cecchini, who filled the see from 1909 until his death, 17 December, 1916. The diocese comprises, according to latest statistics: 27 parishes, 335 churches, 1 monastery for women, 4 convents for men and 3 for women, 162 secular priests, 15 Brothers, 170 Sisters, 1 seminary, 10 seminarians, 1 higher school for boys with 40 students, 3 for girls with 150 students, 1 professional school with 4 teachers and 40 students, 6 elementary schools with 25 teachers and 1000 students, 2 homes, 4 asylums and 3 hospitals. One society is formed among the clergy and about 100 different associations are organized among the laity. Diocesan and inter-parochial bulletins are published. The population of the diocese numbers about 202,850.

Tarapacá, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XIV—415b), in Northern Chile. The present vicar is Mgr. José María Caro Rodríguez, born at Cahuil, diocese of Santiago de Chili, 15 November, 1866, studied at South American College, Rome, ordained 1890, elected titular bishop of Mylasa and Vicar Apostolic of Tarapacá 5 January, 1912, and consecrated 28 April, 1912. The episcopal residence is in the seaport city of Iquique, an important shipping point for nitrate, with a population of 47,000 (1918). In Iquique there are the mother church of the Immaculate Conception, three other parishes, and seven chapels. In the saltpetre district there are ten rural churches near the mines which the pastors visit periodically. One of these churches, that of Pica, has five dependent churches. In the Andes with an elevation of 2000 to 4500 meters above sea level there are four parish churches, one of which is San Lorenzo de Tarapacá. These churches from date colonial expansion of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries and their monuments and stone buildings recall a state of ancient grandeur. They owed their importance to the great traffic which resulted in the exploitation of these mines and those of Bolivia. Now these places, with the exception of Pica and succursals, are poor villages of Indians, who are farmers or shepherds. In the vicariate there are 110,000 inhabitants, 14 secular priests and 16 regulars (6 Franciscans, 8 Salesians, 2 Redemptorists); 7 lay brothers; Salesian Sisters, Oblates of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of the Good Shepherd, and Sisters of Charity of St. Joseph of Cluny; a "Colegio Don Bosco," of the Salesian Fathers, with 300 boys, a "Colegio de Maria Auxiliadora," of the Salesian Sisters with 300 girls; 5 elementary schools with 430 pupils, 1 orphanage, 1 House of Correction for women run by Sisters of Good Shepherd, partly supported by the Government; 1 hospital attended by the Sisters of St. Joseph of Cluny; La Reparación Sacerdotal and Hermanos de San Pedro for the clergy and numerous societies for the laity; "La Luz," a religious weekly and "Las Cuestiones Sociales," a social weekly, are published besides numerous leaflets and tracts of pious and social propaganda. The important events since 1912, besides the consecration of the vicar apostolic were the foundation of the Oblates of Sacred Heart and their chapel in the diocese, and the erection of a chapel of St. Peter in Cavancha, a suburb of Iquique.

Tarazona, DIOCESE OF (TIRSONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—452b), includes part of the provinces of Zaragoza, Sovia, Navarra and Logrono and is suffragan to Saragossa (Zaragoza), Spain. The bishop of Tarazona is administrator apostolic of the Diocese of Tudela, which has been suppressed since 1851. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Isidoro Badia y Serradell, b. at Isona, diocese of Urgel, 26 April, 1865, ordained 1890, elected titular bishop of Ascalon and auxiliary to the Cardinal Archbishop of Toledo 9 January, 1903, administrator of Barbastro, 3 July, 1907, transferred to Tarazona 27 July, 1917, to succeed Mgr. Oscoidi y Udave, deceased. Mgr. Jaime Oscoidi y Udave was born at Pamplona 30 December, 1850, studied at Calahorra and Pamplona, elected bishop of Tarazona 14 December, 1905, consecrated in Cathedral of Vitoria, July, 1906, to succeed Mgr. Salvador y Berrera, transferred; died 9 October, 1916. Bishop Oscoidi restored the church of La Magdalena, promoted the publication of unedited works of the Venerable Maria de Agreda and new corrected editions of her other writings, founded various burses in the seminary, helped the re-installation of a residence of Carmelites in Tarazona and the foundation of a College of the Augustinians at Agreda, Marist schools in Alfaro, and supported free schools for poor boys in Tarazona. The death occurred recently of Father Albericio, prebendary canon for sixty years, who wrote a Latin grammar and constructed a wagon-road up to the Sanctuary of Our Lady of Moncayo, situated on the mountain of that name, 1650 metres above the sea-level. The important happenings in the diocese since 1912 were the opening of the process of beatification of Fr. Ezequiel

Moreno, O. S. A., bishop of Pasto, who was born in Alfaro and died in Montegudo, both in this diocese; the translation of the remains of Venerable Sister Maria de Jesus de Agreda and the printing of her works, especially the celebrated "Mystic City of God;" and the process of Mother Vicenta, native of Cascante and founder of the Institute of Maria Immaculata for domestic service. There are in the diocese (1921), 144,500 Catholics, 147 parishes, 299 churches, 2 abbeys of women, 10 convents of men and 18 of women, 380 secular and 215 regular priests, 2 houses of Brothers, 670 Sisters, 1 seminary, 112 seminarians, 3 asylums, 12 hospitals, 5 refuges, and many organizations for clergy and laity in every parish. In every township there are schools maintained by the Government and in more important places colegios directed by religious. Five Catholic papers are published.

Tarbes and Lourdes, DIOCESE OF (TARBIENSIS ET LOURDENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—453b), in the department of Hautes-Pyrénées, France, suffragan of Auch. In consideration of the fact that the celebrated shrine of Lourdes is situated in this diocese, a decree of 20 April, 1912, united the name of Lourdes to the title of the see, but only as an honorary title, and not changing the episcopal residence. A bull of later date, 8 December, 1917, accorded the privilege of wearing the pallium to the bishop, but this privilege is only attached to the see of Lourdes. The present bishop, Rt. Rev. François-Xavier Schœpfner was born in Wettolsheim, in the diocese of Strasbourg in 1843, he served as pastor of St. Pierre de Gros-Cailhou in Paris, was named a prothonotary apostolic 1 June, 1888, and appointed bishop 14 December, 1899. Another special privilege was granted to the diocese in 1918 when a rescript of Rites dated 27 February gave permission for the celebration of the feast of the Immaculate Conception in the churches of Lourdes on 25 March, 1918, the sixtieth anniversary of the sixteenth apparition of Our Lady, in spite of the fact Holy Thursday fell on this date. The diocese embraces a Catholic population of 206,105; 28 first-class parishes, 300 succursal parishes, 133 vicariates, 647 secular priests, 1 upper seminary, 5 ecclesiastical institutes, 2 houses of retreat and 17 convents of women.

Tarentaise, DIOCESE OF (TARANTAISSENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—454a), in the department of Savoie, France, suffragan of Chambéry, with episcopal residence at Moutiers. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Louis Termier, born in Chambéry, 2 February, 1860, ordained in 1884, served as a professor in Paris and Chambéry, then as superior of the lower seminary of St. Pierre d'Albigny in October, 1894, pastor and archpriest of Aix-les-Bains, named an honorary canon in 1909 and appointed 29 November, 1918, succeeding Rt. Rev. Jean-Baptiste Biollet, app. 16 December, 1907, d. 10 October, 1918. The diocese embraces a Catholic population of 68,000; 7 first class and 79 succursal parishes, and 22 vicariates formerly supported by the state.

Tarnow, DIOCESE OF (TARNOVIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—458c), in Western Galicia, Poland, formerly a part of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. The see, suffragan of Lwow, is now filled by Rt. Rev. Léon Wallega, born in Moszczenice in the diocese of Przemyśl in 1859, ordained in 1883 and appointed bishop 15 April, 1901. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Edward Komar, appointed titular Bishop of Alinda 16 June, 1921. A decree of the Consistory of 30 August, 1921, changed the boundary line of the diocese on the side of Przemyśl. By latest statistics the diocese has a Catholic population of 823,936; 21 deaneries, 181 parishes, 43 filial parishes, 452 secular and 66 regular clergy, 10 convents and 620 religious women scattered through 117 houses.

Tarragona, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TARRACONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—459b), in Catalonia, Spain. The present archbishop is Cardinal Francisco de Asis Vidal y Barraquer, born in the archdiocese at Cambrils, 3 October, 1868, studied at Manresa, at the law school in Barcelona, and the Seminary of Tarragona, ordained 1899, elected titular bishop of Pentacomia and administrator of Solsona, 25 May, 1914, promoted to the archbishopric 7 May, 1919, and created cardinal priest 7 March, 1921, with the title of Santa Sabina. His predecessor was Mgr. Antolin Lopez y Pelaez, born at Manzanar del Puerto, Diocese of Astorga, 31 August, 1866, priest 1889, elected Bishop of Jaca, 14 November, 1904, consecrated at Burgos, 4 April, 1905, promoted to Tarragona, 18 July, 1913, died 23 December, 1918. Mgr. Lopez y Pelaez was a member of the Senate and, from 1913, of the Royal Academy of Spain. On the fourth centenary of the birth of St. Teresa he pronounced a discourse at the celebration. In 1914 he founded a museum for the diocese of Tarragona, which dates from Apostolic times. The Catholic population numbers 210,000 and the diocese includes 268 parishes, 600 churches, 20 monasteries for men and 70 for women, 1 abbey for men and 1 for women, 827 secular and 256 regular priests, 3 seminaries, 206 seminarians, 80 lay brothers, 560 Sisters, 1 university with 69 professors and 700 students, 21 colegios for boys with 6000 students and 24 for girls with 4100 students, 10 high schools with 200 boys, 3 academies, 2 normal and 28 elementary schools, 2 homes for aged poor, 9 asylums, 3 refuges, 5 charity centers, 3 day nurseries, 14 organizations among clergy and 17 among laity. Four Government institutions admit the ministry of priests and 17 Catholic institutions receive Government aid. Four periodicals (2 dailies and 2 weeklies) are published.

Taubaté, DIOCESE OF (TAUBATENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—465b), in the state of São Paulo, Brazil, is still filled by its first Bishop Rt. Rev. Epaminondas Nunes de Avila e Silva. It extends over an area of 7722 square miles and according to 1920 statistics has a total population of 400,000; 39 parishes, 5 congregations of men and 5 of women.

Teano, DIOCESE OF. SEE CALVI AND TEANO

Teffé, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE TEFFÉ; cf. C. E., XVI—69b), in Brazil, was erected by a decree of 23 May, 1910, which separated it, together with the Prefecture Apostolic of Upper Sohmaes, from the Diocese of Amazonas or Manaos. The first mission was established in this territory by Rev. Father Libermann in June, 1907, at Teffé, a little town of 600 inhabitants about 350 miles from Manaos. A site "Bocca do Teffé," was donated to the missionaries by the State authorities, and a large orphanage and industrial school for young Indians was erected upon it. No further aid however has been received from the Government since 1900. The first prefect apostolic, Rt. Rev. Michel-Alfred Barat, C.S.Sp., born in Crouzille, France, in 1864, came to the mission of the Amazonas in 1906, served as a teacher in the industrial school at Paricatuba from 1906-1908, and was named prefect apostolic in August, 1910. Although the territory comprised in this prefecture extends over miles it includes only four municipalities, Teffé, Fonte-Boa on the Solimoes, Carauary and San Felipe, embracing a population of 35,000. The work of the missionaries is chiefly among the mulatto "rubberers," and Indian fishers or hunters, who live in the forests on the banks of the Japura, Jutaby and Juma. By a decree of 10 September, 1921, the boundaries on the side of the Upper Sclimoes were somewhat changed. Tefé, Fonte-Boa and San Felipe have resident vicars, two other missionaries are charged with the orphanage and industrial school, and a third acts as rector of the seminary at Tefé. This seminary was established in 1920, and the following year a college for boys was added to it, and plans are being made to have Brothers established here in 1923. The only priest from this territory ordained yet, is Rev. Manuel Alemar, a former pupil of the industrial school, ordained in Paris in 1913. Rev. Constant Tastemin, secretary to the Prefect, is noted for his knowledge of languages as well as his geographical and ethnographical studies. In 1920 he received a gold medal from the Paris Geographical Society and in 1922 a dictionary and grammar of the Tupy language, published in Vienna twelve years before, was translated and published by the Museum of São Paulo, in Brazil. He has made numerous collections of the vocabularies of the many native languages, and placed them in the hands of Monsieur Rivet, a professor in the Paris Museum, for future publication. By latest statistics the territory has three parishes, 5 churches, 6 missions, 2 mission stations, 2 convents of men, 1 secular and 10 regular clergy (Fathers of the Holy Ghost), 1 seminary, 5 seminarians, 4 higher schools for boys, 1 professional school with 10 teachers and 40 students, 2 elementary schools with 2 teachers and 45 pupils. Four of the schools receive assistance from the Government, two organizations are formed among the laity and a bi-monthly bulletin, "O Missionario," is published.

Teggiano, DIOCESE OF. SEE DIANO

Tegucigalpa, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TEGUCIGALPENSIS) in the Republic of Honduras, Central America. The entire Republic of Honduras was erected into the diocese of Comayagua in 1561, but by a Decree of 2 February, 1916, it was divided into three parts, and the eastern part was made the Archdiocese of Tegucigalpa. It comprises the civil provinces of Voro, Comayagua, La Paz, Valle, Tegucigalpa, Choluteca, El Paraiso and Oloucho. By the same Decree the western part of the old diocese was formed into the new diocese of Santa Rosa de Capán, and the northern part became the Vicariate Apostolic of San Pedro Sula. The new diocese and the vicariate are suffragans of Tegucigalpa. Most Reverend Jaime-María Martínez y Cabanas, born in Honduras, 12 November, 1842, appointed Bishop of Comayagua, 30 January, 1902, was promoted to be first archbishop of Tegucigalpa by the Decree of erection. Upon his death, 11 August, 1921, the government ordered that he should be buried with military honors, and that three days of public mourning should be observed. His successor has not yet been appointed (1922), and no statistics are published for the archdiocese.

Tehuantepec, DIOCESE OF (TEHUANTEPECENSIS) cf. C. E., XIV—473c; in the State of Oaxaca, Mexico, suffragan of Antequera. By a decree of 1 August, 1919, the canton of Tuxtla in the State of Vera Cruz was added to the diocese. This new territory adds about 27,000 miles to the diocese and comprises 9 cities and 500 villages, with a total population of 200,000. The episcopal residence has been transferred to San Andrés Tuxtla, and this change having been approved in 1920, one of the parochial churches of this city has been erected into a temporary cathedral, awaiting the construction of a new cathedral. The city and the whole diocese are dedicated to St. Andrew the Apostle, and the Immaculate Conception. The parish churches number 32, of which only 22 have resident priests, a great scarcity of clergy having been caused by the revolutionary decree which expelled all foreigners. In addition to these churches are a number of public sanctuaries and chapels, making in all about 150. Before the Revolution three schools for girls were conducted by the Josephine Sisters, and a school under the Marist Brothers was established at Tehuantepec. All of these schools, with the exception of one, have been suppressed since 1914, and this one is in course of suppression by being converted from a Catholic to a lay school. A preparatory school for boys destined for the seminary is conducted in the new episcopal residence, and a school for girls is to be added to this and entrusted to the Sisters. The seminary, which was founded in 1912, had four professors and 130 students distributed through four courses, but in 1914 the military authorities converted it into a hospital. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Ignacio Placencia y Moreira, born at Zapopan in the diocese of Guadalajara in 1867, studied at the seminary in that diocese and later served as a professor there, was made a pastor in 1904, became secretary to the bishop, then prebendary canon of the cathedral, and was appointed bishop 15 September, 1907.

Teleso (OR CERRETO-SANNITA), DIOCESE OF (THELESINENSIS OR CERRETANENSIS) cf. C. E., XIV—476d, in the province of Benevento, Southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento, with episcopal residence at Cerreto-Sannita. Rt. Rev. Angelo-Michele Jannachino, appointed to this see 29 November, 1895, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Losen 12 January, 1918. His successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Giuseppe Signore, born in Monteroni in 1872, made a canon and rector of the seminary, and appointed bishop 20 June, 1918. By latest statistics the diocese comprises 24 parishes, 72 churches, 8 monasteries for men, 6 for women; 71 secular priests and 8 regulars, 70 Sisters, 1 seminary, 98 seminarians, 1 higher school for girls with 4 teachers and 22 pupils, 1 home, 7 asylums and 1 refuge. One association is organized among the clergy and two among the laity. During the World War all the clergy and laity of the diocese took an active part, either in the ranks, or in charitable and patriotic works at home.

Teniskaming, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. SEE HAILEYBURY, DIOCESE OF

Teneriffe (OR SAN CRISTOBAL DE LAGUNA), DIOCESE OF (TENERIPENSIS OR SANCTI CHRISTOPHORI DE LAGUNA) cf. C. E., XIV—507a, comprises the Islands of Teneriffe, Gomera, La Palma and Hierro in the Canaries. It is a suffragan of Seville and has its episcopal residence at Santa-Cruz. Rt. Rev. Nicolas Rey y Redondo, appointed to this see 21 May, 1894, died 6 September, 1917, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Gabriel Llompart y Santandreu, born in Inca in the Balearic Islands in 1862, appointed bishop 17 May, 1918. The diocese has a Catholic population of 260,707 and by 1920 statistics counts 184 parishes, divided among 10 archpresbyteries, 104 priests, 60 churches, 184 chapels and 18 convents with 52 religious and 229 Sisters.

Tennessee (cf. C. E., XIV—508b).—The area of the State of Tennessee is 42,022 square miles. In 1920 the population was 2,337,885, an increase of 7% since 1910. Of this, 26.1% was urban; 73.9% was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 56.1, as against 52.4 in 1910. Besides the 1208 civil districts, there are also 236 secondary divisions, comprising 28 cities, 202 towns, and 6 villages. The largest cities are: Memphis 162,351; Nashville 118,342; Knoxville 77,818; Chattanooga 57,895. Of the entire population (1,173,967 males and 1,163,918 females), there are 1,885,993 whites and 451,758 negroes (222,758 males and 229,119 females). The native whites numbered 1,870,515 and the foreign born, 15,478. Most of the foreign born came from England, Germany, Ireland, Italy, and Russia. Of the population of ten years of age and over (1,770,762) 182,629 were illiterate (10.3% as against 13.6 in 1910).

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Tennessee is forging ahead agriculturally, the number of farms (252,774), showing an increase of .27 % since 1910, and the value of farm property ($1,251,964,585), an increase of 104.4%. In these farms were included 19,510,856 acres, of which 11,185,302 were in improved land. The value of the live stock, including 317,921 horses, 352,510 mules, 1,161,846 cattle, 346,196 sheep, was $173,522,135. The chief crops were: corn 70,639,252 bushels, worth $127,150,649; wheat 6,362,357 bushels, worth $14,506,174; hay 967,314 tons, $29,666,979; tobacco 112,367,567 pounds, worth $24,720,869; cotton 306,974 bales, worth $48,808,866; sugar 146,734 tons, worth $9,537,710. The dairy, poultry, eggs, honey, and wax were worth $50,406,776. Peanuts are grown in the Tennessee Valley. The wool clip in 1919 was 2,052,000 pounds. Although the number of manufacturing establishments (4589) showed in 1919 a decrease of 3.9% since 1914, the value of the products ($556,271,000) revealed an increase of 179%. The 113,418 persons engaged in manufacture received for their services $106,690,000; the capital invested was $410,351,000. The productions of the mines were: coal $13,592,998; phosphates $2,101,040; iron $10,338,159; clay products, $1,960,226; limestone $504,599; stone $1,635,573; all others $17,840,520; aggregating $46,012,889. The Mississippi and Tennessee Rivers are natural waterways and the State contains 4075 miles of railway, besides 467 miles of electric railway. The bonded debt, including old bonds unfunded, on 13 June, 1919, amounted to $17,988,352. The assessed value of property in the same year, including real and personal property, was $726,369,281.

RELIGION.—According to the Census Bulletin of 1916 the church membership of all denominations was 840,133; total Protestant bodies 817,118; Baptists South and National 311,517; Regular Baptists 2582; Free Will Baptists 4681; Duck River, etc. (Baptist Church of Christ) 4589; Primitive Baptists 8925; Colored Primitive Baptists 811; Congregationalists 2185; Disciples of Christ 21,672; Churches of Christ 63,521; Lutherans 3541; Methodist Episcopal 56,484; Methodist Protestant 1759; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 167,270; African Methodists 23,497; Presbyterian Church in U. S. A. 17,584; Cumberland Presbyterians 27,631; Presbyterian Church in U. S. 25,606; Presbyterian Association Reformed of the South Synod 1644; Protestant Episcopal Church 9910; United Brethren in Christ 916; all other Protestant bodies 74,115; Catholic Church 23,015; Jewish Congregations 2022. For Catholic statistics see NASHVILLE, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—School attendance is now compulsory during the entire term for children between 7 and 16 years of age. The employment of children under 14 years of age in workshops, factories and mines is illegal. With a scholastic population of 842,199, of which 681,470 are whites and 160,710 are colored, there were (1920) enrolled in the public schools of Tennessee 443,333 white children and 80,356 negroes. There are separate schools for whites and negroes. In 1918 the State had 7313 public elementary schools, and 226 public high schools. The two public normal schools had 71 teachers and 914 pupils. In 1917-18 the expenditure was $12,480,163. Bible reading in the public schools is obligatory. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: The legislature shall exempt from taxation such property as may be held and used for purposes purely religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational (11-28). The flag must be displayed on or near each school building. In 1919 a State board of administration was created to consist of the governor, state treasurer, and the general manager of state institutions, and to have charge of all state institutions, penal, reformatory, and charitable. "Victory Day," 11 November, was made a legal holiday. In the same year a department of university extension to be conducted by the University of Tennessee was established for the purpose of vocational and industrial training in wage earning employments. Provision was also made for the removal of the State Training and Agricultural School for Boys to the "Herbert Domain" and of the inmates of the Tennessee Industrial School to the state-owned property in Davidson County, now occupied by the State Training and Agricultural School for Boys. The East Tennessee Female Institute was transferred to the State University.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—In 1913 were passed an Act providing for the parole of convicts, a measure removing the disabilities of married women on account of coverture and a Vital Statistics Act. In 1914 a so-called nuisance bill had for its purpose the closing of every saloon, gambling house, and disreputable resort in the State, by providing that no liquor could be sold within four miles of a school. In 1917 prohibition became more effective, by a law forbidding the importation of liquor into the State. In 1915 it was shown that the experiment of working the negro convicts on State roads was successful enough to warrant its continuance. The contract system of letting out prison labor to private contractors was forbidden. In 1919 pensions were granted to widows whose husbands were killed or died while in active service in the Civil War and to the widows of deceased soldiers who were married to such soldiers prior to the year 1890, if such widows are of good moral character and in indigent circumstances. The annual appropriation for the purpose is $1,029,000. Capital punishment was abolished in 1915. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 18 August, 1920; the prohibition amendment on 8 January, 1919.

During the European War the State contributed 75,825 soldiers to the United States Army (2.02%). The Tennessee members of the national guard joined the 30th Division at Camp Sevier, South Carolina; those of the national army, the 82d Division at Camp Gordon, Georgia. The summary of casualties among the Tennessee members of the American Expeditionary Forces is as follows: deceased, 74 officers, 1762 men; prisoners, 7 officers, 54 men; wounded, 228 officers, 4065 men.

TEPIC, DIOCESE OF (TEPICENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—513c), in the territory of Tepic, Mexico, suffragan of Guadalajara. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Manuel Aspeitia Palomar, a canon of Guadalajara, appointed a prothonotary apostolic 14 July, 1905, and named bishop 1 August, 1919, succeeding Rt. Rev. Andrés Segura y Domínguez, d. in August, 1918. This diocese, which covers an area of 11,583 square miles, includes 180,000 inhabitants, 17 parishes, 98 secular priests, 10 seminarians, 30 churches (of which one is the celebrated church of Our Lady of Falpa,) and 29 chapels.

TERRAMO, DIOCESE OF (APRUTINENSIS OR THERAMENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—514b), in southern Italy; directly subject to the Holy See. This see was filled by Rt. Rev. Alessandro Beniamino Zanecchia Gianetti from 18 June, 1902, until his death 21 February, 1920. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Settimio Quadraroli who was appointed in September, 1921. The statistics of 1920 credit the diocese with 130,000 Catholics, 124 parishes, 210 secular and 23 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 381 churches and chapels, 11 Brothers and 15 Sisters.

Teresa of the Child Jesus, SISTER, Carmelite of Lisieux, better known as the Little Flower of Jesus, b. at Alençon, France, 2 January, 1873; d. at Lisieux 30 September, 1897. She was the ninth child of saintly parents, Louis and Zélie Martin, both of whom had wished to consecrate their lives to God in the cloister. The vocation denied them was given to their children, five of whom became religious, one in the Visitation Order and four in the Carmelite Convent at Lisieux. Brought up in an atmosphere of faith where every virtue and aspiration were carefully nurtured and developed, her vocation manifested itself when she was still only a child. Educated by the Benedictines, when she was fifteen she applied for permission to enter the Carmelite Convent, and being refused by the superior, went to Rome with her father, as eager to give her to God as she was to give herself, to seek the consent of the Holy Father, Leo XIII, then celebrating his jubilee. He preferred to leave the decision in the hands of the superior, who finally consented and on 9 April, 1888, at the unusual age of fifteen, Thérèse Martin entered the convent of Lisieux where two of her sisters had preceded her. The account of the eleven years of her religious life, marked by signal graces and constant growth in holiness, is given by Sœur Thérèse in her autobiography, written in obedience to her superior and published two years after her death. In 1901 it was translated into English, and in 1912 another translation, the first complete edition of the life of the Servant of God, containing the autobiography, "Letters and Spiritual Counsels," was published. Its success was immediate and it has passed into many editions, spreading far and wide the devotion to this "little" saint of simplicity, and abandonment in God's service, of the perfect accomplishment of small duties. The fame of her sanctity and the many miracles performed through her intercession caused the introduction of her cause of canonisation only seventeen years after her death, 10 June, 1914.

Termoli, DIOCESE OF (THERMULARUM; cf. C. E., XIV—518a), in the province of Campobasso, southern Italy, suffragan of Benevento. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Rocco Caliendo, born in Ceglie Messapica, Italy, in 1872, served as vicar general and canon theologian of Oria, and was appointed bishop 28 March, 1912, to succeed Rt. Rev. Giovanni Capitoli, transferred to Bagnorea 14 February, 1911. The diocese embraces a Catholic population of 58,800, 19 parishes, 55 secular priests, 1 secondary school for girls with 5 teachers and 40 pupils, 50 churches or chapels, 1 asylum directed by 4 Sisters of Charity, and 1 orphanage for girls directed by 3 Sisters of Charity, caring for 15 orphans. One society is organized among the clergy and the "Unione Femminile Catholica Italiana," among the women of the diocese.

Terracine, Sessa and Piperno, DIOCESE OF (TERRACINENSIS, SETINENSIS AND PRIVERNENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—518b), in the province of Rome, Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is at present vacant, Rt. Rev. Domenico Ambrosi, who filled it since 1899, having died 17 August, 1921. These three united dioceses embrace a Catholic population of 70,000, and according to 1920 statistics include 25 parishes, 89 secular and 20 regular clergy, 15 seminarians, 13 Brothers, 98 Sisters and 62 churches and chapels.

Teruel, DIOCESE OF (TERULENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—525c), in Aragon, Spain, suffragan of Saragossa. It has the administration of the diocese of Albarracin (Alboracinensis). The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Juan Antony de la Fuente, born in Burgos in 1848, studied in the diocesan seminary, served as a professor there and as a pastor and was appointed bishop 14 December, 1905. The Catholic population of the diocese numbers 180,000, and it comprises 104 parishes divided among 6 archpresbyteries, 250 priests, 252 churches or chapels and 15 convents with 40 religious and 150 Sisters. Albarracin is credited with 33 parishes.

Texas (cf. C. E., XIV—543a).—The area of the State of Texas is 262,396 square miles of land and 3498 square miles of water. In 1920 the population was 4,663,228, an increase of 19.7 per cent. since 1910. Of this 32.4 was urban; 67.6 was rural. Texas has 171 cities, of which the largest are Dallas 158,976; Fort Worth 106,482; San Antonio 161,379; Houston 138,276.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—According to the Summary of Manufactures, issued by the Census Bureau in 1919, there are in Texas 5724 establishments, with 131,389 persons engaged in manufacture, earning in wages and salaries $147,908,000, and turning out products worth $999,996,000. The capital invested was $588,797,000. Texas ranks high agriculturally, the chief crops in 1920 being: maize 174,200,000 bushels; wheat 15,925,000 bushels; oats 44,100,000 bushels; rice 9,554,000 bushels. The yield of cotton in 1920 covered 12,576 acres; and the crop was 4,200,000 bales, valued at $227,200,000. In January, 1921, the State had 1,187,000 horses, 792,000 mules, 1,184,000 milch cows, 4,457,000 other cattle, 3,069,000 sheep, and 2,427,000 swine; the wool clip in 1919 amounted to 14,986,000 pounds.

The resources of the banks in 1919 amounted to $723,257,000. According to the report of the U. S. Comptroller of the Treasury there are in the State 834 State banks, 73 trust companies, 38 private banks, and 510 national banks. The total wealth of the State is $3,128,819,287. In 1919 the bonded debt was $4,002,000; the bonds being held entirely by State educational and charitable funds. The assessed value of real property was $2,060,602,300, and of personal property $939,898,582.

RELIGION.—The Census Bureau's figures for 1916 gave the number of Baptists as 649,037; Disciples of Christ 54,836; Lutherans 37,697; Methodists 428,409; Presbyterians 75,673; Protestant Episcopalians 17,116; Catholics 402,874; Jewish Congregations 628. Thirty per cent. are Protestant, 9 per cent. are Catholic, 58 per cent. have no definite religious belief, other religions less than 1 per cent.

In 1914 the Diocese of El Paso (q. v.) was erected from territory taken from the Diocese of Tucson, Dallas (q. v.) and San Antonio (q. v.). For further statistics see also GALVESTON, DIOCESE OF; CORPUS CHRISTI, DIOCESE OF.

MINING.—The following were mined in the State in 1917: asphalt $2,292,036; clay products $3,451,806; coal $4,177,608; raw clay $22,477; copper; $6315; natural gas $3,192,625; gypsum $996,262 lime, $361,308; cement $3,661,328; mineral waters $72,175; petroleum $42,891,555; natural gas gasoline $1,149,441; quicksilver $1,136,508; salt $564,029; sandstone brick $65,102; sand and gravel $716,457; silver $490,930; stone $697,540; graphite, manganese ore, sulphur, gems, etc., estimated at $11,626,795; total value, $77,552,369. The state ranks second of the United States in the production of quicksilver.

COMMUNICATIONS.—Galveston is an important outlet for the cotton grown in the United States and as a commercial port is second only to New York.

The total shipping business of the Galveston customs district for the fiscal year ending 30 June, 1919, was $485,564,493; of this the exports were in value $467,869,587. The coastwise commerce of the port is estimated at $400,000,000. Port Arthur had on 30 June, 1919, foreign exports for the year to the value of $57,443,660; the value of the imports was $4,684,508. In 1919 there were 610 steamships and 7 sailing vessels at the ports of Texas, with an aggregate tonnage of 1,182,919. The towns of Beaumont and Orange now share with Port Arthur in the commercial benefits of deep water, all three being connected by the Sabine Neches Canal, recently deepened. A permanent causeway, over two miles in length, connecting Galveston with the mainland, was opened to traffic in May, 1912. The level of the town has been raised to protect it from storms. Texas has 128,960 miles of public highways, 13,000 of which are still maintained with state aid (1919). The total mileage of railroads is 15,931.

EDUCATION.—The enactment of a practical compulsory law for Texas by the thirty-fourth Legislature marked a great victory for the cause of popular education in the State. The greatest single piece of school legislation within recent years was enacted into law in 1915 when the Legislature appropriated $1,000,000 to aid the people to provide for better educational facilities. A recent law provides for a county board of education in each county, and authorizes the county superintendent and the county board to grade and classify the rural schools. The employment of illiterate children under fourteen years of age in factories and mines is illegal. Separate schools are provided for white and colored children. In the 1918 scholastic census 1,098,989 children between 7 and 18 (210,278 negroes) were enrolled. In 1920 the 8401 public elementary schools had 927,869 enrolled pupils and 25,592 teachers; the 2621 public high schools had 107,779 pupils and 4766 teachers. There are also 6 normal schools; the two most recently established being at Commerce and Alpine. The University of Texas with 304 professors and 4612 students has an income of about $200,000 yearly. In 1920 its legislative appropriation was $925,521; in 1921, $915,789. The School of Mines and Metallurgy was established in 1914; the new department covers education, engineering, extension, and graduate work.

The Agricultural and Mechanical College has an enrollment of 2759. Grubbs Vocational College at Arlington and the John Tarleton College at Stephenville, opened in 1917, are its branches.

The valuation of school property in the state is $48,872,283. The expenditure on education in 1920 was $25,185,550. Two junior agricultural colleges were created in 1917. The Prairie View State College (Normal and Industrial) for colored youths had 40 professors and 1348 students in 1914. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: No part of the public school fund shall ever be appropriated for or used for the support of any sectarian school (VII—4). Patriotism must be taught ten minutes each day in all schools. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1911 much disturbance along the border was caused by the revolution in Mexico. Large quantities of arms and ammunition were smuggled across the border by the Mexican Revolutionists and a detachment of United States Cavalry was posted from El Paso to Brownsville to prevent such smuggling. Conditions became so acute that a patrol along the Rio Grande River was established to co-operate with the United States authorities in the enforcement of neutrality. General Reyes, a Mexican, was arrested in San Antonio on the charge of inciting a rebellion against a friendly country. For further data see MEXICO.

In June, 1911, the international committee appointed to decide on the ownership of land within the present limits of El Paso, gave El Paso all the lands north of the boundary line of 1864 and ceded to Mexico all the lands south of that line. As the boundary of 1864 could not be fixed, the actual settlement was deferred. In 1911 the following legislation was passed: a law to prohibit the exhibition of prize fights and other immoral shows by means of moving pictures; an Act establishing a new prison system, making provision for a board of prison commissioners and for the management, control, and treatment of prisoners, and another Act establishing a State Insurance Board. In 1913, provisions were made for suspended and indeterminate sentences for criminal cases and the parole of convicted persons, for presidential primary elections in the State, a Bureau of Child and Animal Protection, and an eight-hour day for workmen. Additional improvements were made to the Houston ship canal in 1916. A statutory measure put Texas in the list of prohibition States. The sales provision of this law was declared unconstitutional on the ground that it conflicted with local option, which was incorporated in the constitution. Other provisions of this Act, however, were declared void. The federal suffrage amendment was ratified on 28 June, 1919, the Prohibition Act, 4 March, 1918.

During the European War Texas contributed to the United States Army 161,065 soldiers (4.29%). Most of the Texas members of the National Guard formed a part of the 36th Division at Camp Bowie, Texas; those of the National Army, the 90th Division at Camp Travis, Texas. The summary of casualties among Texas men is as follows: deceased, 127 officers, 2595 men; prisoners, 11 officers, 69 men; wounded, 325 officers, 7006 men.

Theatines (cf. C. E. XIV—556b).—A decision of the Sacred Congregation of Religious having re-established the Congregation of the Holy Family in July, 1916, the province of that name was dissolved. At present the order is formed by the Italian and Spanish provinces. The Italian province has three houses in Italy and two in America; and the Spanish province has three houses in Spain with a total of 130 members. It has three colleges with about 1000 pupils. Rt. Rev. Michael J. Cerdá is the present superior general. He was born in Spain in 1859, and after presiding several times over the Spanish province was appointed general in 1916. In that year Rt. Rev. Francis de P. Ragonese, former superior general, died in Rome.

Thebes, DIOCESE OF (THEBANENSIS COPTORUM; cf. C. E., XIV—563b), a diocese of the Coptic Rite in Egypt with residence at Tahtah. The see, established in 1895, is still filled by its first bishop, Rt. Rev. Ignace Gladès-Barzi, born in Ghirghe, in this diocese, in 1867 and appointed bishop 6 March, 1896. Out of a total population of 2,000,000 this diocese counts 15,000 Coptic Catholics. It comprises 36 priests, 36 schools, 29 churches and chapels and 81 Christian communities.

Thera (SANTORIN), DIOCESE OF (SANTORINIS), one of the Cyclades Islands in the Greek Archipelago, is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Naxos and Tinos. The present incumbent, Rt. Rev. Michel Camilleri, born at Corfu, in 1854, was appointed bishop of this see 1 July, 1907. There are only about 150 Catholics on the island and these are mostly descended from the Spanish or Italian crusaders. The diocese lost a prominent benefactor in the recent years through the death of Rev. Alberto Lasverdens, Superior of the Lazarist Convent, who founded and endowed an elementary school. During the World War none of the clergy from this diocese went to the Front, but several of the lay brothers, who all won the admiration of their non-Catholic compatriots.

The diocese comprises 1 parish, 13 churches, 2 monasteries for men (Lazarist and Dominican Fathers), and 2 for women (Dominican nuns and Sisters of Charity), 5 secular and 3 regular clergy, 2 lay brothers, 1 secondary school for boys, with 6 teachers and 25 pupils and 1 for girls with 6 teachers and 20 pupils, 1 elementary school with 1 teacher and 8 pupils, 1 home for the destitute, 1 orphanage, 1 hospital, and 1 settlement house. The Children of Mary are organized in the diocese.

Third Orders, REGULAR.—THIRD ORDER OF ST. DOMINIC (cf. C. E., XIV—638b).—A further development of the Dominican Third Order has come in the Oblates of the Blessed Sacrament begun in Corpus Christi House, Leicester, England, in January, 1909, under Miss Ellerker and Miss Fortey. It had the approval of Bishop Brindle of Nottingham, the diocesan, and was guided by the inspiration of Father McNabb, O.P., then Prior of Holy Cross, Leicester. The aim of this society is "an attempt to meet new wants in a new way."—"Some Children of St. Dominic," by Marie St. S. Ellerker, C.T.S., England, 1916, p. 3)—i.e., by combining community life with the life of women in the world engaged in good works of all kinds. The Sisters, though not religious, take vows for three years and then for life, recite the Divine Office, and have the usual round of religious exercises but without the formalities necessarily belonging to conventual rule. Their work is "to refuse no work which might be needed and which we were asked by authority to undertake" (ibid. p. 5), and in practice this has been found to include teaching, assisting in parochial missions and missions to non-Catholics, instructing children and converts, catechizing, taking part in the organization of retreat work, in social work, in local government, in directing study-clubs. Moreover of late years, they have been engaged in missionary work among the East Indians in Trinidad and in extensive labors in the Diocese of Duluth, U. S. A., where Bishop McNicholas, O.P., has become also a second founder. They number at present only about fifty.

THIRD ORDER REGULAR OF ST. DOMINIC IN THE UNITED STATES (cf. C. E., XIV—640b).—Brooklyn, N. Y. The Dominican Congregation of the Holy Cross, with mother-house at Holy Cross Convent, Brooklyn, N. Y., and novitiate at Amityville, L. I., now numbers over 665 religious and 52 novices. Mother Augustine Fleck was elected prioress general for six years in 1913, and re-elected in 1919 for another term of six years. She celebrated the golden jubilee of her profession in September, 1921, and was honored by the Holy Father with an autograph letter of felicitation. The constitution of the congregation is being revised in conformity with the new Code of Canon Law. New foundations have been made as follows: St. Agnes' Parochial School, Rockville Centre, L. I.; Our Lady of Perpetual Help Parochial School, Eindhoven, L. I.; St. Mary Magdalen Parochial School, Springfield, L. I.; St. Thomas' Parochial School, Woodhaven, L. I.; Normal School for Training of Novices opened at Amityville in 1920; St. Martin's Parochial School, Amityville, L. I.; Corpus Christi School, Mineola, L. I., to be opened in September, 1922. At present the congregation numbers 48 dependent houses in New York, Long Island, and Porto Rico, including 44 schools, 1 sanitarium, 1 infirmary for incurables, 2 hospitals. Four of the schools are for orphans with a total attendance of 700. Other school children number 16,000. Sanatorium patients number at least 50 and the infirmary has usually 100 patients. The hospital has cared for about 5000 patients in six years. St. Catherine's Hospital, Brooklyn, celebrated its golden jubilee in 1920.

Fall River, Mass.—These Sisters have houses in the Dioceses of Albany, Fall River, and Fargo, with mother-house at Fall River. In 1915, they took charge of St. Anne's Parochial School, Cohoes, New York, and in 1920 they opened an academy and boarding school for girls in Grafton, North Dakota. The foundress of the congregation, Mother M. Bertrand Sheridan, died 20 March, 1915. The congregation numbers 73 professed Sisters, 8 novices, and 6 postulants, in charge of 2 academies, 1 high school (academic and commercial), and 4 parochial schools, with a total attendance of 1660 children.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—The Congregation of Our Lady of the Sacred Heart was established in Michigan, 22 October, 1877, at Traverse City, by Mother Aquinata and five Sisters from the Dominican Convent on East Second Street, New York, and was formed into an independent congregation in 1894. The mother-house was transferred to Grand Rapids where St. John's Orphan Home was established in 1889. At the first general chapter of the congregation in 1897, Mother Aquinata was elected mother general, which office she held for eighteen years. At her death, 1 May, 1915, the community numbered 300 Sisters who were conducting 40 mission schools, 2 academies, 1 orphan asylum, and 1 high school for girls. She was succeeded by Mother Mary Gonsalva, the mother assistant and counsellor, who died 23 February, 1921. In 1919 the erection of a new mother-house was begun in the suburbs of Grand Rapids, and the cornerstone was laid 15 June, 1921. Mother M. Gonsalva was succeeded by the present superior, Mother Mary Benedetta. The membership has grown from 5 to 383 professed religious, together with 42 novices and 11 postulants; 45 of the congregation have died. The Sisters now conduct 50 parochial schools, 2 academies, 1 high school for boys, 1 high school for girls, 1 orphan asylum, and 1 nursery. The academies and high schools are affiliated to the University of Michigan and the State Normal Schools.

Kenosha, Wis.—The Portuguese Congregation of St. Catherine of Siena, driven from Portugal by the revolution in 1910, founded a house in Oritario, Diocese of Baker City, Oregon, where they built a much needed hospital. The novitiate was canonically opened in October, 1912, and in June, 1920, was transferred to Kenosha, Diocese of Milwaukee.

Wisconsin. Mother Mary Catherine Roth was the first superior of the congregation in America and was re-elected vicar general in July, 1912, at the general chapter held in Salamanca, Spain. The community kept Holy Rosary Hospital as a branch house and in the year 1914 another mission was taken up in Hanford, California, where the Sisters conduct Sacred Heart Hospital and St. Rose's Parochial School. At present the congregation numbers 38 professed Sisters and 13 novices.

Racine, Wis.—The Community of St. Catherine of Sienna with mother-house at Racine, Wisconsin, celebrated its golden jubilee in 1912. Mother Mary Hyacintha Oberbrunner, who had been prioress general for thirty-five years, died at an advanced age, 28 September, 1915. Mother Mary Cecilia Fox, who was elected prioress general in 1907, died 11 November, 1915. At the general chapter 25 March, 1916, Mother Mary Romana Thom was elected to succeed Mother Mary Cecilia Fox. The most important institutions of the congregation, other than St. Catherine's Academy and Day School connected with the mother-house at Racine, Wis., are 7 high schools, 41 parochial schools, and 1 home for ladies. The membership of the congregation is 360, including 316 professed Sisters, 26 novices, and 18 postulants, with 10,000 children entrusted to their care.

Saint Catharine, Ky.—On 26 April, 1918, the St. Catherine of Sienna Community, with mother-house at St. Catharine, near Springfield, Ky., was approved by Rome as an independent congregation. Cardinal Fruhwirth O. P., was appointed cardinal protector. The rule conforms to the new Code of Canon Law. On 25 July, 1918, Mother Francesca Kearney was elected the first mother general. She had been elected prioress 25 July, 1915, succeeding Mother M. Aquin, whose second term of office began 25 July, 1912. The following new foundations have been made: Sacred Heart Academy, Watertown, Mass., 1912; Sacred Heart School, East Boston, 1912; St. Anthony School, Cedar Rapids, Neb., 1912; St. Mary School, Dawson, Neb., 1913; St. John School, North Cambridge, Mass., 1913; St. Patrick School, Fremont, Neb., 1914; St. James School, Kearney, Neb., 1915; St. Patrick School, Havelock, Neb., 1916; St. Patrick School, Missouri Valley, Iowa, 1916; St. Dominic Academy for small boys, Waverly, Mass., 1917; St. Brendan School, 1918; St. Patrick School, McCook, Neb., 1918; St. Mary School, Red Oak, Iowa, 1919; St. Bartholomew School, Chicago, Ill., 1921; Sacred Heart School, South Bend, Ind., 1921; St. Catharine of Sienna Hospital, McCook, Neb., 1921. The congregation numbers 350 members in charge of 2 normal schools, 7 academies, 25 parochial schools, 1 conservatory, and 1 hospital, with 10,000 children under their instruction.

San José, Cal.—The Californian Congregation of the Queen of the Most Holy Rosary, with mother-house at San José, Cal., was founded in 1876 by three Sisters from Brooklyn, who took charge of St. Boniface's Parochial School in San Francisco. The first regular convent of the congregation was erected in San Francisco and dedicated 29 November, 1883, under the title of the Immaculate Conception. This was the mother-house of the congregation definitely incorporated 28 January, 1890. The present mother-house and novitiate was established in 1891, at Mission San José, Alameda Co., Cal. In 1899 a second novitiate was established in Europe, in the diocese of Liège, and a third in Mexico City in 1921. At present the congregation has the following institutions: Immaculate Conception Academy, San Francisco, Cal.; St. Boniface's Parochial School, San Francisco, Cal.; St. Anthony's Parochial School, San Francisco, Cal.; St. Elizabeth's Parochial School, Oakland, Cal.; Sacred Heart Academy, Los Angeles, Cal.; St. Michael's Parochial School, Los Angeles, Cal.; St. Gabriel's Parochial School, Mission San Gabriel, Cal.; St. Catherine's Orphanage, Anaheim, Cal.; The Albertinum Orphanage, Ukiah, Cal.; St. Mary's Orphanage, Mission San José, Cal.; St. Mary's Parochial School, Portland, Ore.; Holy Rosary Parochial School, Portland, Ore.; Colegio de la Immaculada Concepcion, Irapuam, D. F., Mexico; Colegio San Rafael, Mexico City. The congregation numbers 205 professed Sisters, 16 novices, and 12 postulants.

San Rafael, Cal.—These Sisters, with mother-house at San Rafael, conduct establishments in the Archdiocese of San Francisco and in the Diocese of Sacramento. The Sisters in the community number 151; novices 5; postulants 9.

Shepard, Ohio.—The work of this congregation, with mother-house at Shepard, Ohio, is entirely educational. The constitutions, approved in 1891, are awaiting in Rome the sanction of their revision according to the new Code of Canon Law. In August, 1915, the estate of Miss Blanche Potter at Eagle Park, Ossining-on-Hudson, N. Y., was purchased as a boarding school for girls. In July, 1917, the present mother general, Miriam Masterson, succeeded Mother Vincentia Erskine, who resigned her office. Mother Vincentia was born 25 November, 1852, at Hunter, N. Y., and received her early education in New York schools. She entered the Dominican Order and made her profession 8 April, 1875, becoming novice-mistress in 1885 and prioress in 1891. She was chosen for the newly-created office of mother general in 1893, when the Holy See elevated the congregation to the dignity of a pontifical institute. From modest proportions the missionary field served by the Sisters under Mother Vincentia has been increased to one of importance, including 21 parochial schools and 4 academies. Mother Vincentia was elected three times to the office of mother-general and asked to be released from a fourth election. She was, however, appointed vicar general in 1917, which office she held until her death on 17 December, 1919. Closely associated with Mother Vincentia was Sister Mary Thomas Scanlan, who died 10 December, 1918. At present the congregation numbers 295 professed religious, 26 novices, and 10 postulants. New foundations include 1 academy and 5 parochial schools.

Sinsinawa, Wis.—The Congregation of the Most Holy Rosary, with mother-house at Saint Clara Convent, Sinsinawa, Wisconsin, has been under the administration of Sister Clara Conway as prioress, 1849-1854, Sister Joanna Clark, prioress 1854-1864, Mother M. Regina Mulqueeny, general superior, 1864-1867, Mother M. Emily Power, general superior, 1867-1909, and the present general superior Mother Mary Samuel, 1909. At the death of Mother Emily Power in 1909 there were 47 convents with her Sisters teaching in 52 schools located in various dioceses of the United States. In 1888, after a previous visit to Rome, Mother Emily obtained from the Holy See the formal canonical approval of the revised Constitutions of the Congregation, few essential points of which were invalidated by the new Code of Canon Law. The College of Saint Clara, Sinsinawa, Wis., was chartered in 1901. Associated with Mother Emily in her labors for Catholic education were many gifted religious, among whom were: Sisters Alberta Duffy, Benedicta Kennedy, M. Charles Borromeo, and Alexis Duffy, all writers; Sisters M. Reginald Kean and M. Bonaventure Tracy, successively Prioresses of Saint Clara Convent; Sister Gertrude Power, superior of the Dominican congregation in Faribault, Minn.; Sister Mary George Adamson, who braved the dangers of the World War to make a foundation of the congregation in Europe and died there in 1918. Sister Imelda Teresa Swift, the noted convert from the Salvation Army, died in 1916 in this congregation as a professed novice. The congregation now numbers 862 professed Sisters, 35 novices, and 33 postulants. There are 63 mission houses besides the mother-house. In 1917 the Sisters took charge of a school of social science and modern languages in Fribourg, Switzerland, Institut des Hautes Etudes, Villa des Fougères. Rosary College in River Forest, Chicago, is now under construction.

Dominican Sisters of the Perpetual Rosary.—These Sisters are a contemplative community, strictly cloistered. They chant the Divine Office in choir according to the Dominican Rite and support themselves by making vestments, altar linens, altar breads, etc. The first foundation was at Hoboken, which is regarded as the mother-house, though each house is independent and governed by the prioress of each community, there being no mother general or provincial. They all observe the Rule of St. Augustine. The chief change due to the new Code of Canon Law is the wearing of the entire Dominican habit while collecting, in place of the black habit of outdoor Sisters formerly worn, and the giving of the white scapular to the lay Sisters in place of the black. Two of the first four religious who came over from Belgium are recently deceased. Mother Mary of Jesus, prioress in Hoboken for twenty years, died 4 October, 1917, at the age of seventy; Mother Mary Dominic, sub-prioress in Hoboken, died 2 November, 1920, at the age of seventy-eight. The present prioress in Hoboken is Mother Mary Agnes, elected 1 October, 1919, to succeed Mother Mary Imelda, who with thirteen other Sisters established a new foundation at Summit, N. J. The Sisters have 7 houses in the United States at Hoboken, N. J. (35 professed Sisters, 4 novices, 8 postulants); Hales Corners, near Milwaukee, Wis.; Catonsville, near Baltimore, Md.; Camden, N. J. (38 perpetual professed Sisters, 6 professed novices, 3 novices, 3 postulants, 1 outside Sister); Buffalo N. Y.; La Crosse, Wis. (15 Sisters), and Summit, N. J.

Dominican Nuns of the Congregation of St. Cajherine of Ricci.—This congregation is devoted to the work of retreats and to the spirit of adoration, reparation, and thanksgiving. It was founded in Glens Falls, Diocese of Albany, N. Y., in 1880, by Lucy Eaton Smith who took in religion the name of Sister Maria Catherine de Ricci. She was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., 22 March, 1845, was received into the Catholic Church 18 December, 1865, went to Europe seeking to fulfill her religious vocation, and returned to the United States to found a new community of the Dominican Order, in honor of St. Catherine of Ricci. The present mother-house in Albany, N. Y., was opened in May, 1887. Mother de Ricci died 24 May, 1894, in the new house founded at Saratoga, and was succeeded as second provincial by Mother Mary Loyola, who was born 8 February, 1854, and was received into the Church at Rome, 22 July, 1876. During Mother Loyola's administration an English-speaking boarding school and academy was founded at Havana, Cuba, in 1900, and a home for business women was opened in Philadelphia, Penn., in 1901. Mother Loyola died 23 April, 1904, and was succeeded by Sister Mary Bertrand, the present provincial, who was elected in January, 1905, succeeded by Mother M. Frances in 1915, and re-elected in 1918 and 1921. Under Mother M. Bertrand's administration the following foundations have been made: in 1908, an English-speaking boarding school and academy at Cienfuegos, Cuba, and in connection therewith an orphan asylum supported by the Daughters of the Rosary, an organization of the best Catholic families of the city; in 1911, a home for business women in New York City; in 1912, a home for business women in Dayton, Ohio. In all these houses the work of giving spiritual retreats is conducted. The congregation is steadily increasing in members and now numbers 89 professed religious, 6 novices, and 5 postulants.

THIRD ORDER OF ST. FRANCIS (cf. C. E., XIV—641a).—In recent years the Franciscan Third Order has been the subject of several pontifical pronouncements. The most important of these are the latter of Pius X "Tertium Franciscanum Ordinem," of 8 September, 1912; and the Encyclical Letter of Benedict XV "Sacra propediem" of 6 January, 1921. In the first of these two letters which was addressed to the three ministers-episcopal of the First Order, Pius X expressed his joy at the new evidences of activity amongst the tertiaries tending to the propagation of the Third Order. At the same time however, he confessed to a fear that many tertiaries were in danger of losing sight of the proper purpose and vocation of their order. The Third Order, he reminded them, is an order of penance, designed to teach men the love of the Cross and the avoidance of worldliness, and to lead its members in the way of evangelical perfection. Hence, Tertiary fraternities, as such, must not concern themselves with purely economic or social questions; though individual tertiaries are encouraged to take part in the social works. In virtue of their profession all tertiaries must avoid luxurious living and be ready to exercise the works of mercy, spiritual and corporal. In regard to tertiary congresses, the pontiff laid down that such congresses may only be held with the approval of the superiors of the First Order and under their leadership; the congresses may only discuss matters properly pertaining to the order and must avoid purely economic and social questions; the acts of the congress may not be published without the sanction of the superiors of the First Order.

The Encyclical Letter of Benedict XV, above referred to, was published on the occasion of the seventh centenary celebration of the formal foundation of the order. In this letter the pope again urged the tertiaries to set an example of unworldliness and in particular called upon them to cultivate modesty in dress in opposition to the prevalent fashions of the day; but more especially he bade them emulate the example of the first tertiaries as apostles of fraternal charity and good will in a world inflamed by the passions of war.

The year 1921 witnessed a world-wide celebration of the seventh centenary of the order, culminating in the international congress of the tertiaries held in Rome in September of that year. The congress had been convoked to meet in Assisi, but such were the vast numbers attending it that it was found necessary to transfer the congress to a city capable of providing accommodation for the delegates.

Of the Pontifical privileges granted to tertiaries in late years, the most notable is the concession contained in the Letter of Pius X, "Sodalium e Tertio Ordine," of 5 May, 1909, whereby tertiaries by communication of privileges share in all the good works of the First Order and enjoy the same indulgences.

A movement to bring the local tertiary-fraternities into closer cooperation with each other for their mutual benefit and encouragement was approved by Pius X in his Letter "Delectavit nos" of 17 December, 1909, addressed to the federated fraternities in Rome. The movement is but a return to the ancient practice of the Third Order fraternities in Italy; and were it carried out generally, would undoubtedly tend to strengthening the Third Order as a spiritual force in the church.

The most recent statistics give the number of Franciscan tertiaries under the jurisdiction of the First Order as 1,525,300 under the jurisdiction of the Friars Minor of the Leonine Union; 28,000 under the Friars Minor Conventuals; and 989,500 under the Friars Minor Capuchin.

FATHER CUTHBERT.

THIRD ORDER REGULAR OF ST. FRANCIS IN THE UNITED STATES (cf. C. E., XIV-646b).—Allegany, N. Y.—This Franciscan congregation, with mother-house at St. Elizabeth's Convent, St. Bonaventure, Allegany, N. Y., has at present 17 foundations, including 1 college, 2 academies, 3 high schools, 14 parochial schools, 3 homes for working girls, 1 home for children, 1 day nursery, and 2 hospitals. New foundations have been made in the dioceses of Ogdensburg, Pittsburgh and Buffalo. The community now numbers 322 members.

Bay Settlement, Wis.—This congregation, with mother-house at Bay Settlement, Green Bay, Wisconsin, numbers 60 professed religious, 4 novices, and 5 postulants. The present superior is Mother M. Angela, who succeeded Mother M. Teresa in 1920. New foundations have been made as follows: St. Fidelis School, Meeme, Wis., 1917; St. Mary's School, Bear Creek, Wis., 1919; McCormick Memorial Home for the Aged (20 inmates), Green Bay, Wis., 1921. St. Aloysius Institute, a boarding school at Sturgeon Bay, Wis., was discontinued in July, 1921. The congregation is at present in charge of 10 parochial schools with 1215 pupils, 1 boarding school with 58 pupils at Robinsonville, Wis., and 1 home for the aged.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The present superior of this congregation with mother-house at Buffalo, N. Y., is Sister M. De Pazzi, elected 2 August, 1919. The present number of foundations is 41, of which 12 have been established in the last ten years. These include: 2 hospitals caring for 120 patients; 3 homes for the aged with 434 inmates; 1 orphan asylum with 450 orphans; 35 parochial schools with 7764 children. Perpetual Adoration of the Most Blessed Sacrament was founded on 27 December, 1902, and this association, affiliated with the one established in Rome, is called The Association of Perpetual Adoration and Work for Poor Churches. The congregation now numbers 375 professed Sisters, 21 novices, and 7 postulants, a total of 403 members.

Clinton, Iowa.—The constitutions of this congregation, with mother-house in Clinton, Iowa, have been revised according to the new Code of Canon Law and are in Rome for approval. The present superior is Mother M. Fidelis. The congregation numbers 200 professed Sisters and 18 postulants and novices, having under their care 1 college and academy, 2 hospitals with 822 patients, 1 old people's home with 30 inmates, and 30 parochial schools. There are 3005 children under their instruction.

Dubuque, Iowa.—This congregation with mother-house at St. Francis Convent, Dubuque, Iowa, received the decree of praise and the approval and confirmation of its constitutions in 1914. The constitutions, with revisions in conformity with the new Code of Canon Law, are to receive final approval in 1922. Since the death of the foundress in 1892, the congregation has been governed successively by Mother M. Elizabeth Hocnig, Mother M. Coletta Roehrer, and Mother M. Dominica Wieneke, the present superior general, elected in July, 1920. Since 1912 the congregation has taken charge of 5 parochial schools in Iowa, 1 in South Dakota, 2 in Oregon, and 1 hospital in Iowa. It now has a total of 52 grammar schools and 15 high schools and academies with a total enrollment of 8000 pupils, 2 orphanages, 1 hospital, 1 home for the aged, 1 home for young ladies, 1 domestic department at Columbia College, Dubuque, Iowa. The number of professed Sisters is 454, novices 53, and postulants 15.

Millvale, Penn.—This congregation, with mother-house at Mt. Alvernia, Millvale, Penn., was founded in 1865 from Buffalo, N. Y. They established a hospital in a small frame dwelling, which has since given place to the large brick structure known as St. Francis Hospital, covering an entire block, with a capacity of 600 beds; and containing a psychopathic department. This department maintains an occupation school, in which weaving, wicker work, sewing and knitting are taught to patients whose condition permits them to take up the work. The hospital maintains a hydrotherapeutic department, the largest of its kind in Western Pennsylvania; also a vocational school for disabled soldiers, and a training school for nurses which numbers 126 nurses, including pupils and graduate nurses. It has for years maintained a free dispensary, and the patients treated here during the past year number 10,652. Their mission as teachers dates from 1868, when a colony of 12 Sisters opened a house on the South Side, then known as Birmingham, but since incorporated in the city as the South Side. Here they took charge of the school connected with St. Michael's parish. In 1871, at the request of Bishop Domenee of Pittsburgh, Bishop Timon of Buffalo released the community from his obedience, and a mother-house and novitiate were permanently established in the Pittsburgh diocese at the above named place. In 1884, through the influence of Rev. Father Luke, C. P., the constitutions were approved for a period of five years. In 1890, His Holiness Leo XIII granted a definitive approbation, and the Sisters have thenceforth been under the jurisdiction of the Holy See. Slight changes, due to the revised Code of Canon Law, have been made affecting the novitiate. The time of postulancy has been reduced from one year to six months; the time of novitiate from two years to one year; the time of temporary vows has been increased from two to three years. The development of the community called for a larger mother-house and novitiate, and the present structure at Mt. Alvernia, Millvale, was erected in 1898. The community numbers 262 professed Sisters, 18 novices, 14 postulants, and 18 aspirants. It has 17 houses and has charge of 2 hospitals; an insane asylum, a home for aged ladies, an orphan asylum, and a home for infants under five years of age. As educators they have charge of 15 schools, attended by 7300 pupils, and engaging 138 teachers; 10 of these schools have their own high school. In connection with the mother-house is the Community Normal School, and a preparatory school in which young ladies desiring to enter the community begin their studies preparatory to the normal course (students 18, teachers 4).

Nevada, Mo.—This congregation, with mother-house at Nevada, Mo., has its general mother-house in Switzerland, from where the first Sisters came to America in 1893. The community now numbers 26 professed Sisters and 2 postulants, in charge of 115 orphans.

Oldenburg, Ind.—This congregation, with mother-house at Oldenburg, Indiana, was governed for thirty-six years by Mother Olivia, who was succeeded in 1919 by Mother Veneranda. Mother Olivia had celebrated her golden jubilee in 1915, and in 1921 Mother Veneranda and five Sisters celebrated their golden jubilee and 51 Sisters their silver jubilee. To provide Perpetual Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, the erection of a new chapel was begun in October, 1919. According to the new Code of Canon Law the community submits a triennial report to the Holy See, the postulate is extended from three months to six, and novices are admitted to final profession after three years of temporary vows, instead of five years as formerly. The present cardinal protector of the congregation is Cardinal Merry del Val, appointed in 1916, upon the death of their former cardinal protector, Cardinal Falconio. Among the recent deceased of the community have been Sister Julia (1914); Sisters Coletta, Dominica, and Bonaventure (1915); Sisters Florentine, Johanna, Petronilla, Genevieve, and Augustine (1916); Sisters Cornelia, Lidivina and Dorothea (1919). In 1920 the Sisters for the first time made use of their privilege as voters and took part in the presidential election. New foundations have been made as follows: (1912) Kankakee, Ill., Collegehill, Ind., and Hamilton, Ohio; (1915) Chillicothe, Ohio, Dayton, Ohio, and Houghville, Ind.; (1916) Bowling Green, Mo., Fort Branch, Ind., and Wichita, Kan.; (1919) Peoria, Ill.; (1921) St. Ann's, Jennings Co., Ind.

Peekskill, N. Y.—The general mother-house of this congregation is at Gemona, Italy, and the present general superior, Mother M. Carmela, succeeded Mother M. Assumpta who died in February, 1912. The provincial mother-house and novitiate is at Mount St. Francis, Peekskill, N. Y. Mother M. Joseph, provincial superior, succeeded Mother M. Elizabeth, who died 7 October, 1914. The present number of members is 318, novices 13, postulants 8. The congregation has charge of: 1 academy with 258 pupils; 3 business schools with 200 pupils; 20 parochial schools with 6973 children; 1 institution for destitute children with 950 inmates; a reception and quarantine house for this institution; 2 boarding houses for girls with 75 boarders; 5 day nurseries with 300 children; 1 convalescent home with 15 patients.

The Sisters also have a hospital at Echt, Holland, founded in 1905 by 28 Sisters from America. The congregation numbers 258 professed Sisters, 25 novices, and 12 postulants, a total of 295 members. The present mother general is Mother M. Anthony.

Tiffin, Ohio.—This congregation, with mother-house at St. Francis Convent, Tiffin, Ohio, was organized in 1868 and incorporated in 1869 under the title Citizen's Hospital and Orphan Asylum. The present superior is Mother Bonaventura. The foundations of the congregation are: St. Francis Home for the Aged, Tiffin, Ohio, capacity 100; St. Francis Orphanage, Tiffin, Ohio, capacity 150; St. Francis Convent, Tiffin, Ohio; St. Joseph's Hospital, Lorain, Ohio; Pilgrim House, Carey, Ohio; parish schools in Ohio at Adrian, Blakeslee, Carey, Custar, Fort Jennings, Lorain, Miller City, Millersville, New Washington, Paulding, Payne, Tiffin. The congregation numbers 90 professed religious, 7 novices and 9 postulants.

Franciscan Sisters of the Atonement.—These Sisters form the Second Congregation of the Society of the Atonement (see ATONEMENT, FRIARS OF THE), which was originally a foundation at Graymoor, N. Y., of Anglican Friars and Sisters, who were received into the Catholic Church 30 October, 1909. In the Second Congregation there are now 33 Sisters, 14 novices, 12 postulants, and 10 Tertiary Sisters, a total of 69. The Sisters have four mission settlement houses as follows: one in the large Italian parish of Our Lady of Pity in the Bronx, New York City, for mission settlement and catechism work among the 5000 Catholic children attending public school; a second house in Hereford, Texas, where two missionary Friars are also laboring; a mission house in Tucumcari, New Mexico; and a fourth house in Dover, Ohio, under the Capuchin Fathers. The cornerstone of a new building for the St. Clare's Mission Settlement House in the Bronx, N. Y., founded 1919, was laid 16 October, 1921. There are at present 23 Sisters of the Atonement working in the missions. Their special work is catechism and social settlement work for the foreign born children of the public schools and their parents. Their constitutions, based upon the Franciscan Rule and revised according to the new Code of Canon Law, have been approved by his late Eminence Cardinal Farley and by the present ordinary Most Rev. Archbishop Hayes.

Franciscan Sisters of Baltimore City.—These Sisters, with mother-house at St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, London, were introduced into America in 1881, for work among the colored people. At the request of the late Cardinal Gibbons they established themselves in the Archdiocese of Baltimore, where they now have a novitiate and a home accommodating 300 orphans. Convents have been opened in Norfolk and Richmond, Va., and in Wilmington, N. C. In some of their schools the Sisters have as many as 600 pupils. From St. Mary's Abbey, Mill Hill, Sisters were sent to open missions in Africa in 1902, and the late Mother Mary Paul, who was then Superior of the Franciscan Convent in Norfolk, Va., was chosen to be the first superior to lead the missionary band of Sisters to this new field of labor in Uganda, British East Africa. There are now 4 convents of this congregation working among the natives of Uganda, where they have 2 hospitals and 3 schools. The aggregate number of this congregation is about 500.

Franciscan Sisters of Christian Charity.—This congregation was founded 9 November, 1869. The mother-house and novitiate is at Holy Family Convent, Alverno, Wisconsin. The present superioress is Mother M. Genesee, elected in July, 1919. There are 436 professed Sisters, 42 novices, and 41 postulants. The Sisters have 52 parish schools distributed as follows: Green Bay, 32; Milwaukee, 4; Omaha, 2; La Crosse, 3; Grand Rapids, 1; Columbus, 6; Superior, 1; Marquette, 2; and a school of music at Marquette. The number of teachers actively engaged in school work is 266. Holy Family Hospital at Manitowoc, Wis., Good Samaritan Hospital at Zanesville, Ohio, and St. Joseph's Home for the Aged at West Point, Neb., are in charge of the congregation.

Franciscans of the Immaculate Conception.—This community, with mother-house at Little Falls, Minn., has charge of the following institutions: St. Gabriel's Hospital, Little Falls, erected 1915, dedicated 1916; St. Francis' Hospital, Breckenridge, Minn.; St. James Hospital, Perham, Minn.; St. Joseph's Hospital, Dodgeville, Wis., erected 1913-14; St. Ansgar's Hospital, Moorhead, Minn., bought from the Lutherans 24 October, 1920, dedicated and blessed the same year; St. Ott's Orphanage, Little Falls, Minn., averaging about 120 children a year, the children there finishing the eighth grade; Aged People's Home, Little Falls, Minn., averaging about 35 to 40 aged people a year. Connected with St. Gabriel's, St. Francis', and St. Ansgar's Hospitals are training schools for nurses. Notable members of the community recently deceased are: Sister Mary Rose, mother general for twelve years, died 7 November, 1921; Sister Mary Francis, first superior, died 11 December, 1915; Sister Mary Magdalen, one of the oldest members of the community, died 28 September, 1917; Sister M. Baptista, died 16 February, 1921; and Sister M. Joseph, died 7 April, 1921. The present superior of the community is Mother M. Teresa, elected 1918 and re-elected 1921. The community numbers 74 professed Sisters and 21 novices.

Little Franciscan Sisters of Mary.—This community, founded at Worcester, Mass., has its mother-house at Baie-St.-Paul, Canada. It is affiliated by a diploma dated 7 October, 1904, to the Grand Order of the Seraphic St. Francis of Assisi, and received its decree of canonical erection 25 December, 1914, on the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation. The three following foundresses successively governed the institute: Mother Mary Joseph (1889-93), Mother Mary Ann of Jesus (1893-1908), and Mother Mary Dominic (1908-20). The present superior general is Mother Mary Clare of Assisi. The postulate for candidates lasts one year, and the novitiate lasts also a year; then the novices are admitted to annual vows which they renew for four years, after which they make perpetual vows. To conform with the Canonical Code the constitutions were subjected to slight changes, viz.: facility to extend the term of the postulate, novitiate, and temporary vows; also to anticipate the renewal of said vows in cases where it would be impossible for the missionary Sisters to renew them on date of expiration; while on the other hand, the Sisters who are to make their perpetual vows must have a dispensation if it is impossible for them to be at the mother-house for canonical examination on or before thirty days previous to date of making their vows. The institute has at present 17 houses, of which 9 are in the United States. Seven of these are schools at: Marinette, Wis. (1901), 190 pupils; Auburn, Me. (1904), 539 pupils; Fort Kent, Me. (1906), 580 pupils (also a boarding school for girls with 55 and one boys' with 49); Menominee, Mich. (1907), 179 pupils; Marquette, Mich. (1911), 191 pupils; Eagle Lake, Me. (1916), 260 pupils; Wallagras, Me. (founded 1898, closed 1913, reopened 1920), 122 pupils; total number of pupils, 2061. The Sisters have a home for the aged and abandoned of both sexes at Worcester, Mass., with 156 inmates, and a hospital at Eagle Lake, Me. (1906), with 27 patients, having cared for 2682 patients since 1912. At Auburn, Me., a boarding school was closed last year to give more space for class rooms. According to 1914 statistics the institute had treated, cared for, educated and instructed 21,267 persons of both sexes as follows: 1255 aged, 1838 patients, 352 insane, 765 orphans, 17,057 pupils. Up to 1921 the institute counts 27 deceased Sisters of whom 2 were foundresses. The community comprises 252 professed religious, 27 novices, and 37 postulants.

Franciscan Sisters of Penance and Christian Charity.—This congregation has its mother-house and novitiate at Stella Niagara, N. Y., where there is also a seminary for the education of girls, with 116 pupils in 1921. In the Diocese of Buffalo the Sisters conduct the Buffalo Academy of the Sacred Heart, St. Anne's St. Joachim's, St. Michael's, Mt. Carmel and St. John's (La Salle, N. Y.), parochial schools, having a total of 2753 pupils under the direction of 136 Sisters. St. Vincent's Orphanage in Columbus, Ohio, founded in 1875, now cares for 248 orphans. St. Ann's Foundling Asylum was founded in 1908, and in 1921 took care of 109 infants. In these two institutions 34 Sisters are employed. The Sisters conduct six parochial schools in the Diocese of Columbus, where 1920 children are educated under the supervision of 52 Sisters. St. Aloysius Academy in New Lexington, Ohio, was founded in 1875. There are 147 pupils in attendance here, with 28 Sisters in charge. In Charleston, W. Va., the Sisters are in charge of the Sacred Heart School which has 344 pupils. The two Indian Missions, St. Francis and Holy Rosary, both in South Dakota, care for 555 children. These Missions were founded in 1886 and 1888 respectively. In Nebraska the Sisters have academies in O'Neill and Alliance. They have three hospitals in the West: the Sacred Heart Hospital in Havre, Mont.; St. Joseph's Hospital in Minot, North Dakota., and St. Joseph's Hospital in Alliance, Neb. They have parochial schools in Los Angeles, Cal.; Sacramento, Cal.; Portland, Ore.; Spokane, Uniontown, and Cowlitz, Wash.; Denver, Col.; and Havre, Mont. In 1921 the Grace Day Nursery was opened in Sacramento, Cal. The total number of Sisters working in the United States (1922), is 446, including 394 professed religious, 31 novices, and 11 postulants. In their 4 academies, 21 parochial schools, 2 Indian Missions, 3 hospitals, orphanage, founding asylum, day nursery, and 2 homes for working girls, they care for 12,189 seculars.

The congregation throughout the world is divided into 6 provinces, with a total of 128 convents, more than 45,000 souls being confided to the care of the Sisters, who number 2859 professed religious, 272 novices, and 119 postulants, a total of 3250 members. Statistics for each province are (1920) as follows: Holland, 717 professed, 65 novices, 18 postulants, 28 convents; Germany, 1240 professed, 150 novices, 70 postulants, 41 convents; India, 146 professed, 6 novices, 6 convents; Brazil, 350 professed, 24 novices, 17 postulants, 23 convents; North America, 396 professed, 27 novices, 14 postulants, 27 convents; Africa, 20 professed, and 3 convents.

Franciscan Sisters of the Perpetual Adoration.—This community, with mother-house at St. Rose Convent, La Crosse, Wisconsin, now numbers 601 professed Sisters, 32 novices, and 37 postulants. They have at present 14 foundations and are in charge of 3 hospitals caring for 6412 patients in 1920, 1 orphanage with 212 orphans, 2 academies, 78 parochial schools with 11,039 pupils, and 1 Indian school. The present superior general is Mother M. Ludovica.

Poor Sisters of St. Francis of the Perpetual Adoration.—These Sisters, with mother-house at Olpe, Germany, have a provincial house at La Fayette, Indiana. The present mother general is Sister Verena Schulte, elected 1916, and the provincial superior is Sister M. Josepha. Recently deceased religious of note are: Sister M. Leonarda, superioress of St. Alexius Hospital, Cleveland, Ohio, died 2 November, 1916; Sister M. Engelberta, superioress of St. Francis Convent, La Fayette, Indiana, died 1 March, 1918; Sister Alexia, superior of St. Joseph's Hospital, Memphis, Tenn., died 26 August, 1919. New foundations have been made as follows: in 1913, Sacred Heart School, Gallup, N. M.; St. Anthony's Orphanage, Albuquerque, N. M.; St. Francis Hospital, Indianapolis, Ind.; in 1914, St. Anthony's School, Columbus, Neb.; in 1915, St. Edward's School, Lowell, Ind.; in 1916, St. Mary's Hospital, Gallup, N. M.; St. Stanislaus School, Omaha, Neb.; in 1921, St. Mary's School, Huntington, Ind.; school at San Fidel, N. M. The present number of foundations is 76, including 21 hospitals, 50 schools, 3 orphanages, 1 home for the aged; and St. Francis Convent. The community numbers 830 professed religious, 66 novices, and 15 postulants.

Missionary Franciscan Sisters of the Immaculate Conception.—This congregation has its mother-house and novitiate in Rome and a branch novitiate at Newton, Mass. It was founded in 1873 by Mother Mary Ignatius of Jesus, the first house in America being established at Belle Prairie, Minn. In 1880 the mother-house was established in Rome. Mother Mary Ignatius died in 1894 and was succeeded as superior by Mother Mary of the Angels, during whose term of office an orphanage for colored children was opened in Savannah, Ga. (1897) and another orphanage opened in Jersey City, N. J. (1898). With the permission and approval of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda a house was opened in Fayum, Upper Egypt, in 1899. A flourishing school is now carried on there for the instruction of children of Coptic and Mahomedan parents as well as those few of Catholic parentage. On the expiration of the term of Mother Mary of the Angels, Mother Mary Antonia was elected superior general in 1900. She died in 1901 and was succeeded by Mother Mary Columba. During the twelve years of her administration new houses were opened in Augusta, Ga. (1901), Boston (1902), West Hoboken, N. J. (1904), Cairo, Egypt (1907), New Castle, Penn. (1908), Bronx, N. Y. (1909), Belle Prairie, Minn. (1911), Brooklyn, N. Y. (1911), Chicago, Ill. (1911), Newton, Mass. (1912), Montreal, Canada (1912), Pittsburgh, Penn. (1912). The first convent erected in Belle Prairie was maliciously destroyed by fire and the new convent erected in 1911. At the general chapter of the institute held in Rome, July, 1913, Mother Mary Agnella was elected superior general. During her term of office 3 new houses were opened: Damanhour, Egypt (1913), Rockford, Ill. (1915), Philadelphia, Penn. (1918). Mother Mary Agnella died in 1921. Mother Mary Benignus, the present superior general, was elected in July, 1919. In September of that year a settlement house was opened in Syracuse, N. Y. In January, 1920, a mission was opened at Chester, Penn., and in February, 1921, a home for Italian children was opened in Jamaica Plain, Mass. The Convent of Our Lady of the Angels in Tenaflly, N. J., which was opened on 16 June, 1921, serves as a summer home for the Sisters and is the seat of publication of their periodical "Annals of Our Lady of the Angels." A branch novitiate was established in Boston in 1903 and transferred to Newton, Mass., in 1912. The present number of mission houses is 21. The congregation comprises 190 professed Sisters, 14 novices, and 9 postulants.

Polish Franciscan School Sisters:—This congregation has its mother-house at St. Louis, Mo., and its novitiate at Ferguson, Mo., the new site for the novitiate having been purchased in 1921. The present superior general is Mother Hilaria. The congregation numbers 115 professed religious, 12 novices, and 8 postulants, with 19 foundations.

Franciscan Sisters of the Sorrowful Mother. See SORROWFUL MOTHER, SISTERS OF THE.

Bernardine Sisters of St. Francis. These Sisters have their mother-house and novitiate at Reading, Penna. They were founded in 1894 by Mother Weronica Grzedowska who with three Sisters came to America from Zakliczyn in Poland, having been sent by the Bishop of Tarnowa. The Sisters opened a small parochial school at Mt. Carmel, Penna., where they remained for one year. In 1895 they established the mother-house at Reading, Penna., and the novitiate was opened there in 1901. In 1912 Mother Hedwig Leszczynska, the present general superior, succeeded Mother Weronica. The latter died in 1916. The aim of the congregation is to teach in parochial elementary and higher schools and to take care of orphans. At present the Sisters have 42 schools scattered throughout the States of Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. They also have charge of St. Francis Orphan Asylum, Reading, Penna., incorporated 1905, and the St. Stanislaus Orphan Asylum, Nanticoke, Penna., opened in 1919.

The congregation numbers 230 professed Sisters, 70 novices, and 40 postulants.

Felician Sisters, O. S. F. See under FELICIAN SISTERS

THIRD ORDER OF OUR LADY OF MOUNT CARMEL (cf. C. E., XIV—637d). A good deal of discussion has recently taken place on the origin of the Third Order, but no definite result has been arrived at. Fr. Gabriel Wessels (Analecta Ordinis Carmelitarum, vol. III, 259 sqq.) is of opinion that until the end of the fifteenth century there was no real distinction between the convents of the Second and Third Orders, in other terms that the distinction arises from the stricter or less strict observance of enclosure and other points of the rule, and as this distinction resulted chiefly from the Tridentine legislation the division would seem to be even somewhat later than stated by this accurate and cautious observer. A new rule for the Tertiaries of the Discalced Carmelites living in the world was approved by the Holy See 6 March, 1921.

BENEDICT ZIMMERMAN.

Third Orders, SECULAR.—Secular Third Orders are composed ordinarily of lay persons, known as tertiaries, who aim at Christian perfection by following a rule approved for them by the Holy See, embodying the spirit of a particular religious order as far as that is compatible with their condition as lay people. The permission of the Holy See is required before a third order can be established, and this has been granted to the Premonstratensians, Dominicans, Friars Minor, Carmelites, Augustinians, Minims, Servites, and Trinitarians, while the Benedictines have their oblates who resemble the tertiaries. While religious of these orders can enroll individual tertiaries, permission of the local ordinary is necessary for the erection of a sodality of the third order, and special permission is needed if the members are to wear a distinctive habit while assisting at sacred functions. No one who has made vows in any religious institute can belong to a third order, except by special permission of the Holy See, even though he had been a tertiary before making his vows; however, if he is freed from his vows and returns to the world, his tertiarian membership revives. No one may be a member of two third orders; though for good reason a tertiary may pass from one order to another, or from one sodality to another in the same order. Tertiaries may be, but are not obliged to be, present as a body at public religious offices, but if they do take part they must wear their insignia and have their own cross; they do not share in the indulgences granted to the first and second orders, except by special indult. A general blessing or deprecativ absolution with a plenary indulgence annexed may be given publicly to all tertiaries on stated feasts, when they assemble for that purpose; if the priest whose office it is to give it is absent, any priest, secular or regular, who is authorized to hear confessions may bestow it; furthermore, the blessing may be received privately from any confessor after sacramental absolution on any of the specified feasts or the preceding day, and in case of Franciscan tertiaries on any day also within the octaves of the feasts.

Thirion, JULIEN, scientist, b. at Selayn, Namur, Belgium, in 1852; d. on 23 February, 1918. He studied at Namur and at the age of twenty entered the Society of Jesus; during his course of training he specialized in mathematical physics and subsequently he was sent to Louvain to supervise the scientific training of the young Jesuits. As early as 1880 he had contributed a number of historical astronomical articles to the "Précis historiques" (Brussels), and later published a "History of Mathematics" in the same review. In 1896 he was appointed secretary of the Société scientifique de Bruxelles and editor of the "Annales" of the Society and later of the "Revue des questions scientifiques." As a professor Thirion was noted for the lucidity of his exposition of intricate questions, which he rendered more attractive by brief historical sketches; so in his contribution to the "Revue des questions scientifiques" the same lucidity and attractiveness are noted. Optics was his favorite subject, but he contributed many interesting scientific biographies.

SCHAFFERS in Revue de quest. scient., XXVIII (Louvain, 1920), 27-52, giving bibliography of Thirion's writings.

THRACE, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (THRACIAE BULGARORUM), was erected 7 April, 1883, for the Greco-Bulgarian Catholics in European Turkey. The total population of the territory numbers about 410,000 and of this number only 3000 are Catholic. These are served by 16 missionary priests, 20 churches and chapels, 13 schools with 500 pupils. At present (1922) there is no vicar apostolic named for this territory.

Three Rivers, DIOCESE OF (TRIFLUVIANENSIS; of C. E., XIV—708d), formed from the Archdiocese of Quebec to which it is now suffragan. It comprises a Catholic population of 108,000 French Canadians and about 2800 English and other nationalities. During the World War the clergy and laity of this diocese took an active part in organizing works of patriotism and charity, and large numbers of the young men joined the ranks, many of them giving up their lives and others receiving decorations of honor. Recently the most important developments in the progress of the diocese have been the holding of a diocesan synod, the organization of the "Corporation ouvrière Catholique," a society for Catholic working men, and the establishment of a semi-weekly journal. The diocese has however lost several prominent members by the deaths of: Mgr. Hermyle Baril, P. A., vicar general and administrator of the diocese, principal of the normal school and one time superior of the seminary, died 17 February, 1915; Canon H. Trahan, pastor of Saint Sévère, deceased in 1917; His Honor Judge F. S. Tourigny, died in 1916. The diocese comprises, according to latest statistics, 57 parishes, 80 churches, 4 missions, 9 stations, 1 monastery for men, 3 for women, 1 convent for men, 9 for women, 135 secular and 30 regular clergy, 175 lay brothers, 1 seminary with 355 professors and an alumni of 500, 18 higher schools for boys with 150 teachers and 3000 students, 20 higher schools for girls with 175 teachers and 3500 students, 12 academies with 60 teachers and 1800 pupils (800 boys and 1000 girls), 1 normal school with 10 teachers and 100 pupils, 333 elementary schools with 600 teachers and 30,000 pupils, 3 industrial schools, 2 diocesan missionary organizations, 4 homes, 6 orphanages, 2 hospitals, 1 reformatory, 4 other charitable institutions and 1 poor house. Four of the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them and for the most part the schools receive financial aid from the government. Among the clergy the Society of Priests Adorers, Society of the Blessed Virgin, the St. Thomas Aquinas Fund, and the "Société d'une Messe," are organized, and among the laity the Third Orders of St. Francis and of St. Dominic, the League of the Sacred Heart, and the St. Vincent de Paul Society are established, besides some minor associations. The see is at present filled by Rt. Rev. François-Xavier Cloutier, born in this diocese in 1848, ordained in 1872, appointed bishop 8 May, 1899, and named an assistant at the pontifical throne, 2 February, 1916.

Thureau-Dangin, PAUL, historian, b. at Paris on 14 December, 1837; d. at Cannes on 25 February, 1913. He studied law, practiced in the Court of Appeal in Paris and was an auditor in the Conseil d'Etat. His taste, however, was historical and literary rather than forensic; and as associate editor of "Le Français" and a contributor to "Le Correspondant" he supported the Orleanist family. In 1863 he published "La Pologne et les traités de Vienne" and four years later he abandoned all his other pursuits to devote himself to the study of history and the interests of religion. In his "Histoire de la Monarchie de Juillet" (7 vols., 1884-92), his documentations, his power of synthesis, together with his accuracy and impartiality reveal the master historian. This work and his zeal for the purity of the language won for him in 1893 a chair in the French Academy, of which he became perpetual secretary in 1908. Thureau-Dangin was one of the few Frenchmen who grasped the intricacies of the Oxford Movement and its consequences, and in his "Renaissance Catholique en Angleterre" (1899) he traces in detail the simultaneous development of High Church Anglicanism and Catholicism in England from the beginning of the Oxford Movement. He was inclined to liberalism at times in the matter, for instance, of Biblical criticism and the relations of the Church and the State, but on realizing the Church's teaching he corrected his stand unhesitatingly. Among his other writings are "Royalistes et Républicains" (1874); "Paris, capitale pendant la révolution française" (1872); and "Un prédicateur populaire dans l'Italie de la Renaissance, Saint Bernardin de Sienne" (1896).

Thuringia (cf. C. E., XIV—712c), a new state in Central Germany formed on 24 December, 1919, by the union of the former grand duchies of Saxe-Weimar-Eisenach, Saxe-Meiningen, Gotha, Saxe-Altenburg-Reuss, Schwarzburg-Rudolstadt, Schwarzburg-Sonderhausen. The area is 4546 square miles; the population according to the last census (1 December, 1910) was 1,510,538 or 3322 inhabitants per square miles. The capital is Weimar; other towns are Gera, Gotha, Jena, Eisenach, Greiz, Rudolstadt, Arnstadt, and Sonderhausen. Until the formation of the new constitution the Legislature (Volksrat) was composed of the deputies of the Legislatures of the seven republics; the executive authority being in the hands of a ministry (Staatsrat) composed of representatives of the government of each of the seven states.

Tibet, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TIBETANENSIS; of C. E., III—678b, VI—603c), in China, with episcopal residence at Ta-tai-lu. By a decree of 20 March, 1912, Propaganda added to this vicariate the country between the boundaries of Tibet and the territory of the East Indies known as British Boutan, which was too far from Calcutta, on which it had formerly depended. The vicariate is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Pierre-Philippe Giraudeau, titular Bishop of Thynias. The territory counts 3789 Catholics and 600 catechumens out of a total population of 4,000,000. It is served by 25 European priests, 2 native priests, 18 churches and chapels, 34 stations, 1 seminary with 10 students, 21 schools with 266 pupils, 2 hospitals, 5 orphanages and 6 Chinese religious.

Tiernan, FRANCES CHRISTINE, authoress, known more widely by her pseudonym, "Christian Reid," b. at Salisbury, North Carolina, on 5 July, 1846; d. there on 24 March, 1920; daughter of Colonel Charles Frederick and Elizabeth Clarissa (Caldwell) Fisher.

Her mother was a Catholic; her father an Episcopalian. Colonel Fisher fell at the first battle of Manassas, and his daughter remained loyal to his Confederate ideals to the end. Beginning with "Valerie Aylmer" in 1870, Christian Reid achieved enviable success as a writer of elegant fiction. In "The Land of the Sky" she immortalized western North Carolina, and directly led to the development of the mountain country of that State. Her war drama, "Under the Southern Cross," with its impassioned presentation of the views of the South upon the constitutional right of secession, has enshrined her name in the hearts of the Southerners. In 1887 she married James Marquis Tiernan and accompanied him to Mexico where she sojourned till his death in 1898. While there she wrote among other fiction "The Land of the Sun" (1894), one of her most interesting tales. Early in life she was received into the Catholic Church by Cardinal Gibbons, then only Vicar Apostolic of North Carolina. She practised her religion zealously and to her is mainly due the erection of the Church of the Sacred Heart in her native town. In 1909 Christian Reid was honored with the Lætare Medal by the University of Notre Dame. Between 1870 and 1915 she wrote more than forty novels, of which the following, in addition to those mentioned above, are the best known: "A Daughter of Bohemia," "Heart of Steel," "The Picture of Las Cruces," "Weighed in the Balance," "A Little Maid of Arcady," "The Wargrave Trust," "The Secret Bequest," "A Question of Honor."

Tierradentro, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (DE TIERRADENTRO), in Colombia, erected by a decree of 13 May, 1921. The territory comprised in this prefecture was taken from the diocese of Popayan and entrusted to the Lazarists. No prefect has been appointed yet and no statistics are published.

Time, COMPUTATION OF (cf. C. E., XIV—726a).—In reckoning time the following regulations have been laid down in the Code (can. 31-4). A day consists of twenty-four continuous hours beginning at midnight; a week, of seven days; a month means thirty and a year three hundred and sixty-five, unless it is stated that they are to be taken as in the calendar. It is to be noted that while in canon law a day implies continuity of time, a week does not; hence any seven canonical days, even not continuous, make a week, unless the law says it refers to a calendar week. The time of day is to be reckoned by the common local custom, but if there is question of saying Mass privately, reading the Office privately, receiving Holy Communion, or observing the fast or abstinence, one may also follow the true or mean local time, or the regional or other extraordinary legal regional or other extraordinary legal time. Vermeersch-Creusen and Claeys-Bouuaert believe this optional computation of time may be used in regard to indulgences and cessation from servile work; and the former authorities, contrary to Maroto and others, see no difficulty in allowing one to recite the Breviary, for instance, according to the true time, observe abstinence according to mean time, and the Eucharistic fast according to local time. The concessions made regarding the calculation of time do not in any way affect the liturgical laws. Moreover, the requirements of the local civil law as to the time for fulfilling contracts are to be observed, unless the contrary is expressly agreed to by the contracting parties.

If a month or year is expressly or equivocally mentioned, e. g., the month of February, next year, it is to be taken as in the calendar. If the exact time at which anything begins is mentioned neither expressly nor implicitly, e. g., suspension from saying

Mass for a month or two years, three months vacation each year, etc., the time is to be reckoned from the moment to moment if the time is continuous as in the first example, the months and years are to be taken as in the calendar; if the time is not continuous as in the second instance, week, month and year mean seven, thirty, and three hundred and sixty-five days respectively. If the time referred to consists of several days, or of one or more weeks, months, or years, and the term from which the period is reckoned is mentioned expressly or implicitly: (a) months, and years are taken as in the calendar; (b) if the term coincides with the beginning of the day, e. g., two month's vacation from 15 August, the computation begins with the first date mentioned, the term ending at the beginning of the last day of the same number, i. e., at midnight of 14-15 October; (c) if the term from which a period is reckoned does not coincide with the beginning of a day, e. g., the fourteenth year of age, a year's novitiate, eight days after the death of a bishop; where, as in the first two examples, the terms begin at the moment of one's birth, or of one's taking the vows respectively; the first day is not counted and the term finishes at the end of the last day of the same number, i. e., one who entered the novitiate on 7 September, 1918, completed the two years at midnight of 7-8 September, 1920; (d) if the month has no corresponding number, e. g., one month from 30 January, the term will end with the beginning or the end of the last day of the month, as the case may be; (e) where acts of the same kind are to be repeated at stated times, e. g., three years to perpetual profession after temporary profession, three years to a new election, the time finishes on the same monthly date as that on which it began, but the new act may be performed at any time that day.

Turin, DIOCESE OF. See KNIN

Tinos, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See NAKOS and TINOS

Tiraspol (or Chersonese) DIOCESE OF (TIRAS-POLENSIS seu SARATOVENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—739a) in the government of Cherson, Russia, suffragan of Mohileff. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Joseph-Louis Kessler, born in Otrogovca in 1862, served as a pastor, then canon, and inspector of the upper seminary, and was appointed bishop 1 April, 1904. He has the privilege of two suffragan bishops who reside at Tiraspol and Saratow, but at present no one has been appointed to these positions. The administrator apostolic for the Armenians of the diocese is Rev. Serge Der Abraamian who resides at Tiflis. The episcopal residence is at Saratow. By a Consistorial decree of 2 August, 1921, the boundaries of the diocese were somewhat changed by the separation of five parishes which were added to the diocese of Jassy. The latest statistics available are those of 1911 which credit the diocese with 359,823 Catholics of the Latin and Armenian Rites (Armenians 37,088); 125 parishes, 93 chapels, and 179 secular priests of the Latin Rite; 56 parishes, 5 chapels and 54 priests of the Armenian Rite. This is the only Russian diocese which has an upper and lower seminary, Catholic parish schools and a religious weekly (published in German). The two seminaries which are situated in Saratow have 161 students making lower studies and 26 making higher studies.

Tivoli, DIOCESE OF (TIVERTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—747b), in the province of Rome, central Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Luigi Sciarano; born in Trivento 27 October, 1867; served as a canon and vicar general, was named a private chamberlain 24 May, 1913, prthonotary apostolic in 1915, and appointed bishop 22 March, 1917, succeeding Rt. Rev. Gabriel Vettori, transferred to Pistola 6 December, 1915. According to 1920 statistics the Catholic population of the diocese numbers 40,000 and there are 42 parishes, 72 secular and 35 regular clergy, 20 seminarians, 68 Sisters and 108 churches or chapels.

Tlaxacala, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See PUEBLA DE LOS ANGELES

Todi, DIOCESE OF (TUDERTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—754a), in the province of Perugia, central Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Luigi Zaffarini, born in this diocese in 1864, served as archpriest of San-Terenziano, appointed titular Bishop of Sasima 22 January, 1915, and named administrator apostolic of Todi, and transferred 6 December, 1915. The ancient cathedral of this diocese was dedicated to Saint Terentius, while the new one, built on the ruins of the former, is dedicated to Our Lady. The diocese embraces a Catholic population of 45,200, and according to 1920 statistics has 98 parishes, 99 secular and 15 regular clergy, 40 seminarians, 10 Brothers, 47 Sisters and 249 Churches or chapels.

Togo, FRENCH, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOGENSIS; cf. C. E., I—180-189), in Western Africa. The prefecture apostolic of Togo, erected in 1892 and entrusted to the Fathers of the Divine Word of Steyl, Holland, was raised to a vicariate apostolic 16 March, 1914. Owing to the conditions brought about by the war, the missionaries were obliged to leave, and the vicar apostolic, Rt. Rev. Frans Wolf, appointed by the decree of erection, and titular Bishop of Byblos, is still forced to remain in Europe. From January, 1918, until January, 1921, the vicariate was administered by Rt. Rev. Ignace Hummel, Vicar Apostolic of the Gold Coast. That year the vicariate was given over to the Society of the African Missions of Lyons, and on 11 January Monsignor Jean-Marie Cessou was named administrator of the vicariate. During the World War Monsignor Cessou with Rev. Father Alphonse Seitie and six other priests served in various capacities and the two named were decorated with the Croix de Guerre. The vicariate, which comprises the whole territory of Togo, entrusted to the French by the Peace Conference, is divided into nine districts. The Christian portion of the population, numbering about 24,942, is composed of members of two tribes, the Ewe and the Gengbe. According to latest statistics it comprises 9 quasi-parishes, 9 missions, 22 churches, 134 mission stations, 2 convents of religious with 6 Sisters, 13 missionary priests, 6 lay brothers, 3 seminarians, 10 higher schools for boys with 48 teachers and 1939 pupils, 1 higher school for girls with 4 teachers and 300 pupils, 1 industrial school which trains printers, blacksmiths, book-binders, shoe makers, cabinet makers, tailors and watch repairers, and has 14 teachers and 86 students, 1 home for the destitute, and 2 refuges. The industrial school and two of the other schools are partially supported by the government. The Congregation of Mary with 46 branches for men, young men, women and girls, is organized.

Tokio, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TOKIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—754d.), in Japan. A decree of 13 August, 1912, separated a portion of its territory from the archdiocese and erected it into the prefecture apostolic of Nygata. The present incumbent of the see is Most Rev. Jean-Pierre Rey, of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, appointed 1 June, 1912, to succeed Most Rev. François Bonne, d. 11 January, 1912. Born in Julienas, France, in 1858, Archbishop Rey made his studies in Lyons and the seminary of the Foreign Missionaries in Paris, was ordained in 1882 and was sent to Japan, where he became vicar general in 1906. Latest statistics credit the archdiocese with 15,987,516, of whom 9685 are Catholic; 28 European priests, 3 Japanese priests, 2 communities of men with 26 religious, 3 communities of women with 58 Sisters, 17 schools with 1872 pupils and 39 churches and chapels.

Tokio, CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY OF, in Japan. This institution, conducted by the Jesuits, originated in the mind of Pope Pius X, in consequence of a report made to him by the then Bishop of Portland (now Cardinal O'Connell), on returning to Rome from a special embassy to the Mikado in 1905. In 1908, Fr. James Rockliff, S.J., Fr. Henri Boucher, S.J., and Fr. Joseph Dahlgren, S.J., went to Japan to found the university, landing at Yokohama on 17 October of that year. Archbishop Pierre Rey of Tokio placed at their disposal a residence which had originally been erected for a Catholic students' dormitory. Here they devoted themselves to the study of the Japanese language and customs until a suitable location for the university buildings was secured in April, 1912. This plot consists of a little less than five acres, just within the ancient rampart and moat of the city of Tokio (pop. 3,000,000), and midway between the two imperial palaces, easily accessible by the Yokohama Interurban, the City Belt Line and two trans-urban electric lines.

Government permission for the opening of a private school, of college and university rank (Koto Gakko and Daigaku) was secured, and classes opened with an enrollment of twenty students in April, 1913. Faculty and students were both housed at this time in old Japanese buildings, standing on the property, and wholly inadequate to the purpose. The erection of a suitable classroom building was begun immediately, and at a cost of 120,000 yen, was completed and opened for classes in September, 1914. This building is of brick, with wooden bracings rendering it as near earthquake-proof as anything not of concrete and steel can be. It has capacity for four hundred students, and includes faculty offices, students' library and two exhibition halls. The faculty are still huddled into the Japanese buildings above mentioned; they now number ten Fathers representing eight nationalities drawn from Europe, Asia and America. Twenty extern Japanese professors are employed. The enrollment of students has steadily grown to one hundred and sixty. The first graduating exercises were held in March, 1918, when eleven students were graduated. Their immediate employment in responsible positions by leading firms and departments of the Government, gave marked proof of the reputation which the university enjoys for a high standard of studies and hard work. The present course of studies corresponds as closely to that of Jesuit universities in other parts of the world as the vast divergence of circumstances will permit. Chinese takes the place of Greek, modern European languages supplant Latin. The course ends with two years of Scholastic philosophy and ethics. Courses in foreign service, architecture and journalism are expected in the near future.

The legal status of the university prior to 1920 was that of a private institution recognized by the Government but not enjoying an equality with imperial schools of the same rank. In 1920 the Law of Endowments went into effect, extending to endowed private institutions the right to give degrees and enjoy privileges equal to those of imperial institutions. The endowment fund prescribed by the Japanese Government for the Catholic University was 600,000 yen, about $300,000. Until this has been collected the university will exist only on tolerance. The University is now under the Presidency of the Rev. Herman Hofman, S.J., who was installed in 1913. Its Japanese address is Jochi Daigaku, Kojimachi, Tokio, Japan.

Toledo, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TOLETANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—755b.) in Spain. This see is filled by His Eminence Cardinal Almaraz y Santos, born in Vallès, Spain, in 1847; he studied in Salamanca, was made a vicar sometime after his ordination, and in 1874 became canon magistral of the cathedral of Salamanca. He was later made secretary of the chapter, honorary chamberlain, preacher of the Royal Chamber, and in 1885 was named secretary to the Bishop of Madrid and archpriest of that cathedral. He later became vicar capitular, and a professor in the seminary and then dean of the chapter in 1891. He was appointed Bishop of Palencia 18 January, 1893, promoted to the archdiocese of Seville 18 April, 1907, and was proposed by the King for the primate see of Toledo 12 November, 1920, and transferred by the Consistory, on 16 December. In 1908 the King again honored him by naming him a senator in virtue of personal title, and on 27 November, 1911, he was created a cardinal priest. The Cardinal is assisted by Rt. Rev. Matthew Colon y Canals, an Augustinian Monk, who was appointed titular bishop of Andrappa and auxiliary at Toledo 29 July, 1921. The Archbishop of this see, besides being Primate of Spain, is also Patriarch of the East Indies. The Catholic population of the archdiocese numbers 400,022; latest statistics credit it with 439 parishes divided among 33 archpresbyteries, 940 priests, 489 chapels or sanctuaries, 75 convents with 130 religious and 1025 Sisters.

Toledo, DIOCESE OF (TOLEDENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—579c), comprises 6969 square miles in the State of Ohio. In May, 1921, Rt. Rev. Joseph Schrembs, appointed to this see as its first bishop 11 August, 1911, was transferred to Cleveland, leaving behind him a record of ten years accomplishments only equalled by the work of the pioneer bishops of this country. Until the appointment of his successor, Rt. Rev. John T. O'Connell acted as administrator, and on 30 November of the same year Rt. Rev. Samuel A. Stritch, chancellor of the Diocese of Nashville, was named the second bishop.

The diocese (1921) contains 102 parishes, with 123 churches, 16 chapels, 21 missions and 18 stations. One monastery of men, Redemptorists, at Lima, and one of women, the Visitation nuns, in Toledo, as well as the Franciscan Minor Conventual Fathers and the Sisters of Mercy and Sisters of St. Francis (Polish Province) have been established in the diocese recently. There are now 136 secular and 45 regular priests, about 700 Sisters of whom 160 are engaged in hospitals and refuges, 12 contemplatives, and the remainder occupied in school work. A Jesuit university and college, with 24 professors and 365 students, three academies, having 923 students, and ten high schools, with 887 students, provide for higher education. Elementary schools number 84, with 457 teachers and 16,541 children enrolled. The diocese is well provided with charitable institutions, having 2 orphanages, 2 homes for the aged, 1 House of the Good Shepherd, 4 hospitals, 1 working girls' home, a community house, a settlement house, and a day nursery. In some places a community chest provides partial public support to institutions, and in a few strictly Catholic localities district schools are taught by Sisters. Almost every priest is a member of the Pactum Apostolicum, and the Eucharistic League is well supported, a diocesan Eucharistic Conference with a public procession being held each year. The Knights of Columbus, Knights of St. John, Catholic Knights of Ohio, Holy Name Society, National Catholic Welfare Council, Ladies' Catholic Benefit Association, Catholic Boy Scouts, and several Polish, Hungarian and Slovak societies are in a flourishing condition. The Catholic population is about 122,500, comprising Poles, Slovaks, Magyars, Croatians, Italians, French, Germans, Bohemians and Greeks. During the war the diocese sent out 3 priests as chaplains and took care of two camps, Perry and Erie, within its borders.

Tong-king, CENTRAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM CENTRALIS), one of the divisions of the French Colony of the same name, in Asia. It is entrusted to the Dominicans, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Pierre Munagorri y Obyneta, appointed titular Bishop of Pityus 28 July, 1865. The episcopal residence is at Bui-tchu. Out of a total population of 2,000,000 the vicariate has 219,250 Catholics; these are served by 22 missionary priests, 92 native secular priests, 129 seminarians, 615 churches and chapels, 75 stations, 3 orphanages, 2 hospitals, 366 native Tertiary Dominican nuns, 33 Amantes de la Croix (native Sisters), and 15 Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres.

Tong-king, EASTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM ORIENTALIS; cf. C. E., VII—774d), one of the seven vicariates comprised in the French colony of this name, in Indo-China. It comprises four provinces, Hai-duong, Kienh-an, Quanh-yen and Mon-cay, and includes a total population of 2,500,000. It is entrusted to the Dominicans of Spain, with official residence at Hai-phong. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Francisco Ruiz de Azua who succeeded upon the resignation of Rt. Rev. Nicaise Arellano, 14 April, 1919, after an administration of 13 years. Bishop Ruiz de Azua joined the Tong-king mission in 1893, was made provincial vicar of Eastern Tong-king in 1914, and was named coadjutor to the vicar and titular Bishop of Cardica 19 June, 1917. By latest statistics (1922) the vicariate has 53 secular priests, 30 clerics, 13 catechists of the first grade, 77 of the second and 41 of the third grade, and 153 mission servants. Various schools and institutions include a Latin school with 60 pupils, a theological seminary with 29 students, a college for catechists with 53 students, a school under the Brothers of Christian Doctrine with 6 Brothers teaching 206 boys, 2 schools under the Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres with 13 Sisters teaching 177 girls, 4 houses of Sisters of the Third Order of St. Dominic, with 104 Sisters, 9 orphanages caring for 106 orphans, 5 hospitals caring for 194 patients, 1 leper hospital with 80 patients, 1 house of nursing Sisters of St. Paul of Chartres, with 4 Sisters, and 2 homes in which orphans are received, with 33 children. The spiritual progress of the vicariate is best shown by the following statistics for the past year: baptisms of catechumens 362, baptisms of children of Christians 3488, baptisms of dying children of pagan parents 6374, confirmations 3099, ordinations 22, confessions 157,613, communions 271,341, extreme unctions 1526, marriages 796, Christian communities 340. The native Christians number, in all, 79,510, and the European Catholics, 2000.

Tong-king, MARITIME, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM MARITIMUS; cf. C. E., VII—774d), one of the seven ecclesiastical divisions of Tong-king, in Indo-China. This vicariate, erected in 1901, is still under the administration of its first vicar, Rt. Rev.

Jean-Pierre-Alexandre Marcou, of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, appointed titular Bishop of Lysias 18 April, 1895, and named vicar 16 April, 1901. He resides at Phat-Diem and is assisted by a coadjutor, Rt. Rev. Louis-Christian-Marie de Cooman, titular Bishop of Thacia-Montana. Although the work of the missionaries in this territory has met with marked success from a spiritual point of view, they encounter great difficulties in the matter of education. The largest part of the population is of the peasant class, engaged chiefly in farming, with the result that a great scarcity of teachers for the schools is found. To overcome this difficulty however, catechism schools have been established and the children learn the alphabet from the catechism. In all the centers of new Christians catechists, numbering about forty in all, give instruction. This territory embraces a Catholic population of 109,000, and by latest statistics comprises 54 parishes, 405 churches and chapels, 521 Christian communities, 37 missionary priests, 100 native priests, 187 catechists, 3 seminaries, 1 school for catechists, 269 seminarians, 11 houses of religious women, and 143 native religious. The institutions include 68 elementary schools with 80 teachers and 1915 pupils, 4 asylums, 5 hospitals, 6 homes, 6 nurseries, 1 leper asylum with 68 lepers (aided by the State), and 1 school for deaf mutes. The Society of Priests Adorers is organized among the clergy and a bi-monthly journal or review is published for them. During the past year there were 1452 baptisms of infidels, 8196 baptisms of dying children of infidel parents, 4709 baptisms of children of Christian parents, 495,964 confessions, and 1,660,291 communions. One of the most renowned of the clergy who has served in this territory, was the late Father Six, an Annamite priest, pastor of Phat-Diem before the erection of Tong-King Maritime. He was well known for his wisdom and his ability at the court of Hué and in dealing with the high French officials. He was made an honorary minister of the king, the only priest who has ever had this honor, and a chevalier of the légion d'honneur.

Tong-king, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., VIII—778b), an ecclesiastical division of the French Colony of Tong-king in Asia. It is entrusted to the Dominicans, its present vicar being Rt. Rev. Maximin Velasco, appointed titular Bishop of Amorium and coadjutor at Northern Tong-king, 28 July, 1889, succeeding as vicar apostolic 7 February, 1902. His coadjutor at present (1922) is Rt. Rev. Theodore Gordaliza, appointed titular Bishop of Abdera 10 August, 1915. By a decree of 31 December, 1913, the provinces of Lang-son and Cao-bang, and the delegations of Bao-lac, Quan-ba and Dong-yan, in the province of Ha-giang, were separated from the vicariate and erected into a prefecture apostolic. The only statistics published are those collected before this division was made.

Tong-king, SOUTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM MERIDIONALIS, cf. C. E., VII—774d), separated from Western Tong-king in 1846, this territory is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, with episcopal residence at Xa-doai. The present vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. André-Léonce-Joseph Eloy, appointed titular Bishop of Magydos and vicar apostolic 11 December, 1912. The vicariate embraces a Catholic population of 126,000, and is divided into 16 districts and 94 parishes. Latest statistics credit it with 512 churches or chapels, 604 stations, 8 convents with 130 native Sisters (Amantes de la Croix), 29 European missionaries and 133 native priests, 210 catechists, 2 seminaries, 265 seminarians, 20 elementary schools with 20 teachers and 520 pupils, 428 Christian doctrine schools with 17,500 pupils, 1 hospital and 6 orphanages with 1243 orphans. The priests are permitted to minister in 1 public hospital. A diocesan fund for native clergy is established. During the World War 19 of the missionaries were mobilized of whom 7 returned to France and served there; 1 was wounded and 2 received the croix de guerre. When the Indo-Chinese regiments were organized about 250 Annamite Catholics from this vicariate volunteered and many of these also won the croix de guerre.

Tong-king, UPPER, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM SUPERIORIS, cf. C. E., VII—774d), comprises the provinces of Son-tay, Tuyem-gnang and Hung-Hoa, under the collective title of Xu-doai. It is entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Paris, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Paul-Marie Ramond, appointed titular Bishop of Lincoe and named first vicar apostolic of this territory 18 April, 1895. As in other sections of Tong-king, the great handicap to the work of the mission is the great scarcity of schools. There are a number of schools teaching religion, but no professional schools, and a great need exists for some secondary schools, and at least one high school. In all Tong-king there are 800,000 Christians whose children are forced to use the government schools which are often antagonistic toward religion. If the missionaries were in a position to establish schools they would be patronized not only by Christian children, but by numbers of pagans, and thus the work of conversion would be greatly facilitated. However, the very inadequate resources of the mission have always had to be devoted to the work of the native clergy in spreading the Faith and in holding those already converted. By latest statistics (1922) the vicariate comprises 16 parishes, 180 churches and chapels, 16 Christian communities, 230 stations, 61 secular priests of whom 23 are European and 28 native, 5 European and 34 native Sisters, 2 lower seminaries, 68 seminarians, 56 elementary schools with 56 teachers and 750 pupils, 4 asylums, 4 hospitals, and 5 nurseries, besides places in each parish for receiving children, where they are cared for or entrusted to Christian families. The Association of Priests Adorers is formed among the clergy, and parish bulletins in French and Annamite are published at Hanoi. Each year three retreats are held at the episcopal residence at Hung-hoa, for the missionaries, for the native clergy and for the catechists. The Catholics of the vicariate now number 33,500. During the World War five of the missionaries from this territory went to the front and one was killed, one wounded, one decorated with the médaille militaire, and two with the croix de guerre. A large number of Annamite chieftains took part in the fighting.

Tong-king, WESTERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TOM-KIM OCCIDENTALIS, cf. C. E., VII—774d), a division of the French colony of the same name in Indo-China. It is entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the present vicar apostolic being Rt. Rev. Pierre-Jean-Marie Gendreau appointed titular Bishop of Chrysopolis 26 April, 1887, and coadjutor to the vicar of Western Tong-king, whom he succeeded 26 April, 1892. He was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 11 June, 1912. His coadjutor is Rt. Rev. Louis-Marie-Henri Bigolet, titular Bishop of Antiphræ. Latest statistics credit the vicariate with 93 parishes, 721 churches and chapels, 786 mission stations, 137 native secular priests and 36 missionaries, 461 Sisters, 2 seminaries, 270 seminarians, 2 higher schools for boys with 16 teachers and 539 pupils, 1 higher school for girls with 10 teachers and 280 pupils, 156 elementary schools with 172 teachers and 1489 pupils, 5 industrial schools with 9 teachers and 370 pupils, and 766 Christian doctrine schools with 27,992 students. The various institutions include 1 house for retreats, 4 asylums, 3 hospitals, 1 refuge and 7 nurseries. The public university, lyceum, hospitals and prisons permit the priests to minister in them, and 1 Catholic institution receives aid from the government. A society is organized among the young Catholics of the vicariate, and 2 journals, 1 review and 1 "Semaine Religieuse," are published. The Catholic population comprises 154,000 Annamites and 3100 French. Seven of the missionaries and about 6000 Annamite Catholics saw service during the World War.

Toronto, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TORONTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—781d.), in Ontario, Canada. This see is filled by Most Rev. Neil MacNeil, born in Hillsborough in the diocese of Antigonish in 1851; he made his studies in Antigonish and at Propaganda College in Rome, was ordained in 1879, became a professor and then president of St. Francis Xavier's College, Antigonish, founded the journals "Aurore" in 1881, and "Casket" in 1890, and was appointed titular Bishop of Nilopolis and vicar apostolic of St. Georges 6 August, 1895, transferred to St. Georges de Terre-Neuve 18 February, 1904, promoted to the archdiocese of Vancouver 19 January, 1910, and again transferred 10 April, 1912. The Catholic population of the archdiocese numbers 85,000. Latest statistics credit it with 80 parishes, 32 mission stations, 113 secular and 46 regular clergy, 1 seminary, 1 college, 10 convents and academies, 112 churches and 8 hospitals and asylums.

Tortona, DIOCESE OF (DERTONENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—784d), in the province of Alessandria, northern Italy, suffragan of Genoa. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Simone Pietro Grassi, born in Schilpario in 1856, served as provost of Verdello and was appointed bishop 22 January, 1915, to succeed Rt. Rev. Igino Bandi, appointed in 1890, died 8 Sept., 1914. During the World War 200 priests of this diocese served in the ranks, and 25 as military chaplains at the front. A number were killed and many received decorations of valor. All the priests at home, and the laity, took an active part in relief work of all kinds. Upon its reestablishment in 1817 this diocese was taken from the metropolitan see of Milan and made suffragan to Genoa. It now has 295 parishes, 500 secular priests, 430 churches, 6 monasteries of men, 4 convents of men, and 40 of women, 2 seminaries, 65 seminarians, 3 educational institutions for boys with 25 teachers and 300 students, 5 educational institutions for girls, with 30 teachers and 350 pupils, about 30 asylums and 10 hospitals. A mutual aid society is organized among the clergy and a number of associations among the laity. Three diocesan weeklies and fifty parish bulletins are published. A Eucharistic Congress was held in the diocese recently, as well as a centenary celebration in honor of St. Martinianus, believed by one to have been the first bishop of this see.

Tortosa, DIOCESE OF (DERTHUSENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—785c), in the province of Tarragona, Spain, suffragan of Tarragona. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Pedro Rocamora y Garcia, born in La Granja de los Rocamoras in 1832, served as a professor in the seminary of his native city, pastor of Elche, professor of theology, penitentiary canon of the cathedral of Orihuela, elected bishop 21 May, 1894. The diocese comprises Catholics, 725,388, and by latest statistics has 182 parishes, 723 churches, 10 monasteries for men, 50 houses of religious communities of women, 592 priests, 1 seminary, 200 seminarians, elementary schools in each parish, 8 homes for the aged and infirm, 10 asylums, hospitals in each parish, and 6 refuges. A number of lay charitable centers and day nurseries are established, and the priests are permitted to minister in two public institutions. Many associations are formed among the clergy, as well as the laity, and a number of Catholic periodicals are published here.

Toulouse, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TOLOSANENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—795b), comprises the department of Haute-Garonne, France. The see is at present filled by Most Rev. Jean-Augustin Germain, born in Beaucaire in 1839, ordained in 1863, served as a pastor and was appointed Bishop of Rodez 19 April, 1897, promoted 14 December, 1899. He is assisted by an auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Jean Raynaud, titular Bishop of Germia. During the World War 260 priests and seminarians were mobilized from this territory and of this number 38 died, 7 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 2 with the médaille militaire, and 80 with the croix de guerre. The principal event of importance in the archdiocese recently was the "Semaine Sociale" of France, held here in July, 1921. The archdiocese comprises about 400,000 Catholics, and is divided into 552 parishes, having 575 churches. It includes 1 abbey for men, 1 for women, 25 convents for women, 700 secular priests, 1 upper and 2 lower seminaries, 250 seminarians, 1 Catholic university with 27 professors and 75 students, 3 colleges for boys with 350 students, 12 colleges for girls, 195 Catholic elementary schools with 405 teachers, teaching about one-fourth of all the school children, an association of diocesan missionaries at Pibrac, 3 houses of retreats for ladies, 1 home under the Little Sisters of the Poor, 6 orphanages for girls, 1 for boys, 1 home for deaf mutes and 1 home for the blind. Three societies, the League for Deceased Priests, Jésus Hostie, and Priests Adorers, are formed among the clergy, and numerous associations are established among the laity. Two important daily papers, "Express du midi" and the "Télégram," are published here, as well as three weeklies and a number of parish bulletins.

Tournai, DIOCESE OF (TORNACENSIS; cf. C. E., XIV—798b).—Includes the entire province of Hainaut in Belgium. In the early days of the war the Belgians, assisted by some English and French troops, made a stand against the Germans on the Sambre and Mons but in a few weeks the entire diocese was occupied and was "despoiled, ravaged and tortured" by German soldiers. Rt. Rev. Charles Gustave Walravens, Bishop of Tournai, was taken as a hostage by the Germans in August, 1914, and in spite of his seventy-four years was obliged to journey on foot part of the way to Brussels, where he was interned. He was afterwards released but evil treatment and violence inflicted by German authorities on the venerable prelate hastened his death, which occurred at Tournai 13 February, 1915. Nearly all the bishops of Belgium assisted at his funeral, 18 February, where the honors that the Germans wished to render him were banned. He was replaced 6 December, 1915, by Rt. Rev. Amédée Marie Crooy, born at Lxelles-Bruxelles, 29 January, 1869, student at Rome, religious preceptor to the King's son, papal chamberlain, enthroned 8 December, 1915.

In the diocese there are 1,230,000 Catholics, 35 cures with 540 parishes, 1 abbey for men, 87 convents for men and 535 for women, 1220 secular priests, 6500 religious women. The seminary with 80 seminarians is divided into an upper and lower section, the former at Tournai and the latter at Bonne Esperance. There are 11 colleges or institutes for the higher education of boys and 50 colleges for girls. Throughout the diocese there are many lower schools and institutions to whose support the Government contributes. Ten Catholic journals are published.

TOURS, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TURONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—2a), in the department of Indre-et-Loire, France. Most Rev. René-François Renou, who was promoted to this see in 1896, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Apamea, 2 August, 1913. His successor is Most Rev. Albert Nègre, born in Saint Bonnet de Chirac in 1853, made his studies at the French seminary in Rome and served as a diocesan missionary, professor of theology at Mende, vicar general and superior of the upper seminary, was appointed Bishop of Tulle 14 July, 1908, and promoted 5 August, 1913. During the World War 145 priests and seminarians were mobilized from this territory and from this number 5 priests and 5 seminarians were killed, and 2 were decorated with the légion d'honneur. Since the close of the war a constant effort has been made to reorganize the various diocesan works which had become partly disrupted, and to launch new endeavors which should help to rebuild the country, both morally and physically. In 1921 a Catholic Congress was held, and plans were made for a provincial council held during Lent of the present year (1922), which treated of the social needs of the people. A special effort is being made to encourage large families; the archbishop has promised his blessing in personally baptizing the fifth child in each family, and every child after that. In a material way encouragement is being given by the Catholic merchants who make reduction on merchandise purchased by the heads of large families. Latest statistics available give the population of the archdiocese as 341,200, and credit it with 289 first class and succursal parishes, and 50 vicariates.

Trani and Barietta, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TRANI ET BAROLENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—16d), with the united title of Nazareth, and perpetual administration of the diocese of Bisceglia (Vigiliensis). This see is situated in the province of Bari, Italy, and is at present filled by Most Rev. Giuseppe Leo, born in 1864, in Andria, where he served as a Canon; he later became vicar general of Cariati, and was appointed Bishop of Nicotera 23 June, 1909, and promoted in February, 1920, to succeed Most Rev. Giovanni Régine, d. 6 October, 1918. Barietta comprises only the city of that name and has a Catholic population of 46,000; 5 parishes, 26 secular priests and 20 churches and chapels. Trani counts 26,500 Catholics, 8 parishes, 35 secular and 5 regular clergy, 100 seminarians, 4 Brothers, 110 Sisters and 46 churches and chapels. Bisceglia has a Catholic population of 32,000, and 6 parishes in the city, which forms the whole diocese; 46 priests, 15 seminarians and 15 churches, chapels and oratories.

Transaction.—If a contentious controversy affects only the private interests of the parties to the dispute, the judge, in order to avoid litigation when possible, is directed to urge them to settle the dispute out of court, if it seems feasible, by transaction, that is a friendly arrangement under the guidance of a priest, preferably one of the synodal judges, in accordance with the regulations of the civil law, where that is not contrary to Divine or ecclesiastical law or the enactments of the Code. Transaction is not valid, however, when there is question of crime, of dissolving the marriage bond, of titles to benefices, or of spiritual interests closely connected with temporalities.

TRANSVAAL, NORTHERN, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (TRANSVAALENSIS SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., I—189c XV—20c), comprises part of the colony of the Transvaal, in South Africa. It was erected by a decree of 22 December, 1910, and entrusted to the Benedictines of the Primitive Observance. The present prefect apostolic is Rev. Ildefonse Lanelots, of this congregation, born in 1859, ordained in 1881, and named 16 January, 1911. The prefecture comprises two civil districts formerly belonging to the vicariate apostolic of Transvaal, Zoutpant-Sberg and Waterberg. It counts (1920) 337 Catholics out of a total population of 440,000; these are served by 6 priests, 3 Brothers, 2 churches and 5 schools.

TRANSVAAL, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF THE (TRANSVAALENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—45c), in South Africa, includes all of the Transvaal except Waterberg, Zoutpansberg and the northern portion of the original vicariate. It is entrusted to the Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Charles Cox, appointed 15 July, 1914, titular Bishop of Dioclea. From 1912, after the resignation of Bishop Miller, Bishop Cox acted as administrator of the vicariate, and on 15 September following his appointment he was named administrator apostolic of the vicariate of Kimberly. The total population of this territory is 1,347,600, of whom 20,100 are Catholic. This Catholic population includes citizens of almost all the European nations, but the majority of Europeans belong to the Dutch Churches. By most recent statistics the vicariate is served by 28 regular clergy of 4 religious orders, and 2 secular clergy assisted by 21 Brothers and 304 nuns. These religious women belong to the Holy Family, Dominican, Good Shepherd, Ursuline, Holy Cross, Nazareth, Mercy or Loreto congregations. The Marist Brothers conduct a college with 93 boarding and 569 day students, and 25 convent schools having a total of 4591 pupils, are established. Out of this total of 5253 receiving Catholic education only 2158 are Catholics. In 1915 the Sisters of the Holy Family retired from the Johannesburg hospital, but they still conduct a sanitarium. The Christian Brothers have erected a day college at Pretoria which will be opened some time this year (1922). The St. Vincent de Paul Society, Sacred Heart Confraternity, Children of Mary, Young Men's Society, Guild for Young Boys and Girls, Rosary Confraternity and the Ladies of Charity are established here. A Catholic weekly, "The Southern Cross," is published and the St. Vincent de Paul Society publishes a parochial monthly, "The Catholic News." There are in all 33 churches and chapels; one of these, near Pretoria, is reserved for native lepers and is served from Pretoria. The Sisters teach hymns and catechism to these people and many converts have been made among them.

Transylvania (or ERDELY), DIOCESE OF (TRANSYLVANIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—22d).—This diocese is a suffragan of Kalocsa, Hungary, although the whole territory lies in that ceded after the war by Hungary to Rumania. The see was founded by King Saint Stephen, first king of Hungary, crowned in 1001. Since the separation of the territory of the diocese from Hungary there has been the greatest poverty among the clergy, as the government of Rumania contributes nothing towards the support of Catholic schools or institutions. However, much is now being done to effect a concordat with the State. In the same territory of the diocese of Transylvania lies the metropolitan of Fogaras, of the Greek Rumanian Rite.

Rt. Rev. Count Charles Gustave Majlath von Székely, born at Bakácsa, diocese of Pecs, 24 September, 1864, student at Vienna, priest 6 October, 1887, elected titular Bishop of Martyropolis and coadjutor in Transylvania 15 March, 1897, succeeded to bishopric 1 July, 1897. He resides at Gyula-Fehérvár (Karlburg, Alba Julia, Blaj), which contains the monumental cathedral of St. Michael, founded in the twelfth century. Rev. Samuel Prokupek, papal chamberlain, died in 1920, as did Rev. Joseph Meisel, Abbot of Corona, who had been forced to emigrate into Hungary.

During the war, when Transylvania was in Eastern Hungary, many men were soldiers at the front. Since the war over 2,000,000 Hungarians have been separated from Hungary and now live in new Rumania where they have no political autonomy. Forty priests of the diocese served with the Hungarian army, but none of them were killed. Rev. Maymas Sebestyen was killed by the Communists and Rev. Nicholas Oskai by the Rumanian soldiers.

In the diocese there are 377,000 Catholics of the Latin Rite, of whom about 350,000 are Hungarian and 20,000 German. There are 238 parishes, 290 churches, 106 chapels, 28 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 26 convents for women, 358 secular and 130 regular priests, 1 seminary with 28 seminarians, 2 academies with 18 teachers and 47 pupils, 7 gymnasia for boys with 125 teachers, and 2300 students, 1 gymnasium for girls with 18 teachers and 310 students, 3 business schools with 18 teachers and 727 students, 28 civic schools with 163 teachers and 3750 students, 208 elementary schools with 556 teachers and 23,070 pupils, 3 training schools with 19 teachers and 280 students, 6 boarding schools for boys with 17 teachers and 550 students, 5 boarding schools for girls with 10 teachers and 260 students, 10 homes for aged and poor, 4 orphanages; and 5 Catholic papers are published. Two societies are organized among the clergy and many varied ones among the laity throughout the diocese have a large number of members.

Trapani, DIOCESE OF (DREPANENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—23b), on western shore of Sicily, suffragan of Palermo. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Francesco Maria Raiti, a Carmelite of the ancient observance, born in Lingua glossa, Sicily, in 1864, appointed Bishop of Lipari 22 June, 1903, and transferred 6 December, 1906. The city, which has a population of over 70,000, has only, within the last fifty years, been entirely united with the main land. By latest statistics it comprises 14 parishes, 55 churches, 1 monastery for women, 1 Carmelite convent of men, 74 secular and 6 regular clergy, 1 seminary, 12 seminarians, 1 college for men, 1 normal school with 12 teachers and 1200 pupils, 2 professional schools with 12 teachers and 1500 pupils and 2 elementary schools. The charitable institutions include 1 asylum, 2 hospitals, 2 orphanages and 1 day nursery. Three societies are organized among the clergy and many among the laity.

Trappists (cf. C. E., XV—24a), the common name by which the Cistercians who follow the reform inaugurated by the Abbot de Ranée at the Abbey of La Trappe, were known; and now often applied to the entire Order of Reformed Cistercians.

As a great number of the monasteries of this order are situated in France and Belgium, the two countries that suffered most during the disastrous World War, it is not surprising that they had much to endure. Between 500 and 600 members were mobilized in the armies of the Allies, of whom from 150 to 200 were priests and from amongst these a good number, including 3 abbots, were utilized as military chaplains. Of those mobilized some 55 to 60 were killed in action, many were honored with citation on the field of battle, and no small number received various decorations for exceptional bravery, such as the croix de guerre, médaille militaire, croix de la légion d'honneur, etc.

Several of the monasteries suffered many injuries. Mont des Cats, near Mt. Kemel, in Flanders, of which so much mention was made in the newspapers, and which was one of the most beautiful monasteries in the order, was totally destroyed in 1917, and its heroic abbot, who could never be induced to abandon his post of duty, even under almost constant bombardment, died from exposure and mental strain, whilst lying on an improvised cot made of empty provision boxes, the refuse of a nearby military camp. It was at this monastery that the Prince of Heese, whose Catholic mother was a cousin of the former Emperor William, was killed in a hand-to-hand conflict in the very cloisters of the abbey, in 1915. The next was Notre Dame d'Igny, near Fismes, France, the abbey of the Most Rev. D. Augustin Marre, actual abbot general of the order. This was first captured in August, 1914, when it suffered but slight physical damage. In August, 1918, however, whilst the invaders were in full retreat, they mined the buildings with high-explosives and, when at a safe distance, detonated the charges, completely destroying the monastery, leaving but a desolate heap of ruins where before had stood one of the most ancient abbeys of the order. The third was Notre Dame de Mont des Olives (Oelenberg), Alsace. This abbey, but recently completed, was right on the battle front; it was taken a couple of times by the French, then used as military headquarters by the Germans, was frequently bombarded by both armies, and to a great extent destroyed, especially its monumental church and cloisters. Fourth is Notre Dame de Mariastern near Banja-Luka, and not far from Sarajevo, where occurred the murder that was the immediate excuse for the terrible conflict. This abbey housed the largest community in the order, embracing over 200 members, and was proportionately prosperous in material affairs. On account of a great number of the religious being of German nationality, and because the neighborhood was inhabited chiefly by Serbs, Turks, and others not in sympathy with these, its personnel was soon reduced almost to extinction and its possessions very greatly diminished. Notre Dame des Sept-Douleurs, at El-Athroun, in the Holy Land, about half-way between Jerusalem and Jaffa, was occupied by the Turks, who badly damaged the buildings, especially their valuable library, as well as their mill and vineyards, these latter being their principal means of support. The monks were dragged to the sea-shore whence, through the intervention of the Italian Consul, they were finally repatriated to France. Notre Dame du Sacré-Cœur, near Akbes, in Syria, a very interesting monastery, was devastated and the religious kept for a while as captives, during which time one of the brothers died on a bench in a railroad station, the others being finally expelled from the country.

The monasteries of Belgium were all occupied by the invading army, and the religious compelled to exile themselves to Holland. Amongst those which suffered most was the Abbey of Westmalle, where the church was damaged and all material that could be used for munitions of war confiscated. Notre Dame de St. Benoît, at Achel, was just on the frontier between Belgium and Holland, the line intersecting the property. The monks were obliged to take up their abode in a chicken-house and other out-buildings of the monastery, within the Holland line but only a very short distance from their abbey, from which they were separated by a wire fence, heavily charged with electricity; thus they were always within sight of their beloved home, but threatened with death if they attempted to enter its sacred precincts.

At the present time (1922) all the communities are once more in their monasteries, except that of Notre Dame d'Igny, which is at Cîteaux, the mother-house; and Notre Dame du Sacré-Cœur (Akbes), which is at Maguzzano, in Italy. One of the good effects of the war was a much closer union between Church and State in France, termed the "Union Sacrée," which has made it possible for nearly all of the French monasteries to recall their "houses of refuge" which had been established in various parts of the world some twenty years ago, when under threat of expulsion from their own homes. A well known house of this kind was "Petit Clairvaux," in Nova Scotia, all the members of which are now at their home in the Abbey of Thymadeuc. Another wholesome effect was from the influence that death in all its horror had upon many serious minded men in the army; viewing this in immediate proximity for so long a time, and learning therefrom the lesson of the futility of earthly ambition, as well as the vanity of temporal pleasures, large numbers of these turned to God with their whole heart and not a few soldiers, from the rank of commander down to simple private, as well as naval officers and men, from the grade of captain down, have entered various monasteries of the order, and are proving themselves fervent religious. New foundations have been established: one at Banz, an old and beautiful Benedictine monastery in Bavaria; another at Himenrode in the Rhineland; a third in the Italian Tyrol; as well as some other places. Cistercian Nuns were also established at the well-fitted monastery near the famous pilgrimage of Sainte Anne d'Auray (from whence was established the well-known pilgrimage shrine of Sainte Anne de Beaupré, in Canada). In the same year (1921) the Trappistines of Notre Dame de Consolation, at Beaucourt, the direct line from the ancient nuns of Port-Royal, were reinstated in the order. A couple of more houses of Trappistines in Belgium were also restored to the order at the same time. In America, Notre Dame du Lac, Oklahoma, was destroyed by fire on the feast of St. John, 1916, and since rebuilt, the new church and monastery having been reopened on the feast of the Assumption, 1921.

EDMOND M. OBRECHT.

Trebizond, MISSION OF.—The mission originally established in Georgia in 1661, was confided to the Capuchin Order. For nearly two centuries these missionaries, having built hospitals and schools in the chief cities, labored there in comparative peace. But in 1845, by a decree of Nicholas I, Tsar of Russia, they were expelled; the Mission of Georgia was abandoned, and the Fathers settled at Trebizond, on the shores of the Black Sea. They founded a new mission there, and established stations, churches and schools in several of the cities. In 1845 it was made a prefecture apostolic, but on 12 September, 1896, it was reduced to the status of a mission.

The Mission of Trebizond has the same boundaries as the Vicariate Apostolic of Constantinople, lying between 28 degrees and 39 degrees E. longitude, and 39 and 42 degrees N. latitude. On the southern side the mission is bounded by the Vicariate of Mesopotamia and Persia, and on the northern side by the metropolitan Church of Saratof in Russia. The people are subject to the Turkish Government, but at present are under the control of the Nationalists. Various languages are spoken in the mission, but principally Turkish, Greek, Armenian and French. The chief cities in the mission are Trebizond, Erzerum, Samsun, Kerasunda, Sinope, Ineboli. The population numbers about 1,500,000. The people are in general war-like and undisciplined; they have no industries, but engage in agriculture or in commerce. As in all parts of the East that once had the Faith, it is very difficult to make conversions; among the schismatics on account of their lack of the spirit of Christianity, and among the Mohammedans on account of their deeply-rooted fanaticism. The Protestants, particularly the American societies, have opened a good number of schools in the district; their proselytes are mostly Armenians who follow the Protestant exercises as long as they receive support; but after leaving they are usually neither Protestant nor schismatic, becoming quite indifferent in religious matters. At the present time, as a result of the War, the number of Catholics has been greatly diminished, partly on account of the massacre of the Armenians, and partly because so many Catholics of Latin Rite were driven into exile. There are at the end of 1921 only about 800 Catholics, mostly of the Latin Rite, who are living in the cities along the sea-coast.

There are Latin churches in the seven quasi-parishes, Trebizond, Erzerum, Kerasunda, Sinope, Samsun, Ineboli and St. Stephen's. In addition there are five chapels belonging to religious communities. There are twelve priests in the Mission and four lay-brothers. The Fathers are assisted by the Christian Brothers in Trebizond, the Marist Brothers in Samsun and the Sisters of St. Joseph in Trebizond, Kerasunda and Samsun. Before the War there was a Capuchin higher school in Erzerum with 150 pupils; a Christian Brothers school at Trebizond with 120 pupils; a Marist Brothers school at Samsun with 200 pupils; while the schools of the Sisters of St. Joseph had 100 pupils at Trebizond, 120 at Samsun, and 60 at Kerasunda. At the present time, however, most of the schools have been destroyed, but the Capuchin Fathers have one at Trebizond with 90 pupils, while another has just been started at Kerasunda with 25. The superior of the Mission, Rt. P. Lorenzo de Monte Marciano, was born in Sicily on 16 December, 1867, entered the Capuchin novitiate in 1883, and after studying in the East and teaching philosophy at Constantinople was named superior on 10 November, 1911. In August, 1920 he was appointed Administrator Apostolic of Smyrna.

Trejs, ARCHDIOCESE OF. See CAMBRINO.

Trent, DIOCESE OF (TUDENTINENSIS; of C. E., XV—35d), in Styria, Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. The diocese had been under the jurisdiction of Salzburg, since 1825, until a decree of 24 February, 1920, changed it and made it dependent on Rome. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Celestin Endrici born in the diocese in 1866, ordained in 1891, appointed bishop 6 February, 1904, and named an assistant at the pontifical throne 30 March, 1908. Before and during the World War his Lordship the Bishop carried on a fierce struggle against the Austrian authorities to safeguard the native language (Italian) for the country. By the peace treaty Trent, which comprises the Southern part of the Tyrol, was given to Italy. The diocese is divided into 296 parishes and has 636 churches, 3 monasteries for women, 1 abbey for men and 1 for women, 38 convents of men, 151 for women, 1169 secular and 121 regular clergy, 194 Brothers, 1713 Sisters, 2 seminaries, 450 seminarians, 4 secondary schools for boys with 50 teachers and 497 pupils, 10 secondary schools for girls with 112 teachers and 785 pupils, 4 normal schools with 120 teachers and 1381 pupils, 1 professional school with 23 teachers and 320 pupils and 1 industrial school with 7 teachers and 35 pupils. All the public institutions permit the priests to minister in them. One society is formed among the clergy and 17 different organizations among the laity and 6 Catholic jourails and 15 periodicals are published here. The population of this diocese numbers approximately 423,375 Italians and 165,681 Germans.

Trenton, DIOCESE OF (TRENTONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—37a), comprises 5756 square miles in the State of New Jersey, and is suffragan of New York. The second bishop of this see, Rt. Rev. James Augustin MacFaul, appointed 20 July, 1894, died 16 June, 1917. His successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Walsh, born in the diocese of Philadelphia in 1873, made his studies in Buffalo, the seminary of Allegheny and in Rome, was ordained in Buffalo in 1900 and served as pastor of the cathedral, secretary to the bishop and chancellor of the cathedral of Buffalo, and was appointed bishop 10 May, 1918. This territory is the seat of several military camps which played an important part in mobilization and training during the World War: Camp Dix at Wrightstown, Camp Kendrick at Lakehurst, Cape May, Naval Station, Camp Alfred Vail at Little Silver, Camp Edge, at Sea Girt, Fort Mott at Salem, Camp Raritan at Metuchen and Fort Hancock at Sandy Hook. Trenton is also the seat of the state prison, state reformatory, state homes for boys and for girls, state hospital, state village of epileptics, state sanatorium for tuberculosis, New Jersey school for deaf and the New Jersey home for feeble minded women; all of which institutions are served by priests from the diocese. At present (1922) the religious orders established here include Franciscan Fathers, Augustinians, Priests of the Congregation of the Mission, Fathers of the Pious Society of Missions, Order of the Most Holy Trinity, Dominicans, Brothers of the Sacred Heart and Christian Brothers; women: Sisters of Charity, Mission Helpers of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of St. Francis, of St. Joseph, of Mercy, Dominican Nuns and Sisters of the Holy Child Jesus. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 198 secular and 33 regular clergy, 148 churches with resident priests, 68 missions with churches, 84 stations, 20 chapels, 1 college with 162 students, 1 preparatory school for boys with 77 students, 1 college for girls with 85 students, 4 academies for girls with 273 pupils, 63 parochial schools with 27,056 pupils, 10 high schools with 927 pupils, and 2 orphan asylums. A total of 30,884 young people are under Catholic care. The charitable institutions include 2 hospitals, 4 day nurseries and 2 homes for the aged.

Treviso, DIOCESE OF (TARVISINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—38b), in the province of Venice, Northern Italy, suffragan of Venice. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Andrea Giacinto Longhin, born in Campodarsego, Italy, in 1863. He entered the Congregation of Capuchins in 1879 and became provincial of the Order in Venice, in 1902, and was appointed bishop 15 April, 1904. In October, 1919, he was named an officer of the Order of Saints Maurice and Lazarus, by the Italian King. The church of the Great Mother in this diocese was made a minor basilica 12 June, 1917. According to 1920 statistics the Catholic population numbers 453,822; there are 219 parishes, 400 secular and 30 regular clergy, 270 seminarians, 22 Brothers, 300 religious women and 400 churches and chapels.

Tricarico, DIOCESE OF (TRICARICENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—40a), in the province of Potenza, Southern Italy, suffragan of Acerenza. Rt. Rev. Agapito-Augusto-Giovanni Fiorentini, app. to this see 27 June, 1909, was transferred to Catasaro 25 September, 1919. He has been succeeded by Rt. Rev. Achille Grimaldi, born in the diocese of Anglona; he was named an honorary chamberlain extra urbem 9 May, 1907, rector of the seminary of Capua in 1919 and appointed bishop in January, 1921. The 1920 statistics credit the diocese with 80,540 Catholics, 25 parishes, 170 secular priests, 30 seminarians, and 91 churches and chapels.

Trichinopoly, DIOCESE OF (TRICHINOPOLITANENSIS; cf., C. E., XV—40d), in India, suffragan of Bombay. In order to facilitate administration this diocese is divided into four districts, each under a vicar foraine having residence at Trichinopoly, Madura, Palamcottah and Tuticorin respectively. The district of Tuticorin has lately been formed out of the district of Palamcottah and entrusted to the Indian secular priests under a vicar foraine chosen from amongst them. These districts are subdivided into sections numbering seventy-eight in all. Rt. Rev. John Mary Barthe, S. J., appointed to the see in 1890, was given a coadjutor in the person of Rt. Rev. Auguste Faisandier, in 1909, and upon his resignation in 1913, Bishop Faisandier succeeded him on 19 December. Born in Coubon, France, in 1853, Bishop Faisandier entered the Jesuit Order in 1874, went as a missionary to Madura in 1889, served as a professor in St. Joseph College, master of novices and rector of the scholasticate of Shembaganur, and was named superior regular and vicar general in 1905, in which capacity he served until his appointment. During the World War one of the priests from this diocese, Rev. A. Constanto, who was serving as a chaplain in the French Army, was killed near Verdun. The diocese suffered another loss through the death of Rev. Francis Billard, who died in Bangalore, 1 August, 1913; his remains were immediately transferred to Trichinopoly, where they were buried in a little chapel erected in St. Mary's Tope, a settlement for the Brahmins whom this holy priest had converted to Christianity. The total Catholic population of this diocese, according to the 1921 census, numbers 279,324, of whom 942 are Europeans and Eurasians. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 73 parishes or stations, 632 churches and chapels, 1 convent of Brothers of the Sacred Heart, 6 convents of women, 29 secular and 155 regular clergy (Jesuits), 34 lay brothers of whom 30 are Indians, 560 Sisters, 1 seminary, 24 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 110 teachers and 2476 students, 5 high schools with 125 teachers and 2200 boy students and 400 girl students, 3 training schools with 17 teachers and 208 pupils, 418 elementary schools with 886 teachers and 21,341 pupils and 9 industrial schools with 20 teachers and 492 pupils. The various charitable institutions include asylums for Indian widows at Trichinopoly and Adeikalaburam, 11 dispensaries, 4 homes and St. Mary's Tope, for Brahmin converts. All the schools receive an annual grant from the government. St. Joseph's College has organized an alumni association, as well as a very active press which publishes the "Messenger of the Sacred Heart" in Tamil, "The Morning Star" a Marian magazine, "The Magazine" the college periodical, and Indian Catholic Truth Society pamphlets in both English and vernacular.

Trichur, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (TRICHURENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—41b), in India, one of the four vicariates of the Syro-Malabar Rite. According to the census of 1920 the Catholics of the Syrian Rite in the vicariate numbered 106,423, having 100 churches and 4 chapels served by 96 native secular priests. There are also three monasteries of Carmelite Regular Tertiaries at Elthuruth, Ambalakad, and Pavaratti, with about 22 professed and 11 lay brothers besides a number of novices; also six convents for Carmelite nuns with 136 professed nuns, two convents of St. Clare with 22 professed nuns, and one of the Holy Family with 13 professed nuns, besides novices, postulants, and lay sisters. There are in the vicariate

1 college, 2 high schools, 8 lower secondary schools and 141 elementary schools, the number of children under instruction being 16,954. A seminary at Trichur prepares candidates for the seminaries of Puthempally, Kandy and Mangalore. The Vicar Apostolic Francis Vazhapilly, appointed 5 April, 1921, and named titular Bishop of Philadelphia two days later, resides at Trichur.

Trier (TREVES), DIOCESE OF (TREVIRENSIS), suffragan of Cologne. Like many other dioceses in Germany it has suffered innumerable hardships and privations in consequence of the World War. Many of the clergy who were subject to military duty were obliged to join the ranks, but the majority of them were given duties as chaplains at the front or in hospitals. The priests labored indefatigably to ameliorate the misery and distress caused by the war, by comforting the soldiers and consoling the relatives of those who had fallen on the field of battle. The laity willingly offered their services and their fortunes for the cause and are enduring untold misery and suffering in consequence. The children are the object of the greatest solicitude, as it is impossible to obtain adequate food for their sustenance. During these days of trial the diocese was ably administered by Rt. Rev. Michael Felix Korum, who on 15 Aug., 1921, had the privilege of celebrating his fortieth anniversary as bishop. He died 4 December, 1921, and his successor has not yet been appointed. The see also has an auxiliary bishop, Rt. Rev. Anthony Moench, titular Bishop of Polystilium.

In 1912 the International Marian Congress was held at Trier. The diocese contains 1,814,240 German inhabitants, of whom 1,336,888 are Catholics and 477,352 belong to other faiths. There are 768 parishes, 829 churches, 930 mission churches and chapels, 4 monasteries and 1 abbey for men, 213 monasteries with 3855 Sisters, 560 lay Brothers in 16 monasteries. There are 1126 secular and 196 regular priests, 55 of whom are either retired or on leave of absence. The diocesan seminary is at Trier and has a regent, 7 clerical professors, and 240 students. In 1921 there were 90 gymnasias (9 or 6 years' classical course), with 12,100 students (6500 boys and 5600 girls); 2 normal schools (500 students); 4300 common elementary schools with 2600 male teachers and 17 female teachers (12,100 students); 14 industrial schools (3600 students); 3 mission schools connected with the convents of the missionary orders. The following institutions are established in the diocese: 47 orphan asylums, 7 homes for working girls, 10 homes for juveniles, 23 homes for day laborers, 31 refuges, 117 hospitals in charge of Sisters, 2 houses of correction in charge of the Nuns of the Good Shepherd, 164 day nurseries. The following societies are organized among the clergy: Unio Apostolica, Marian Congregation, Pious Society of Missions. The laity have organized religious, charitable and social associations among which the most prominent are: Society of St. Vincent de Paul, Elizabeth Verein, numerous sodalities for men and women, boys and girls, the Albertus Magnus Association, Borromaeus Association, Peoples' League for Catholic Germany, Working Men and Women's Association and Mechanics' Association. A Catholic periodical for priests called the "Pastor Bonus" is published in the diocese.

Trieste and Capo d'Istria, DIOCESE OF (TERGESTINENSIS ET JUSTINOPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—45b), in the provinces of Carniola and Istria, Italy, suffragan of Görz-Gradiska. Rt. Rev. Andréa Karlin, appointed to this see 6 February, 1911, retired and was transferred to the titular see of Themiscyra 15 December, 1919. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev.

Angelo Bartolomei, born in the diocese in 1869, studied at Graveno, Chiasso and Turin, was ordained in 1892, served as a curate, was later made a canon of the cathedral and professor in the seminary of Chiasso. On 24 November, 1910, he was appointed titular Bishop of Derbe and auxiliary at Turin, was named first military chaplain of the Italian Army in 1915 and transferred to Trieste and Capo d'Istria 15 December, 1919. In 1920 he was made president of the national committee of the Eucharistic Congress and an honorary member of the permanent committee of the international Eucharistic Congress. The diocese counts 409,794 Catholics, 8008 Protestants, 228 parishes and vicariates, 429 secondary parishes and 46 regular clergy.

Trincomalie, DIOCESE OF (TRINCOMALIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—45c), in Ceylon, suffragan of Colombo, was created in 1893 by a division of the Diocese of Jaffna. The diocese comprises the whole of the Eastern Province, as well as the District of Tamankaduwa. Out of a total population of 195,000, the Catholics number 8946, with 29 churches and chapels, served by 15 fathers and four lay brothers of the French Province of the Society of Jesus, with two secular priests. Candidates for the priesthood are sent to Kandy or Trincomally Seminaries. There are 45 schools, with 2740 pupils and two Convents of the Sisters of the Apostolic Carmel of Mangalore, with two orphanages and two Industrial Schools attached to the convents. A diocesan congregation of the native Sisters of the Presentation of Trincomalie was started in 1920. The present bishop is Gaston Robichez, S.J., appointed 22 March, 1917, who resides at Batticaloa. Born in Aire-sur-la-Lys, France, in 1867, he studied at Sainte Marie d'Aire and the lower seminary of Arras, and after his ordination was given charge, successively, of the missions of Lille, Amiens, Boulogne, Ceylon and Trincomalie, where he served as vicar general.

Trinitarians, ORDER OF; (cf. C. E., XV—45d).—In 1912 the Trinitarians had 7 houses in the Roman province, of which 3 were in Rome, and the others in Rocco di Papa, Palestrina, Anagni, and Leghorn in Etruria. Dependent on the Roman province are the Prefecture Apostolic of Benadir in Italian Somaliland, Africa, and 4 flourishing foundations in the United States at Asbury Park, N. J., Long Branch, N. J., Red Bank, N. J., and Harrisburg, Penn. The spreading of the order in North America is due to the zeal of Fr. Antoninus a Jesu, provincial of the Roman province. The Spanish province numbers 8 convents in Spain, from where the Trinitarians were expelled in 1835 but returned in 1879; among the Spanish houses is the old convent of Cordova. Outside of Spain, belonging to the Spanish province, are the Roman College of S. Carlo alle Quattro Fontane, a foundation in Cuba, and several in Chile. The Neapolitan province has 4 convents, and the Austrian province has 2 convents, one in Vienna and one in Augustendorf. The order numbers several hundred members, most of whom are Spanish and Italian and a few German and French.

The Italo-Turkish War (1911–12) brought troubles on the Trinitarians and immediately after the outbreak of the World War (1914) the order gave its buildings for the use of the Red Cross, and the priests cared for the wounded soldiers in the hospitals. A convalescent home opened in the convent at Gershofer was supported by charitable contributions of people in the neighborhood. The provincial was untiring in his zeal for the wounded. During the war communication with the missions was entirely cut off. The minister general, Rev. Antonio dell'Assunzione, elected in May, 1906, succeeding Rev.

Gregorio di Gesu e Maria who had been minister general since 1891, was succeeded in May, 1919 by Rev. Francisco Saverio dell' Immacolata. A new cardinal protector, Cardinal Teodoro Valfre di Bonzo was appointed 3 Feb., 1920. Among the notable deceased in 1921 were: Rev. Ambrogio di S. Giovanni Battista, definitor general from 1906-19, d. 25 Feb., 1921, at the age of ninety-one years; Rev. Ramon de Nuestra Señora de los Afficionados, one of the founders of the Trinitarian college at Cardenas, Cuba, and military chaplain for two years, d. at Santiago de Nubles, Chile, 31 Oct., 1921; Commander Joseph Hercules Massi, professed Tertiary, chief guardian of the Vatican Museums, and writer, d. 21 Dec., 1921.

The Trinitarian Nuns came to the United States in 1920, at the request of Cardinal Archbishop Dougherty of Philadelphia. Four Sisters arrived in Bristol, Penn., in November and their number has since been increased by American novices. The Calced Spanish Trinitarian Nuns have houses at: Badajoz; Burgos; Calig, Castellon de la Plana; S. Clemente, Cuenca; Alcalá la Real, Andujar, and Martos, Jaen; Villena, Murcia; Villoruela, Salamanca; Laredo, Suances, and Suesas, Santander; Noya, Santiago; Toboso, Toledo. The Discalced Spanish Trinitarian Nuns have houses at Madrid and Valencia and dependent on the mother-house of Valencia are convents at Concentaina, Estivella, Rivarrojak, Picasent, Godella, Benimamet, Biar, Ontur, Casas Ibanez, Castellar, Vallada, Burjasot, Bechi, Iijona, and Adraneta del Meastra. On 27 Feb., 1912, the process of beatification of Sister Angela Maria of the Immaculate Conception, reformer of the Trinitarians and foundress of the convent at Toboso, was introduced. Bl. Anna Maria Taigi, professed Trinitarian tertiary, was proclaimed blessed 30 May, 1920.

In July, 1917, the Trinitarians received from Cardinal Archbishop Piffi of Vienna the Imperial Jubilee Church at Vienna-Donaustadt. In 1918 at their general assembly the Holy Trinity Brotherhood resolved to hereafter hold their monthly services in this church instead of at St. Peter's. This and recent affiliations of various branches of the Brotherhood will re-establish the former unity existing between the Brotherhood and the Trinitarian Order. The present minister general, Rev. Francisco Saverio dell' Immacolata, established the "Acta Ordinis Sanctissimæ Trinitatis," a publication containing besides documents referring to the general government of the order, notes on its history. The first number appeared in 1919.

Trinity College, for Catholic women, situated in Washington, D. C., under the direction of the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur, has grown since 1912, from a registration of 160 students to 363 in 1921. This same year the number of degrees conferred was as follows: Ph.D., 1; M.A., 1; B.S., 2; B.A., 77. The faculty is composed of 11 professors from the Catholic University, 3 lay instructors and the Sisters of Notre Dame who teach in various departments.

Tripoli, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TRIPOLITANENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—60c), a see of the Maronite and Greek Melkite Rites in Syria. The Maronite see is filled by Most Rev. Anthony Arida, born in Bécharré (the city of the Cedars of Lebanon), in 1863, studied at St. Sulpice at Issy, and in Paris, was ordained in 1890, served as secretary to the Patriarch of Syria, was made an honorary chamberlain in 1905 and consecrated 18 June, 1908. During the World War all this territory suffered severely and altogether the diocese lost about 100,000 Maronites, through persecution, famine, pestilence and other causes. The bishop and priests did all in their power to relieve the suffering, and showed great devotion and charity in distributing clothes and food and in caring for the sick. The diocese comprises 45,000 Maronite Catholics, 107 parishes, 105 churches, missions conducted by the Jesuits, Vincentians and Carmelites, at Hemesia, Tripoli, and Cabayath, 140 Maronite secular priests, 3 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 3 convents for men and about 40 for women, 16 lay brothers, 1 seminary, 15 seminarians, 2 colleges for boys and 2 for girls, 40 elementary schools with 45 teachers and about 2000 pupils, and 1 hospital. Various other charities are conducted by the French Sisters of Charity and of Mercy. A number of the schools receive financial aid from the French High Commission. Two periodicals are published in the diocese.

The see is a bishopric for the Greek-Melkite Rite and is at present filled by Rt. Rev. Joseph Doumani, Basilian, born in Damascus in 1849, and consecrated as first bishop 21 March, 1897. On 22 November, 1915, the Turks, falsely accusing him of being a spy, put to death the Abbé Anatole Meseray, a French priest who was acting as secretary to the bishop. Following upon this outrage the bishop and his vicar general, the Archimandrite John Chimara, who sacrificed himself to accompany his superior, were exiled at Sivas and at Tokat, where they suffered imprisonment, cold, hunger and cruelty for three years and a half. The diocese comprises about 6000 Greek Catholics who have been cared for by Bishop Doumani for twenty-six years. Latest statistics credit it with 15 parishes, 6 churches, 10 chapels, 16 secular and 3 regular clergy and 11 elementary schools with 11 teachers and 400 pupils. For the Latin Rite Tripoli is a titular see. Those Catholics of the Syrian Rite residing here are under the jurisdiction of the Archdiocese of Beirut.

Tripoli, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF. See LIBYA, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF

Trivento, DIOCESE OF (TRIVENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—63a), in the province of Campobasso, Southern Italy, directly dependent on the Holy See. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio Lega, born in Brisighella in 1863, served as vicar general of Tivoli, named a prelate of the Holy See in 1911, and appointed by the Consistory 25 May, 1914. The diocese has a Catholic population of 130,000, 59 parishes, 170 secular priests, 60 seminarians, 24 nuns and 133 churches and chapels.

Troyes, DIOCESE OF (TRECENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—67b), in the department of Aube, France, suffragan of Sens. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Marie-Etienne Laurent Monnier, born in Poligny, France, in 1847, studied under the Jesuits at Metz and at St. Sulpice in Paris, was ordained in 1871, served as rector of the Cathedral of St. Claude, dean of St. Aubin, made a titular canon in 1894, archpriest of the cathedral in 1898 and appointed bishop 12 October, 1907. The diocese is divided into 423 parishes and 27 vicariates, comprising a total population of 240,255 of whom 55,586 are in Troyes proper. By latest statistics there are 290 secular and 18 regular clergy, 2 convents of women, 7 convents of men, 2 seminaries, 56 seminarians, 1 diocesan college with 17 teachers and 150 students, 1 professional school with 4 teachers and 30 pupils, 20 elementary schools with 32 teachers and 1000 pupils, 3 houses of retreat, 1 asylum and 1 nursery, all other charitable institutions being conducted by the state or commune. These, however, permit the priests to minister in them. A daily journal, "l'Avenir de l'Aube," and a Catholic weekly review of the diocese are published, and the St. Vincent de Paul Society and various charitable and pious associations are well organized. During the World War, out of a total of 100 priests mobilized, 13 gave up their lives, 3 were decorated with the "légion d'honneur," 4 with the "médaille militaire" and numbers with the "croix de guerre."

Trujillo, DIOCESE OF (DE TRUXILLO; cf. C. E., XV—70a.) in Peru, suffragan of Lima. The present incumbent of this see is Rt. Rev. Carlos García Irigoyen, born in Lima, in 1857. After starting his studies at the seminary of Santo Toribio, he left and became secretary of foreign affairs, but returned in 1880 and was later ordained. In 1898 he became secretary in particular to the Archbishop of Lima and a canon; he served as director of the "Revista Católica," ecclesiastical censor, collaborator of "El Bien Social," and founder and director of "El Amigo del Clero." Named a prelate of the Holy See in 1909, he was appointed bishop 21 March, 1910. He has been honored with the cross Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice, and was named an assistant at the pontifical throne 27 June, 1920. He is also a member of the historical institute of Peru. The Catholics of this diocese total 89,000; the remainder of the population is made up of 14,000 Chinese and 500 Protestants. The diocese comprises, according to 1920 statistics, 20 parishes, 150 priests, 3 seminarians, 250 churches and chapels, 6 congregations of men and 5 of women.

Truth Societies, CATHOLIC.—ENGLAND.—The record of the Catholic Truth Society during the last ten years covers the difficult period of the Great War, and the remarkable reorganization and expansion of its work after the peace. The war years were a trying time. The rise in the cost of paper and printing not only restricted the Society's output, but also made it necessary to increase the sale price of its publications, thus limiting their circulation. Many publications went out of print and it was only by careful management that its activity was maintained even on a restricted basis. Nevertheless much valuable work was done. Its "Little Prayer Book" had been adopted by the War Office as the prayer book for Catholic soldiers. Before long the War Office orders for the book became so large that to supply them would have entailed heavy loss. It was arranged that the Prayer Book should be printed by the War Office as an official publication, the Government paying a royalty to the Society. Flemish and French translations of the book were also prepared for the Belgian refugees who were crowding into England, and later a little manual of instruction was produced in both these languages. The final result was the formation of a Belgian Society for the production of cheap Catholic literature, which was established at Brussels after the armistice.

The conditions for publishing work remained difficult for long after the war, but nevertheless the Catholic Truth Society was able to carry through a remarkable work of reorganization and expansion. Many useful publications were out of print. These were gradually reprinted and put into circulation. The work both of literary control and business administration had so far been carried on by a single general committee. In 1920 a small business committee was formed to deal with administration and propaganda. At the annual general meeting in April, 1921, a new scheme of organization was adopted; the election of the general committee brought in a new element of strength; and the practical work was divided between a literary and a business committee. Closer relations were established with the Catholic Truth Society of Ireland and large economies in printing were effected by entrusting much of the work to firms in Ireland. The C. T. S. also undertook the production of special literature for the Catholic Evidence Guild. It was decided that the time had come for the Society to secure a working centre in a prominent position in London, and pending this step the business committee occupied a temporary office near Westminster Cathedral, and organized a new propaganda to increase the membership. This included sermons in the churches, public meetings, and a well organized circularising campaign. The membership rose rapidly, and in February, 1922, extensive offices were secured in a fine building close to the cathedral. All the work of the Society was concentrated in these new headquarters which included offices for the staff, a reference library and an enquiry and information bureau, a retail department, an extensive basement for the storage and wholesale department of the Society's publications. A large hall was arranged for meetings and conferences and the Catholic Evidence Guild undertook to use it for lectures to non-Catholic audiences on Sunday afternoons and evenings all the year round. The new centre was inaugurated on April 25, 1922, by Cardinal Bourne, who had from the first been a zealous and helpful promoter of the new movement. It is hoped that subsidiary centres will be organized in other dioceses throughout Great Britain. The Society has also taken over the work of the Bexhill Library (q. v.), established by Mr. Reed Lewis.

Tuam, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TŪAMENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—79d), in Ireland. The present archbishop of this see, Most Rev. Thomas P. Gilmartin, was promoted 9 July, 1918, to succeed Most Reverend John Healy who died 16 March of that year after seventeen years in the see. Archbishop Gilmartin was born near Castlebar, County Mayo in 1862, and after an early education at St. Jarlath's College, Tuam, he completed his studies at St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, and was ordained in 1885. He served as a professor at St. Jarlath's, and in 1891 was appointed Dean of St. Patrick's College, which position he filled until his election as Bishop of Clonfert 18 December, 1909. He was promoted to the archdiocese from this see. During the World War this diocese sent two chaplains to the front to serve with the British forces, Rev. Michael Divens and Rev. Michael Comey, and a third, Rev. Geoffrey Prendergast, served as a chaplain with the British forces in Palestine from July, 1916, to December, 1917. The laity were represented in the ranks in large numbers. In 1914 the Benedictine Nuns, who were forced to leave their abbey at Ypres upon the arrival of the Germans, came to Tuam and are now permanently established in Kylemore Abbey, County Galway. The abbey, built several years ago as a private residence, is of exceptional beauty, and the nuns have opened a school here for the higher education of girls. The archdiocese has a purely Irish population of about 180,000. It is divided into 56 parishes having 126 churches, and comprises 11 monasteries for men of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis, 1 abbey for women, 17 convents for women, 165 secular priests and 5 regulars, 28 lay brothers, 200 nuns, 2 colleges for men with 18 teachers and 155 students, 4 secondary schools for girls with 29 teachers and 215 students, 8 high schools with 34 teachers, 790 boys and 170 girls, 428 elementary schools with 33,100 pupils and 4 industrial schools with 300 pupils. The charitable institutions include, 1 home, 1 asylum at Castlebar, 8 hospitals and 8 refuges; a number of the hospitals and refuges have now, however, been taken over by English soldiers. The elementary and intermediate schools, and the work houses are assisted to some extent by the Government. The "Pia Unio Cleri," the Propagation of the Faith, the Society of St. Vincent de Paul and a temperance society are organized in the diocese.

Tucson, DIOCESE OF (TUCSONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—84d), comprises the State of Arizona, U. S. A., an area of 133,058 square miles. This see is filled by its second bishop, Rt. Rev. Henri Granjon, born in Brignais, France, in 1863, studied at St. Chamond, and was ordained in 1887, appointed bishop 19 April, 1900. The Catholic population is made up of 8000 Americans and 43,000 Mexicans. The Franciscan Fathers, Discalced Carmelites, Marist Brothers and Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, are established here, as well as the Sisters of St. Joseph, of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, of Loretto, and Sisters of the Precious Blood. By latest statistics the diocese comprises 20 secular and 41 regular clergy, 35 churches with resident priests, 66 missions with churches, 80 mission stations, 2 ecclesiastical students, 1 college for boys, 7 academics, 10 parish schools, 2500 pupils in schools and academics, 6 Indian schools, 1 orphanage with 100 inmates, and 4 hospitals.

Tucuman, DIOCESE OF (TUCUMANENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—85a.) in the Republic of Argentina, suffragan of Buenos Aires. This see has been vacant since the death of Rt. Rev. Paulo Padilla y Barcena, appointed as its first bishop 16 January, 1898, died 17 October, 1921. It is administered by the auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Carlo Echenique Altamira, appointed titular Bishop of Thémis, 10 December, 1914. According to 1920 statistics the population of this diocese totals 400,000; it is divided into 18 parishes served by 67 chapels.

Tudela, DIOCESE OF (TUDELENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—85c), in the province of Navarre, Spain, suffragan of Saragozza. The "Annuario Pontificio" of 1918 lists this diocese as united with Pamplona, but the "Annuario Ecclesiastico" of Barcelona unites it with Tarazona, as the Bishop of Tarazona acts as administrator of the diocese of Tudela. The territory comprises 9 parishes, 28 churches, 4 convents of men and 9 of women, 56 secular and 35 regular clergy, 20 Brothers, 1 seminary, 30 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 5 teachers and 123 pupils, 1 college for girls with 8 teachers and 210 pupils, 11 elementary schools with 16 teachers and 512 pupils, 2 asylums and 1 hospital. Six of the elementary schools are assisted by the government. Two societies are organized among the laity and 3 Catholic periodicals are published. Schools of higher education are conducted by the Jesuits, with 198 boarding and 22 day students, and by the Christian Brothers with 190 pupils.

Tuguegarao, DIOCESE OF (TUGUEGARAONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—85d), in the Philippines, suffragan of Manila. The first bishop of this see, Rt. Rev. Maurice Patrick Foley, appointed 10 September, 1910, was transferred to Jaro 6 September, 1916, and his successor was named in the person of Rt. Rev. Santiago Sancho, secretary to the Bishop of Nuova Caceres, appointed 5 February, 1917. The same year the Association of Christian Doctrine was organized in the diocese and in 1918 a major and minor seminary was established in the college of San Jacinto, under the direction of the Fathers of the Order of Preachers. A new building was added to the girls' college in the diocese, to be used as a dormitory. In 1920 an important development in the progress of the diocese occurred with the foundation of the Catholic Federation of Women of Tuguegarao. The objects of this society are many: to procure the union of all Catholics in the Philip-pinas; to promote universal charity and look after the cooperation of Catholics in works of charity such as dispensaries, protection of infancy, aid to the poor, formation of clubs for women, guardianship of workers, libraries, etc.; to help support Catholic institutions; to animate the Catholic press, instruct the people in the truths of the Catholic religion, and make manifest the good works which the Church is doing in these islands, by means of reviews and pamphlets, and by the creation of centers of instruction and recreation. The opening of an electric plant in Tuguegarao and Aparri, in the province of Cagayan, in 1921, promises to be of importance in the improvement of this territory. By latest statistics (1922) the diocese comprises 25 parishes, 44 churches, 19 missions, 29 secular priests, 1 seminary, 30 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 12 teachers, 1 college for girls with 9 teachers, 1 academy with 9 teachers and 200 girls, and 2 elementary schools with 15 teachers. A society, "Monte Pio del Clero," is organized among the clergy, and the Catholic Federation of women, among the laity.

Tulancingo, DIOCESE OF (DE TULANCINGO; cf. C. E., XV—86a.), in the state of Hidalgo, Mexico, suffragan of the Archdiocese of Mexico. Rt. Rev. José-Juan de Jesus Herrera y Pina, appointed to this see 16 September, 1907, was promoted to Linares 7 March, 1921. His successor was appointed in the person of Rt. Rev. Vincent Castellanos y Nunez, born in the diocese of Zamora, Spain, in 1870, served as secretary to the Archbishop of Durango, was appointed Bishop of Campeachy 7 February, 1912, and transferred 26 August, 1921. The celebrated church of Our Lady of the Angels is situated in Tulancingo. The diocese comprises a Catholic population of 600,000; 62 parishes, 56 seminarians, 3 religious congregations of men and 4 of women.

Tulle, DIOCESE OF (TULELENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—86c), comprises the department of Corrèze, in France. Rt. Rev. Joseph Métreau, appointed to this see in 1913, died 24 April, 1918, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Jean Castel, born in Foix, France, in 1868, ordained in 1891, served as a professor and prefect of the Carmelite school at Parmes, pastor and dean, named vicar general in 1909 and archdeacon of St. Giron, and appointed bishop 3 August, 1918. The diocese comprises 289 parishes, 340 secular priests, 2 houses of missionaries, 1 community of Brothers conducting an asylum for foreigners "La Celette," 56 convents of religious women, 1 diocesan congregation of nursing Sisters, 1 upper seminary with 30 students, 1 lower seminary with 80 students, 2 secondary schools with 30 teachers and 220 pupils, 5 elementary schools for boys and 42 for girls, 2 schools directed by religious orders, 2 asylums and 9 hospitals. Two Catholic periodicals are published, "Semaine Religieuse" and "Croix de la Corrèze," and 4 important associations are organized among the laity: Catholic Association of French Youth, association for liberal teaching of Corrèze, an association of the heads of Catholic families, and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul. During the World War 144 priests and 33 seminarians were mobilized from this diocese, and of the number 8 priests and 9 seminarians gave up their lives, 3 were decorated with the légion d'honneur, 2 with the Médaille Militaire and 57 with the croix de guerre.

Tunja, DIOCESE OF (TUNGENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—90c.) in the State of Boyaca, Colombia, suffragan of Bogota. Since 24 June, 1905, this see has been filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio-Edwardo Maldonado y Calvo. Born in Bogota in 1860 he studied at the South American College in Rome, was ordained in that city in 1885, returned to his native city and served as a professor in the seminary, and canon and pastor of the cathedral. The population of the diocese is composed of 750,000 Catholics and 10,000 Pagans. The territory is divided into 153 parishes served by 145 priests, 159 churches and chapels, 5 religious congregations of men and 6 of women.

Turin, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TAURINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—92d), in the province of Piedmont, northern Italy. This see is filled by His Eminence Agostino Cardinal Richelmy, born in the city of Turin in 1850. He was ordained in 1872 and became a professor in the seminary, and in 1886, on 7 June, was appointed Bishop of Isrea, from which see he was promoted to the archdiocese 17 September, 1897. Two years later he was created a cardinal priest, 19 June, 1899. His auxiliary is Rt. Rev. Giovanni Pinardi, a Salesian, appointed titular Bishop of Eudocias 24 January, 1916. The Catholic population of the archdiocese numbers 680,600. It is divided into 276 parishes, 1405 secular and 300 regular clergy, 260 seminarians and 986 churches and chapels.

Turkish Empire, THE; (cf. C. E., XV—97a), now occupies a territory of about 174,000 square miles. Although the statistical documents are very incomplete, the total population of the empire is about 8,000,000. In the small European territory now remaining under Turkish rule Moslems predominate. In Constantinople, there are 308,733 Turks, 235,215 Greeks, and 297,160 others, (Greek Patriarchate statistics, 1912). In Asia Minor the Turks form seven-tenths of the population, outnumbering the Greeks alone by four to one, and the Greeks and Armenians together by three to one. In Konia they outnumber the Greeks, twelve to one; in Angora, fourteen to one; in Costamouni, thirty-nine to one. On the other hand, in some districts, as Ismid, they form only forty-seven per cent of the population; in Adana, one third of the total.

The other elements of the population are the Armenians (Haikans), belonging to the Indo-Iranic group of the Aryan stock, found in greatest numbers in the district of the Caucasus. Under Turkish rule their fate has been deplorable; constantly subject to the raids of the savage Kurds and oppressed by the Government, they have suffered massacre time and again. According to a secret report, published in 1919, the deportation of the Armenians had been organized systematically from March to October, 1915, as a pretext for destroying the race. Of the entire Armenian population of 1,600,000 to 2,000,000, it is estimated that from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 were deported and half of these perished. The Circassians, or Cherkesses, had their original home in the western Caucasus, whence they emigrated into the Turkish Empire rather than submit to the Russians. Being Moslems they were readily received by the Porte and are widely dispersed throughout Asia Minor. The Jews are mostly descendants of Jews who came from Spain towards the end of the fifteenth century. They have been less persecuted in Turkey than in any other country in Europe except England. The Dunmehs (converts) are certain Jews who profess Islam, but secretly practise the rites of Judaism. Most of the European peoples are represented. A certain number of these, the issue of families long settled in the East, have lost their nationality and are known as Levantines. The Lazee are a small tribe found in the region of Trebizond. In the mountain region back of Smyrna there are some small tribes of Moslems, called Xeibecks, Avshars, Youruks, etc., who lead the life of brigands.

GEOGRAPHY.—Before the Great European War, the Turkish Empire was made up of (1) Turkey in Europe; (2) Turkey in Asia (Anatolia, Arabia, Syria, Palestine, Mesopotamia and Kurdistan); and (3) certain islands in the Mediterranean. After the conclusion of the first Balkan War (November, 1913), the Turkish possessions in Europe were lessened, Turkey in Europe in part being divided among the Allied States (Bulgaria, Serbia, Montenegro and Greece), and in part being created into the independent state of Albania. Cyprus and Egypt formerly under the suzerainty of the Sultan, belong now to the British, Cyprus being annexed to the British Empire at the outbreak of the war in 1914, and Egypt declared a Protectorate in January, 1915. The Empire was reduced still further by the Treaty of Sèvres (signed on 10 August, 1920). In Europe, Turkey retains, mainly as a concession to Mohammedan feeling, the city of Constantinople with a few miles behind it up to the Chataldja lines, but the whole of Eastern Thrace with Gallipoli is transferred to Greece. In Asia, Turkey surrendered all her Arab provinces, from the Taurus Mountains north of Aleppo to the Persian frontier north of Mossul, i. e., Syria and Palestine and Mesopotamia, besides the vast peninsula of Arabia proper. The Treaty also provides for the creation of an independent Armenian State to be carved out of the old vilayets of Trebizond, Erzerum, Bitlis, and Van, and of an autonomous Kurdish State to the south of Armenia with eventual rights to complete independence. Smyrna, the chief seaport in Asia Minor, goes to Greece with considerable hinterland extending over 100 miles along the coast. The rest of Asia Minor belongs to Turkey. Turkey renounces all rights over Egypt, the Suez Canal, Lybia (formerly Tripoli), and all the islands in the Mediterranean. As the country stands today, it is bounded on the south by Syria, Mesopotamia; on the east by Persia and Armenia; on the north by the Black Sea, and includes Anatolia, Kurdistan, Cilicia (which the French evacuated), and part of the Chataldja Peninsula, where Constantinople is situated.

AGRICULTURE AND COMMERCE.—Land in Turkey is held under three different forms of tenure—namely, 1st, as "Miri," or Crownlands; 2nd, as "Vakuf," or pious foundations; and 3rd, as "Mulk," or freehold property. The "Miri" are held direct from the crown; the Government grants the right to cultivate an unoccupied tract on the payment of certain fees, but always enjoys seigniorial rights over the land in question. The "Vakuf" comprises property dedicated for religious or charitable purposes. The "Mulk" does not exist to a great extent. The land laws are in process of modification. A large portion of the State revenue is derived from tithes on agricultural product; the system of levying it is burdensome and oppressive, the general practice being to farm it out to contractors. Agriculture is most primitive; the chief crops being figs, coffee, olives, nuts, grapes. The foreign commerce of Turkey from 31 December, 1919, to 1 January, 1920, in piastres, is given as follows in the U. S. Commerce Report, of 15 June, 1921:

	Imports	Exports
England.....	2,669,326,438	633,843,156
France.....	784,841,318	7,171,157
Germany.....	115,030,795	25,408,933
Austria.....	59,828,239	622,086,397
Egypt.....	513,116,015	56,706,668
United States.....	808,506,281	498,848,735

RECENT HISTORY.—The nation as it exists today, diminished in area and prestige, is the outcome of several recent wars beginning with the Tripolitan

War in 1911, and ending in the Treaty of Sèvres in 1920. In 1913, Greece, Servia, Montenegro, declared war on Bulgaria. The Turks took advantage of the discord among their enemies and the withdrawal of the Bulgarian army from Tchataldja to march toward Adrianople, which they took with ease on 22 July. Bulgaria, overwhelmingly beaten, sued for peace. Thus Bulgaria lost Adrianople and control of railway connections with Dédéagatch, her new single seaport on the Aegean. For a while a new war threatened between Turkey and Greece; in October, Anatolian reservists were called to the colors by the Turkish Government and the center of the Greek army was moved to Kavala; the easternmost point of Thrace. Diplomatic relations were, however, resumed and resulted on 13 November, 1913, in the conclusion of a treaty providing for the settlement of religious, racial, and financial affairs in Grecian Thrace and Macedonia. In February, 1914, the powers restored Imbros, Tenedos, and Castellorizo, off Asia Minor, to Turkey and awarded to Greece all the other islands.

WORLD WAR.—After the Balkan Wars, Turkey determined to improve the military and naval position of the government and as evidence appointed several German army officers of high rank to positions of prime importance in the actual command of the army. Therefore, it is easy to understand the pro-German influence that led Turkey to cast her lot with Germany in the Great European War. Still, at the beginning of the great struggle, it insisted on neutrality, belying its statements, however, by mobilizing immediately. Soon after the declaration of war, two German cruisers in the Mediterranean, the Geshea and Breslau, took refuge in the harbor of Constantinople. The Allies protested and the Turks answered by abrogating the conventions known as the "Capitulations," whereby foreigners in that country were exempt from local jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases. The Vatican protested along with the Powers that the abrogation put an end to religious liberty. The Turks immediately closed the Dardanelles to commerce. On 29 October, 1914, the Breslau, masquerading as a Turkish cruiser, shelled Russian towns on the Black Sea and three Turkish torpedo boats raided Odessa. On 3 November, Russia declared war on Turkey, and on 27 November, the Sultan of Turkey proclaimed a Jihad or Holy War to be waged by all Mohammedans against "the enemies of Islam."

Except for some spasmodic uprising against French rule in Morocco the Mohammedan subjects of England and France gave little heed to this proclamation. Coincident with Turkey's entry into the war, the British formally annexed the Greek-speaking Island of Cyprus and terminated Turkish suzerainty in Egypt. Already a British force from India had landed at the head of the Persian Gulf, had taken Basra, on 23 November, and were preparing for an invasion of Mesopotamia with Bagdad as their objective. In February, an Anglo-French fleet of more than fifty warships attempted to force the passage of the Dardanelles and to reduce Constantinople, but suffered such severe losses that the co-operation of land forces was deemed necessary. In April, British and French forces from Egypt landed at the eastern end of Gallipoli, between Gaba Tepe and Ari Burnu and suffered great losses under the heavy fire of the Turks. The whole enterprise was from the British point of view a ghastly failure, due to lack of experienced leadership, mismanagement, a deficient water supply, and inclement weather, and cost Great Britain 117,000 casualties.

Serious fighting took place in Mesopotamia and on 28 April, 1915, General Townshend was forced to surrender Kut-el-Amara after being surrounded and besieged. His fate was avenged by General F. S. Maude, who with an augmented British force recaptured the town, overwhelmed the Turkish army at DIALAH and, on 11 March, made his triumphal entry into Bagdad. Joining hands with the Russians he marched on to Samarra. On the Russo-Turkish front were six Russian armies. In Armenia a decisive battle in January, 1915, shattered the Turkish line on the Aras River and near Lake Totum. Erzerum was taken by the Russians after a five days' assault. The first Russian army captured Trebizond in April and headed for Platana and Djivialyk in May and June. Another penetrated the mountains of the upper Choruk, took Mamakhatum, Baiburt, Ardasa, Gumushkaneh and Erizingan in July. "Old Armenia" was thus lost to Turkey. The other Russian armies were not so successful. The third army, barely escaped disaster in the Lake Van region. The fourth and fifth were driven back in northwestern Persia. The sixth struggling westward along the caravan route from Kermanesh to Bagdad was hurled back almost 200 miles into the interior of Persia. About this time a formidable uprising in Arabia occurred. Under the leadership of the insurgent-sheriff of Mecca, the Arab rebels not only established themselves in Mecca, but also captured Jedda and Kinfunda and beleaguereed Taif. In November, 1916, their new "Kingdom of the Hedjaz" was proclaimed.

After repelling a Turkish attack on the Suez Canal, early in August, 1916, an army of Australasians, Indians, and Englishmen, skirted the Mediterranean Coast eastward, occupied El Arish and Maghdabah, ninety miles east of the Canal, and struck northwards into Palestine; at Gaza they inflicted a heavy loss upon the Turkish army, but did not take the city. General Edward Allenby succeeded General Murray, and succeeded in taking Beersheba, Gaza, and cutting the Jaffa-Jerusalem railroad. On November, 16, Jaffa was occupied and on 10 December, 1917, Jerusalem surrendered to the British.

According to the Treaty of Peace with Turkey, signed at Sèvres on 10 August, 1920, the Turkish Empire is very much reduced. Turkey cedes (1) Thrace, west of the Chatalja and excepting only the Derkos water supply to Greece, as well as Tenedos and Imbros, and the Islands in the Aegean occupied by Greece; (2) Smyrna with the surrounding strip, comprising Tireh, Odemish, Magnisa, Akhissar, Berg-hana and Aivali, is to be administered by Greece, under Turkish sovereignty, for 5 years after which the territory may annex itself to Greece by plebiscite; (3) Mesopotamia, Palestine, Syria, Armenia, and the Hejs became independent, the first three under mandates; (4) Kurdistan has autonomy conferred upon it; (5) Castellorizo and the Dodecanese are ceded to Italy. Turkey retained Constantinople, but the coastal area of the Dardanelles, the Marmora and the Bosphorus are placed under the control of a "Commission of the Straits" appointed by the League of Nations. At the same time England, France, and Italy made a tripartite agreement in which they undertook to support each other in maintaining their respective spheres of influence in Turkey.

The prospective creation of a free state of Constantinople led to a demand by the Young Turks that Damad Pasha be ousted for his alleged failure to win for Turkey more concessions in the signing of the treaty; the Sultan declined to remove him. Finally the landing of additional Greek and Italian troops at Smyrna and Adalia, together with the seizure of Koneih, an important railway center in Asia Minor, by the Nationalist insurgents, caused the downfall of the Entente ministry. The Nationalists immediately set up a rival government at Angora. Soon they controlled a large part of Anatolia. In the hope that the wretched conditions in Turkey would be stabilized, an Anglo-Franco-Italian army occupied Constantinople on 16 March, 1920, and the Turkish government was informed that such occupation would continue until the terms of the Peace Treaty were fulfilled. Seeing the impossibility of carrying out the terms without prolonged opposition the allies modified the terms of the treaty in a conference at London in February, 1921. Greece, however, insisted on imposing the terms of the Sèvres Treaty, so favorable to her, on the Nationalists and commenced to do so by force.

Kemal, the Nationalist leader, headed the forces fighting the invading Greeks in Asia Minor.

Tuy, DIOCESE OF (TUDENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—105a), in the province of Pontevedra, Spain, suffragan of Compostello. This see is filled by Rt. Rev. Manuel Tago y Gonzalez, born in the city of Tuy, in 1865; he made his studies at the seminary there and later served as a professor of Greek, Hebrew and theology, was ordained in 1888, made secretary to the Bishop of Lugo in 1896, named a canon the same year and raised to the rank of theological canon in 1904. He was appointed Bishop of Osma 25 August, 1909, and transferred to Tuy 4 May, 1917. He is a member of the royal academy of history. The diocese, which covers an area of 766 square miles embraces a Catholic population of 278,540. It comprises (1920 statistics) 277 parishes divided among 15 archpresbyteries, 604 priests, 90 seminarians and 25 convents with 125 religious and 357 Sisters.

Twilight Sleep is a treatment to bring about painless childbirth. In 1847 James Y. Simpson in England used ether and chloroform in obstetrical practice, but little progress was made until 1902 when the German physician, Steinbuechel, introduced a method in which the expectant mother was in a state of quietude and rest similar to that of a gentle sleep, hence the name Twilight Sleep. This state of unconsciousness was brought about by the use of a drug called scopolamine and doses of morphine. The first was used to intensify the action of the morphine, which had the tendency to prevent pain. Dr. Charles Green of Harvard, Dr. Williams of Johns Hopkins, Dr. Joseph De Lee of Northwestern University, Chicago, and many other eminent specialists in obstetrics, after studying the process scientifically and observing it in many actual tests abandoned the treatment. Dr. De Lee inspected the methods as applied in maternity hospitals in several of the larger cities of Germany and found that the treatment had been rejected by the physicians who had formerly advocated it and who had studied it under the most favorable conditions. In the United States the subject was brought to the attention of the general public by articles in some of our popular magazines; but little of the information given there was reliable. "The merits and disadvantages of this treatment have been fully discussed both medically and popularly to the fullest extent, but its use has been largely discontinued by American obstetricians. There is a distinct risk to the child. The percentage of still births is increased, even in series of selected cases, and is due to an asphyxia" (Shear's "Obstetrics, Normal and Operative," 1920). "The violence and uncertainty of the whole treatment, the general bad impression given to our patients who are being taught to approach the 'horrors of labor' in fear and trembling constitute so severe an arraignment of this treatment of labor cases that we feel compelled to condemn it, leaving open the question of the merits of a single dose of morphine and scopolamine in those cases in which we have hitherto given morphine and atropin" (Dr. Joseph L. Baer).

The primary reason for the treatment is the prevention of pain in childbirth. The effects which directly result from it are (1) danger to the life of the mother, (2) and of permanent and serious injury to the mother, (3) danger to the life of the child, and (4) of serious and permanent injury to the child. There are times when dangerous treatments and operations may be used as the only alternatives of saving the life of a patient. Under such conditions a risk may be taken or a part may be amputated to save the whole. But in the application of twilight sleep the lives of two persons are involved, that of the child and that of the mother. Moreover, the child has the same claim to life that the mother has. A double effect follows from the operation: (1) the prevention of pain on the part of the mother, and (2) the four dangers given above. Under such circumstances the good directly intended must be proportional to the evil effects which follow. In twilight sleep any one of the evil effects is more than sufficient to offset the good which is sought and therefore the operation is morally wrong.

To further understand the difficulties which may arise in this matter we must recall that the advocates of twilight sleep proposed it as a treatment in normal childbirth; in their opinion it was to have a universal application. When we consider its purpose and the evils which were necessarily connected with it we must condemn the movement as unethical. In isolated cases where the life of the mother is endangered by some organic trouble, remedies may be used, even if they indirectly threaten the life of the child or injury to the child. Dr. De Lee, in his latest book on obstetrics (1920), claims that even with improvements "while the life dangers to the mother can be eliminated, the patient must be willing to pay the price of possible lacerations and hemorrhage, and the occasional loss or injury of the child as the cost of her relief from suffering." Under these conditions the remedy may not be used in normal pregnancy.

During the past six years other methods of painless childbirth have been advocated, among them the use of nitrous oxid-oxygen. It is claimed for this treatment that it relieves the pains of childbirth and in no way injures or endangers either mother or child. More than a hundred cases were taken care of in the Presbyterian Hospital, Chicago. But a prominent physician of Chicago who had followed the above cases wrote: "The method, while perfectly safe, was abandoned because it was cumbersome, could be used only in a hospital and was enormously expensive. . . . The results did not show the slightest improvement in any way over the time honored method of a few drops of chloroform or ether at the beginning of each pain in the late stage of labor."

The difficulty in pronouncing on the ethical solution of such operations is that they are new and the data furnished may not always be reliable. But the principles which should guide one are of easy application. If, as is claimed, these various methods do not injure child or mother and at the same time relieve the pain of the mother they may be used. If the operation is called twilight sleep the name does not affect the remedy; nor does it make the first method and motive of the movement moral.

Tyre, ARCHDIOCESE OF (TYRENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—109d), a see of three rites, in Syria. For the Latin Rite the see was united to Oristano, but is now listed as a titular see. For the Greek Melkites it is filled by Most Rev. Maximos Saiegh, appointed in 1919. There are 5270 Catholics of this rite, 6 secular and 10 regular clergy, and 14 churches and chapels. The present incumbent for the Maronite Rite is Most Rev. Chocrallah Khoury, born in Lebanon in 1865, ordained in 1886, served as superior general of the Lebanon mission of Kraim, and was appointed 31 January, 1906. He is the first archbishop for this rite. Out of 400,000 inhabitants there are 10,000 Maronite Catholics served by 19 secular priests and 16 churches and chapels.

U

Ubanghi (cf. C. E., XV—115a), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF, in Belgian Congo, is governed by Mgr. Fulgence Carnonckel, a native of Grammont, Belgium. The mission of Ubanghi was accepted by the Belgian Capuchins in January, 1910, at the request of the Belgian Government, and on 7 April, 1911, was raised to a prefecture Apostolic. On 10 September, Fathers Fulgence Carnonckel, Liberatus Maas of Turnhout, Basilius Tanghe of Bruges, Ferdinandus Peeters of Antwerp and two lay brothers, Humilis Ceulemans of Gravenwezel and Amandus de Lannoy of Hoozede left Belgium to found the mission, arriving on 1 December at Bansyville when the first station was started. No missionary had even been there, but there were a score of natives here and there who had been baptized while doing military service.

The boundaries are: On the W. and N. the River Ubanghi from 1° 30' N. lat. to the junction of the Bomu and Uele; on the E. a line from there to the confluence of the Trim-biri and Congo, and continued to the south of Abumombazi (3° 38' 46" N.; 22° 5' E.), and on the S. the watershed separating the Congo and Ubanghi, the Ubanghi and Ngiri, and then 1° 30' S. lat. to the Ubanghi. To the west lies the Vicariate Apostolic of French Equatorial Congo; to the west and north the Prefecture Apostolic of Ubanghi-Chari-Tchad; to the east, the Prefecture Apostolic of Western Uele; and the Vicariate Apostolic of New Antwerp, the latter also lying to the south. Many languages are spoken in the prefecture adding to the missionary's labors—the Ngombe and Lubala use a Bantu tongue, while the Ngbandi, Banza and Bwaka use Sudanese languages. The natives number over 150,000. Sleeping sickness is prevalent. It is curable if treated without delay, consequently the missionaries have established dispensaries in three stations, where suspected cases can be treated. Leprosy occurs here and there but not in a contagious form. Before the arrival of the Belgians and especially the missionaries the tribes were all cannibal; now cannibalism is a very rare occurrence. The natives are very superstitious and addicted to fetichism, but they are not idolaters. Polygamy is the great obstacle to their conversion, but even that is yielding slowly. Catechumens receive six months special training at the mission station, before being baptized; after baptism they remain there four weeks longer to prepare for Holy Communion. From 1913 to 1921 the number of Catholics has been as follows: 83; 325; 501; 668; 1361; 2259; 2945; 3467; 4238. The mission statistics for 1921 furnished by the Prefect Apostolic who resides at Moleghe are: priests 12, lay brothers 5; Capuchins; Sisters, 4 (Augustinians from Mons); churches and chapels, 5 public, 2 private Catholics 4238; catechists 61; chapel schools 49; catechumens 5737; normal schools (for catechists) 2, pupils 37; rural schools 45; (pupils 718; trade schools 14, pupils 115 girls, 86 boys; orphanages 4; orphans 213 boys, 131 girls, who receive secondary education; laboratories and dispensaries 3; hospitals 2; with 167 sleeping sickness patients; 4 cemeteries; baptism 1189 of which 789 were solemn, 400 in articulo mortis (186 of these baptized parties recovered); Holy Communions 105,466; marriages 80; ecclesiastical burials 58. There are no non-Catholics in the prefecture, the attempt made by the American Protestants in 1916 having failed to make any converts. The elementary or rural schools teach Christian doctrine, reading and writing of the vernacular the secondary schools teach in addition elementary arithmetic and the history and geography of Belgium and the Congo; the normal or catechists' schools teach in addition the art of speaking and correspondence. The trade schools teach carpentry, brickmaking, masonry, tanning, tailoring and shoe-making.

Ubanghi-Chari, PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF; (cf. C. E., XV—115a), in French Equatorial Africa, is confided to the Congregation of the Holy Ghost. V. Rev. Jean-Rene Calloch, C. S. Sp., b. in the Diocese of Quimper, France, in 1876, appointed 21 January, 1904, still fills the see. On 14 May, 1914, the prefecture was detached from the Vicariate of Central Africa and the new boundaries were fixed. It is as large as France with several millions of inhabitants to convert. Prior to the war the missionaries were gaining foothold slowly but surely. In 1920 five missionaries did wonderful work in the missions established. There were (1918) 565 conversions and baptisms, and 250 children educated and cared for by the Bangui and the Bessou charities.

Uberaba, DIOCESE OF (DE UBERABA; cf. C. E., XV—115d), in Minas Geraes, Brazil, suffragan of Marianna. The word Uberaba is from I-berab-a, which in Tupi means "smiling water," the Indian name of the ruin on which the city stands. On 8 July, 1918, the parishes of St. Jerome and St. Francis were transferred to the newly-erected Diocese of Aterrado (q. v.). In 1921 the diocese had an area of about 58,000 square miles (150,000 square kilometers) with 44 parishes, and a population of about 375,000, mostly Catholics. The city of Uberaba has 13 canons, of whom 3 are supernumerary; by Apostolic indult the canons are exempt from the obligation of reciting the office in common and residing in the episcopal city. The diocesan statistics record as follows: Religious Orders—Dominicans, 5 priests, 5 lay brothers; Marist Brothers, 18; Vincentian Fathers, 2; Dominican Sisters, 20, with 30 novices; Sisters of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, 13; Portuguese Sisters of Jesus, Mary and Joseph; Catholic press—"União Popular," "Estrela Matutina," "Mensagem do Rosario," and "A Cruz;" Sodalties—Apostleship of Prayer, Perpetual Rosary, Daughters of Mary, Franciscan Tertiaries, Dominican Tertiaries, Crusaders of the Blessed Sacrament, St. Gerald's Association, Men's Rosary Sodality, Angelical Militia of St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Vincent de Paul Society, Ladies' Charitable Association; Homes—2 Houses of Mercy, 2 Asylums; Organizations—the Altar Society to care for poor churches, the União Popular, which conducts a night school for workingmen, with 40 students; Schools—besides many parochial schools there are 3 girls' colleges, one with 700 students, ranking as a normal school, 1 diocesan gymnasium with 500 pupils, and 2 private Catholic schools conducted by secular ladies. There were about 2050 marriages and 14,000 baptisms in the diocese in the year 1921.

Ucayali, (St. FRANCIS OF UCAYALI), PREFECTURE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XV—117d), in Central Peru, is confided to the Friars Minor, and governed by Very Rev. Francesco Irazola, O. F. M., elected 28 January, 1913. He resides at St. Francis of Ucayali.

The prefecture contains (1920) 10,000 inhabitants of whom 5140 are Catholic, and 100 catechumens, 12 missionary priests, 10 lay brothers, 24 churches and chapels, 1 parish, 17 Christian communities and 6 residences.

Udine, ARCHDIOCESE OF (UTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—118b), in Friuli, Northern Italy, directly subject to the Holy See. This see is filled by Most Rev. Antonio Anastasio Rossi, born in Milan in 1864; he made his studies in Rome, became a professor in the seminary of Pavia, then vicar general and honorary canon in that diocese, municipal counsellor and provincial 1902-08, was made a private chamberlain in 1905 and appointed bishop 8 January, 1910. In February, 1917, he was named a grand officer of the crown of Italy. The cathedral, built in 1236, and altered several times, was most recently repaired in 1912. The diocese comprises 272 parishes, 502 churches, 4 monasteries for men and 1 for women, 2 convents for men and 68 for women, 644 secular and 32 regular clergy, 10 brothers, 890 Sisters, 1 seminary, 285 seminarians, 4 higher schools for boys and 10 for girls, and 18 professional schools. One missionary association carries on charitable works and 2 homes, 34 asylums, 10 hospitals, 2 refuges, 1 settlement house and 2 day nurseries are established. One society is formed among the clergy, a number among the laity, and several Catholic periodicals are published.

Uganda, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (UGANDENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—413a), erected in 1894 as the Vicariate Apostolic of Victoria Nyanza Northern, and changed to its present title by a decree of 15 January, 1915. It is entrusted to the White Fathers, the present vicar being Rt. Rev. Henry Streicher, named 21 January, 1897, and appointed titular Bishop of Tabraca 1 February, following. He is assisted by a coadjutor Rt. Rev. Jean Forbes, appointed titular Bishop of Vaga, 17 November, 1917. Episcopal residences are established at Katirondo and Kampala. The vicariate, which comprises the greater part of the royalty of Uganda, is illustrious for the 22 blacks martyred for the Faith, who were beatified in 1920. Latest statistics, collected in June, 1919, credit it with 171,551 Catholics, 60,126 catechumens, 31 stations, 106 missionary priests and Brothers, 10 native priests, 40 European religious (White Sisters and Sisters of Marie-Reparatrice), 91 native Sisters, 1314 catechists, 725 schools giving instruction to 10,172 boys and 7622 girls, and 52 charitable institutions caring for 378,003 sick people. During the year 1918-19 baptism was administered to 3593 adults, and Easter communions, and communions of devotion totaled 2,085,316.

Ugento, DIOCESE OF (UXENTINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—119b), in the province of Lecce, Southern Italy, is suffragan of Otranto. Rt. Rev. Luigi Pugliese, transferred to Ugento 22 July, 1896, still (1922) fills the see. There are in the diocese (1920) 70,000 Catholics, 30 parishes, 125 secular and 4 regular priests, 10 seminarians, 120 churches or chapels.

Union of Christendom — Recent manifestations of the movement toward reunion may be treated under three heads: various sporadic and in a sense local movements, generally affecting only a limited constituency; the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America; the World Conference on Faith and Order.

I—Most of the sporadic or limited movements have been treated in the various articles on the sects, but for convenience the most important may be summarized here.

(1) A concordat was entered into by members of the Protestant Episcopal Church and of Congregational churches in the United States, March, 1919, bearing chiefly on orders and the ministration of the sacraments. It later fell somewhat into abeyance although final disposition is to be made in the conventions of 1922.

(2) In 1915 a basis of union was agreed upon by the joint committees of the Presbyterian, Methodist, and Congregational churches of Canada, the union to be known as "The United Church of Canada." As yet (1922), however, the plan has not been put into execution.

(3) A similar union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches of Australia was proposed in 1918, full reports on the result not yet being available.

(4) In 1919 proposals were made for church union in South India, the parties to the proposition being the Anglican Church, the South India United Church (constituted in 1908 and embracing the two congregational bodies: the London Missionary Society and the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions; and also the Church of Scotland, the United Free Church of Scotland, and the Dutch Reformed Church of America) and the Mar Thoma Syrian Church. Final action has not yet been reported.

(5) In 1913 at Kikuyu in British East Africa a union meeting, participated in by Anglicans, was held (see ANGLICANISM). In 1918 a similar meeting (without the accompanying incidents) was held at the same place, the associating parties being the Church Missionary Society (Anglican), the Church of Scotland Mission, Africa Inland Mission (an inter-church organization), and the United Methodist Church Mission, a constitution being proposed for a projected "Alliance of Missionary Societies in British East Africa" and ratification is now being sought.

(6) In 1919 and 1920 proposals were made particularly in accordance with the statement of the Lambeth Conference of 1920 or reunion between the Church of England and the Wesleyan Methodist Church, but were rejected by the latter on the question of episcopacy.

(7) In 1918 the Free Evangelical Churches of England, including Baptists, Congregationalists, Methodists, Presbyterians and other Nonconformist bodies, formed a Free Church Federation similar to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

(8) In 1917 three Lutheran bodies in the United States, the Norwegian, United Norwegian, and Hauge's Synods united under the title of the Norwegian Lutheran Church of America, and in 1918 three other Lutheran bodies in America, the General Synod, the General Council, and the United Synod South, united, adopting the name United Lutheran Church in America.

(9) In 1920 in the United States representatives of the Armenians, Baptists, the Christian Church, Christian Union of the United States, Congregationalists, Disciples, Evangelical Synod of North America, Friends (two branches), Methodists (Primitive), Methodist Episcopalians, Moravian Church, Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, Protestant Episcopal Church, Reformed Episcopal Church, Reformed Church in the United States, United Presbyterians, and Welsh Presbyterians, formulated plans for a federal union to be known as the "United Church of Christ in America."

(10) The Alliance of Reformed Churches throughout the World holding the Presbyterian System is a loose federation whose title is self-explanatory. Its American branch is the Council of Reformed Churches of America holding the Presbyterian System. There have also occurred minor unions between various Presbyterian bodies (see PRESBYTERIANISM).

(11) For Interchurch World Movement see PROTESTANTISM.

II.—While the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America is a manifestation of the general movement toward unity it is in no sense an attempt to draw up a common creed or form of government or of worship. The Council is an officially constituted body, yet the autonomy of the federated churches remains intact, the purpose being to effect unity of service and effort rather than of faith or polity.

The organization of the Federal Council was completed in 1908, largely as the result of previous federative movements. It includes about thirty denominations, among which are found Baptist, Lutheran, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Protestant Episcopal sects. In 1922 they reported a combined total of 142,472 congregations, 113,761 clergy and 19,933,115 members.

Similar bodies outside of America are: in England, the National Council of the Evangelical Free Churches (mentioned above, I, 7), and the Federal Council of the Evangelical Free Churches which is somewhat more inclusive than the former: in France, the Protestant Federation of France (Fédération Protestante de France), embracing the National Union of Reformed Evangelical Churches, National Union of Reformed Churches, Evangelical Lutheran Church, Union of Evangelical Free Churches, Evangelical Methodist Church, Union of Baptist Churches of Northern France; in Switzerland, the Union of Swiss Reformed Churches (Verband Schweizerischer Reformierter Kirchen), including only the German-speaking churches of the Swiss Reformed Church Conference; in Belgium, the Belgian Protestant Committee of Union (Comité d'Union Protestante Belge), which includes the Union of Protestant Evangelical Churches of Belgium and the Belgian Christian Missionary Church; in Japan, the Federation of Churches of Japan; in Germany, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in Germany, which is in process of organization.

III.—The World Conference on Faith and Order is a more thorough and comprehensive attempt to effect a reunion of the churches, their ideal being a union which shall embrace not only the Protestant sects and the Eastern schismatics, but (so they state), the Catholic Church as well.

(a) History.—The movement originated in the General Convention of the Episcopal Church, at Cincinnati, in 1910, when the Rev. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York (now bishop), introduced a resolution on reunion calling for the appointment of a commission to prepare a "conference for the consideration of questions touching Faith and Order, and that all Christian Communions throughout the world which confess our Lord Jesus Christ as God and Saviour be asked to unite with us in arranging for and conducting such a conference." The commission was appointed and $100,000 donated by J. P. Morgan to help finance it. The commission immediately began conferring with other churches, the Congregationalists and the Disciples of Christ, who were in convention at the same time as the Episcopalians, being the first to join the movement, after having concomitantly passed similar resolutions to that mentioned above. In May, 1913, an unofficial meeting of representatives of American denominations was held; meanwhile deputations had gone to Great Britain to arouse interest there; a North American preparatory conference took place in January, 1916, in Garden City, Long Island; and in 1919 an official American deputation visited Europe and the Near East.

In Athens the delegates were well received by the Holy Governing Synod of the Church of Greece, which agreed to send representatives to the World Conference. Other Eastern churches took similar action, the cordiality of the Church of Constantinople extending so far as to invite and permit one of the members of the deputation to sing the Gospel on Easter Sunday at the cathedral service. Practically all the non-Catholic churches in Europe signified their approval of the movement and their intention to co-operate, the churches in Russia and Germany alone not being approached because of disturbed internal conditions in those countries, although a few delegates from these churches finally attended the meeting in 1920. The deputation also visited Rome, being received by his Holiness Pope Benedict XV, who indicated that the Catholic Church could not accept their invitation to participate in the proposed conference.

The churches, as they approved the movement, appointed commissions (not more than three members from each), and these delegates convened in Geneva, Switzerland, 12 August, 1920, to arrange for its further conduct. There were present 137 delegates, under the presidency of Bishop Charles H. Brent, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Western New York, representing about forty nations and seventy Trinitarian churches. After having been in session generally twice daily the Conference elected a continuation committee and adjourned on 19 August, the final benediction being given by Bishop Herzog of the Old Catholic Church. Since this preliminary meeting the continuation work has consisted chiefly in the formation of local groups, notably at Oxford and Cambridge, England, and at Philadelphia, to discuss the topics presented at Geneva, in order that definite proposals may if possible be made to the next Conference.

(b) Aims and Methods.—As previously intimated this movement aims at effecting a universal, reunited church, and not merely a federation of churches in which each constituent church would retain its present complete entity, its organization, forms and beliefs. Practically it aims at arriving at such a compromise on questions of faith and order as would be acceptable to all participants as the basis of reunion. It also differs from many similar movements in that it seeks to embrace the Catholic Church in the movement.

To effect its purpose the conference method has been adopted, the intent being to procure through small representative bodies of delegates information on the views of the participant churches as to the questions involved; to bring about discussion of the points raised; to receive from the various churches their opinions as to what should be the nature and characteristics of the proposed reunited church. The preliminary local discussions are especially for this purpose, it being their task to consider the questions formulated for them and circulated by the World Conference. Furthermore, the churches are asked not to pledge themselves officially to any answers to the questions; their action is to await the final proposals which may in the future be presented to them by the Conference after the results of the preliminary discussions have been collated, discussed and acted upon. The period necessary for the accomplishment of their purpose has been estimated as "perhaps one, and possibly two, generations." Finally, the sponsors of the movement have at all times called attention to the necessity of prayer for the success of the undertaking. The continuation committee, stating that the first and by far the most important preparation is that of prayer, has requested the participating churches to offer regular and special prayers for this purpose. A "Manual of Prayers for Unity" has been issued, and an octave of prayers has been appointed for the week ending with Pentecost, 4 June, 1922.

What has been the concrete result of the twelve years of work on the part of the movement? While the preliminary Conference at Geneva (1920) was somewhat in the nature of an agape, especially in its opening sessions, it discussed in a general way the meaning of the church, and what is meant by unity, and the place of the Bible and a creed in relation to reunion. The almost universal tendency of the delegates seemed to indicate an inability on the part of their churches to yield any substantial point in questions of faith or order, the non-episcopal churches, for example, standing for the sufficiency of their orders, and the non-creedal churches generally denying any necessity of a creed in the strict sense. However, the meeting was not intended to be definitive on these points; and accordingly it instructed the continuation committee to secure proper consideration and discussion of the topics mentioned above. This committee formulated the questions and sent them to the local churches in the following form: (1) What degree of unity in Faith will be necessary in a reunited Church? (2) Is a statement of this one Faith in the form of a Creed necessary or desirable? (3) If so, what Creed should be used? or what other formulary would be desirable? (4) What are the proper uses of a Creed and of a Confession of Faith?

(c) The Catholic Church and the Movement.—Before speaking of the attitude of the Church it may be well to indicate the attitude of the Movement toward the Church. As stated previously the sponsors of the movement entertained the hope that they could prevail upon Catholic delegates to enter into conference with them; their idea of a reunited Church is one that should include the Roman Church as well as the various non-Catholic denominations. They have accordingly in pursuance of this idea always been courteous in their attitude toward the Church and her rulers; in their discussions there has not appeared any attack on the Church; even after receiving the definitive declination of the Pope to send delegates to Geneva they have not changed their attitude; in their "Manual of Prayers" use is made of some excerpts from the Roman Missal; and finally in this Manual a courteous suggestion is made that Catholic priests should say, and lay people should have said, votive Masses for the Reunion of Christendom. The general external attitude, in other words, is that of those who desire an entente cordiale with the Church. It is quite clear, however, that they are unable to understand why the Church cannot take any official part in the movement.

The attitude of the Church toward the World Conference presents a twofold aspect: toward the movement in itself, and toward the movement as seeking official Catholic representation in the Conference. Toward the movement in itself, that is, toward the movement as constituting a sincere and earnest attempt on the part of the non-Catholic denominations to arrive at some method of ending the deplorable religious disunion which has divided a great part of Christianity into almost innumerable sects, the Church has only sympathy and approval. The end in itself, the Reunion of Christendom, is one which appeals especially to all Catholics. Priests and people pray daily for this end, Masses are said, novenas are offered up, an octave of prayer is officially offered yearly, and some religious orders have practically as their chief end the furtherance of religious unity. This does not, however, mean that they pray directly for the success of the World Conference in the concrete. They pray indeed that this movement may serve at least to lead some back into the bosom of the Church which their fathers deserted; they cannot, however, admit the competency of such a tribunal to settle such questions as it has raised; for a Catholic, only the Catholic Church through its leader, the Pope, the Vicar of Christ on earth, can say what is necessary, what is useful, in matters of faith and order, and this the Church has indicated so clearly in times past that the question is no longer an open one.

Hence on the second aspect of the attitude of the Church the explanation is simple. The Church can take no official part in the World Conference because the Church has been appointed by Jesus Christ as the custodian of the deposit of faith which He left with it through His apostles. The Catholic Church is in the possession of the Truth and uncompromisingly, yet in all charity, it must decline any encroachment on its Divine prerogatives. It is not then in a spirit of aloofness or of lack of sympathy or understanding that the Church acts as she does; for the Church all the questions which the Conference raises as to the necessity of a Creed, and the like, are definitely settled. It is hard indeed for a non-Catholic to appreciate this attitude. An analogy taken from the field of science may help. If a non-scientific man should approach a scientist, an astronomer for example, and request the latter for a conference with a view to a broader basis of unity of belief on astronomical subjects; if he should intimate that in astronomy it should be sufficient to hold that the earth does not revolve around the sun, and that the sun is only a few thousand miles away from the earth, and that with greater freedom on the part of both to view the questions as they please, a truer unity would be attained, the scientist could only reply that the questions had already been decided against the petitioner; they are no longer open; if unity is desired it must be unity with the scientist on those points which have been proved true.

In matters of faith and order the Catholic Church is in a position analogous to that of the scientist in regard to facts of nature. On the word of God the Church is certain that it is in possession of the Truth. It cannot recede without going counter to the will of God. If the non-Catholic would only try to understand this merely from the psychological point of view he would probably come nearer to a more sympathetic realization of the fact that the Church's refusal to treat with him on a compromise basis is absolutely compatible with the charity and the good will she professes.

The two points of view outlined above are substantially those held by Benedict XV when approached by representatives of the World Conference. In 1914 and in 1915 he expressed his gratification at learning of the movement, and his hope that it would finally lead to the restoration of the unity of the mystical body of Christ. To the deputation of 1919 he accorded a cordial personal welcome, but as the report of the deputation puts it "the contrast between the Pope's personal attitude towards us and his official attitude towards the Conference was very sharp. One was irresistibly benevolent, the other irresistibly rigid. The genuineness of the Pope's personal friendliness towards us was as outstanding as the positiveness of his official declination of our invitation." In conclusion this final point may best be summed up by the official statement of Benedict XV, presented to the deputation by Archbishop Cerretti: "The Holy Father, after having thanked them for their visit, stated that as successor of St.

Peter and Vicar of Christ he had no greater desire than that there should be one fold and one shepherd. His Holiness added that the teaching and practice of the Roman Catholic Church regarding the unity of the visible Church of Christ was well known to everybody and therefore it would not be possible for the Catholic Church to take part in such a Congress as the one proposed. His Holiness, however, by no means wishes to disapprove of the Congress in question for those who are not in union with the Chair of Peter; on the contrary he earnestly desires and prays that, if the Congress is practicable, those who take part in it may, by the grace of God, see the light and become reunited to the visible Head of the Church, by whom they will be received with open arms."

Union That Nothing Be Lost, incorporated, under the laws of the State of New York, is the missionary agency of the Society of the Atonement (q. v.). This Society is a new branch of the III Order Regular of St. Francis, following closely the Rule of the Friars Minor, and the Union That Nothing Be Lost has been the almoner of hundreds of thousands of dollars between benefactors and the missionaries and their work in the past few years. The Society was received from Anglicanism into the Catholic Church in 1909 and the Union That Nothing Be Lost was a later development; its benefactors number over 40,000. There is scarcely any part of the foreign mission field which has not benefited from its ministrations.

Unitarians.—The president of the "General Conference of Unitarian and other Christian Churches" is William H. Taft, former president and now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. The Unitarians reported in 1921 a membership in the United States of 51,635, a loss of 30,880 as compared with the figures for 1916. This loss is possibly due to the fact that the loosening of creedal obligations in the other sects no longer forces a Protestant with Unitarian leanings to give up his "orthodox" affiliations.

Unyanyembe, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (UNIA-BEMBENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—204d), in former German East Africa, now under Belgian and British mandates, is confided to the White Fathers and had (1920) 10 stations, 3678 Catholics, 2889 catechumens, 33 missionaries, 72 catechists, 6 nuns of Our Lady of Africa, 13 stations with resident priests, 26 schools with 966 pupils, and 30 institutions of charity. The mission is under the administration of Rt. Rev. Pierre-Henri Leonard, titular Bishop of Tipasa of Numidia, b. 5 December, 1869, appointed vicar apostolic of Unyanyembe, 27 June, 1912, consecrated 11 August of the same year. He resides at Ushimrombo or Tabora.

Upper Nile, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (NILI SUPERIORIS; cf. C. E., XV—206b), comprises the eastern portion of Uganda, on the Nile. The first vicar of this territory, Rt. Rev. Henry Hanlon, of the Congregation of Foreign Missions of Mill Hill, London, to whom it is entrusted, was succeeded in June, 1912, by Rt. Rev. John Biermans, titular Bishop of Gargara. Bishop Biermans' first work was to make an urgent appeal for funds in order to bring more priests to this mission. The old Fathers, most of whom had been laboring in this unhealthy climate from the foundation of the vicariate, were broken in health and new energy was badly needed. The bishop's appeal met with ready response, particularly in America and Holland and within a few years the number of priests had increased from thirty-six to fifty. A training school for catechists was established, and a little later the Bukedi and Budama districts were opened for missions. There are now twenty-three permanent missions, sixteen of which are in the protectorate of Uganda, where there are also one institution of native Sisters, a boarding school and a high school. At Kamuli there is a convent with school and hospital, and an industrial school. Fourteen Sisters are working in the territory establishing schools and hospitals as quickly as they can obtain the necessary funds. Although the mission stations of Kisii and Asumbi were the only ones actually destroyed during the World War, the whole vicariate suffered, and the lowering of the exchange and the increase in prices still impede the progress of the work. In 1921 the vicariate rejoiced with its bishop in the celebration of the silver jubilee of his ordination. According to 1920 statistics this territory has 18,053 Catholics, 12,000 catechumens, 28 missionary priests, 240 catechists, 15 churches and chapels and 12 schools with 1649 pupils.

Urbino, ARCHDIOCESE OF (URBINATENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—221b), in Italy, is governed by Mgr. Giacomo Ghio, b. at Bosia, in the diocese of Genoa on 23 July, 1858, and nominated to the see on 28 March, 1912. The diocesan statistics (1921) record 42,500 inhabitants; 99 parishes; 128 priests, of whom 8 are regulars (Conventuals and Friars Minor); 1 seminary, 30 students; 4 convents (women); 4 educational establishments; a university; a lyceum; a gymnasium; a technical school; a normal school; a school of arts and trades; a school for women workers. There is a local Catholic paper, the "Bolletino diocesano." Among the recent local events of interest were the Eucharistic congress in 1913; the confirmation of the cultus of Blessed Pelingotto by the Congregation of Rites on 12 November, 1918; and the reorganization of the Royal Gallery of Art of the Marches, in the Ducal Palace, for which many fine works were recently obtained. Among the distinguished citizens of Urbino in days gone by was Francesco Paciotto (1521-91), the greatest military architect of his age, one of whose notable works is the fortress of Antwerp. Worthy of note also is the new Cathedral, erected in the days of Archbishop Berlioli, from the plans of G. Valladier, the façade being the work of Camillo Morgia of Ravenna.

Urgel, DIOCESE OF (URGELLENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—223b), in the province of Lerida, Spain, is governed by Mgr. Justino Guitart y Vilardebo, b. at Barcelona on 16 December, 1875; was appointed to this see on 9 January, 1920; was consecrated on 23 May following, and on 27 July made his entrance into the valleys of Andorra, of which he is the sovereign prince. He succeeded Mgr., now Cardinal, Benlloch y Vivo, who was transferred to Burgos on 7 January, 1919. The diocesan records for 1921 show 170,000 Catholics; 20 archpriests; 620 priests; 411 parishes and 575 churches and chapels.

Uritana, DIOCESE OF. See ORIA

Ursula of the Blessed Virgin, SOCIETY OF Sr. (cf. C. E. XV-228a).—Since the erection of the generalate in 1898 the superiors general have been: Mother Marie de St. Pierre Hallez (1883-89), who obtained the revision by Rome, according to the new regulations of the Church, of the original constitutions; Mother Marie Stanislas Vigouroux (1889-95); Mother Marie de St. Charles de Caqueroy (1895-1920), under whose superiorship the expulsions from the French convents took place and who succeeded in keeping the members together, opening houses in foreign lands where the work and spirit of the order are still alive; Mother Thérèse du Rosaire Tenneson (1920), who has reopened some of the French houses as a test of the good will of the Government. These are family houses for girls rather than academies, since the nuns can not teach any of the subjects included in the program of education in France. The nuns take care of the children, and lay professors comprise the teaching staff. The revised Code of Canon Law did not necessitate any change in the government or rule of the order, this change having been made under the pontificate of Leo XIII. The period of novitiate is two years, followed by five years of temporary vows. After this time of probation, the members are admitted to perpetual profession. The community in New York has its novitiate and provincial house in the Convent of Our Lady of Lourdes (W. 142d St.), and has acquired two houses nearby for the Academy of Our Lady of Lourdes, which includes a commercial and secretarial course.

Ursulines (cf. C. E., XV—228c).—Under the direct guidance of the Holy See, the Roman Canonical Union has made steady progress since 1912. Many important affiliations have been effected, notably those of the historic foundation at New Orleans, the oldest Ursuline community in the United States, and that of Santa Rosa in California. The original 8 provinces have been increased to 11: the Greco-

Italian, Austria and Jugoslavia, Hungary, East of France, West of France, Belgium, Holland-England, North of the United States, South of the United States, Brazil and Latin-America. The total number of subjects in the Union is 3617. The original number of communities, 63, has been increased to 180 within the past ten years. Of this number there are 33 houses in the Northern Province of the United States, governing 71 establishments of which one is a college at New Rochelle, numbering 300 students. There are also 25 academies or boarding schools, 2 boarding schools for little boys, 35 parochial schools, 6 Indian missions in Montana and 2 Esquimaux missions in Alaska. This province numbers 393 professed religious, and 35 novices. The Southern Province of the United States numbers 341 professed religious and 30 novices. The central novitiates are at Dallas, Texas; Alton, Ill.; and Fishkill, N. Y. The present head of the institute is Rev. Mother Angela de Notre Dame, who was re-elected to this office in September, 1920.

Ursulines of Quebec (cf. C. E., XV—229c).—The monastery at Quebec has had many improvements (such as lighting and heating) in recent years. The monastery comprises 17 buildings, including 4 for servants, mechanics, and workmen. The little chapel of the cloister, where the foundresses prayed for fifty years and where Mgr. de Laval, first Bishop of Quebec, and the Canadian Jesuit martyrs said Mass, was made an oratory of the Sacred Heart on the 250th anniversary of the celebration of the first Mass (1642-1892), to commemorate the establishment of the Confraternity of the Sacred Heart in this sanctuary and the first solemn feast in Canada in 1700. This was during the superiorship of Mother Marie de l'Assomption Georgiana Letourneau, who did much for the monastery during the nine years when she was at the head of the community (1890-96; 1908-11). She died 5 March, 1916, and was succeeded as superior in 1911 by Mother de Sainte Aurélie (Emma Chaperon), who in turn was succeeded in 1917 by the present superior, Mother Saint François de Borgia (Alice Riverin). The constitutions of the community have been sent to Rome for approbation according to the requirements of the canonical Code. There are four foundations of the community and a branch house temporarily opened at Merici in 1902. The community numbers 102 members, with about 500 pupils under instruction, including 65 in the normal school, founded in 1857. In 1912 their institution at Quebec was affiliated with the Laval University and the students may obtain a diploma and degree from the university upon passing the necessary examinations.

Uruguay (cf. C. E., XV—230d), a South American Republic, has an area of 72,153 square miles, and an average of 19.2 people to the square mile. In 1919 the total population was 1,462,887; that of Montevideo City on 30 November, 1920, was 361,950. Of the other cities, Paysandu had 26,000 inhabitants; Salto 30,000; Mercedes 23,000. In 1919 there were 39,307 living births, 1291 still-births, 7532 marriages and 18,904 deaths. The surplus of births over deaths was 20,403.

RELIGION.—State and Church are separated, and there is complete religious liberty. The religion professed by the majority of the inhabitants is Catholic. The Archbishopric of Montevideo (q. v.) has two suffragan bishops, one in Salto (q. v.) and one in Melo (q. v.). The 1908 census showed 430,095 Catholics, 12,232 Protestants, and 45,470 unspecified.

EDUCATION.—Primary education is obligatory. In 1919 there were 995 public schools with 106,905 enrolled pupils and 183 private schools with 19,410 pupils. Evening courses for adults were attended by 5613 pupils (195 illiterates). In 1920 the Montevideo University had 4165 students and 344 teachers. There are also a preparatory school and 22 other establishments for secondary and higher education with 4143 pupils in 1919. There are normal schools for males and for females, and a school of arts and trades supported by the State where 185 pupils receive training gratuitously. At the military college there are 8 professors and 46 pupils. There are also many religious seminaries throughout the Republic with a considerable number of pupils, a university for women, a school for the blind, and one for the deaf and dumb, and a school for domestic science.

ECONOMICS.—For the year 1920-21 the receipts were £8,137,015 and the expenditures were £8,746,614. The estimates of revenue and expenditure for 1920-21 were (4.7 dollars-£1): $38,043,975 revenue and $41,109,088 expenditure.

AGRICULTURE.—In Uruguay the agricultural industries are increasing. The number of people engaged in agriculture in 1913-14 was 92,462; in 1914-15, 98,301 and in 1918-19, 93,187. The principal crops for the year 1919-20 were as follows: wheat 688,407 acres, barley 4610 acres, oats 81,145 acres, linseed 83,645 acres. In 1916 there were within the republic 7,802,442 head of cattle, 567,154 horses, 11,472,852 sheep; 16,663 mules, 12,218 goats, and 303,958 pigs. Wine was produced chiefly in the departments of Montevideo, Canelones, Salto, Colonia, and Paysandu. In 1918 there were 2822 properties (2638 in 1917) of 17,180 acres, producing 41,888,814 kilos of grapes, and 5,628,926 gallons of wine. Tobacco and olives are also cultivated.

MINING.—In the northern departments several gold mines are worked, and silver, copper, lead, magnesium and lignite coal are found. The supply of electricity is used for light, power, and traction in a State monopoly according to the bill passed 20 October, 1912. In 1918 there were 16,017 industrial and commercial establishments with a capital of 134,383,782 pesos.

FOREIGN TRADE.—The foreign trade for 1919 was as follows: imports £8,420,783, exports £27,457,991; and in 1920: imports £9,632,982, and exports £16,150,344.

GOVERNMENT.—The new Constitution of Uruguay, which went into effect on 1 March, 1919, in substitution for the old Constitution of 10 September, 1829, provides for strict separation of powers, election of members of the high court of justice by the General Assembly, and cabinet interpellation. Executive power is divided between two branches, one part is entrusted to a president elected by popular vote, and the other to an administrative commission of nine members, also elected by popular vote for six years. The administrative commission has all administrative power not expressly reserved to the president or some other branch of the Government, especially such power as relates to public instruction, health, labor, industries, public charities, and finance. Minority representation is provided for by plurality voting. The President is not allowed to leave the country longer than forty-eight hours without the consent of the Legislature. Plenary power to interpret the constitution rests with the Legislature. By Act of the Uruguayan Legislature on 5 August, 1920, dueling was again legalized.

Uruguayana, DIOCESE OF (URUGUATENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—233b); in Brazil, suffragan of Porto Alegre. The town of Uruguayana, with 14,800 inhabitants, is 720 miles west of Porto Alegre. The other principal cities included in this diocese are Alegrete with 11,800 inhabitants, San Gabriel with 11,000 inhabitants and Sant' Anna do Livramento with 12,000 inhabitants. The first bishop is Rt. Rev.

Hermeto Joseph Pinheiro, born at Traipu in the diocese of Alagoas in 1870; he studied at Olinda, was ordained in 1905, and appointed bishop 12 May, 1911. The total population of the diocese numbers 250,000. It has 18 first-class and 3 second-class parishes, 3 convents of men, 8 of women, 15 secular and 14 regular clergy, 72 Sisters, 18 seminarians, 30 mixed schools with 1462 pupils, 5 parochial schools for boys with 134 pupils, 4 parochial schools for girls with 150 pupils, 2 secondary schools for boys with 323 pupils, and 6 secondary schools for girls with 861 pupils, and 6 hospitals. A benefit society is formed among the clergy and several associations are organized among the laity. Two Catholic periodicals are published.

Utah (cf. C. E., XV—238a).—The area of the State of Utah is 84,990 square miles, of which 2806 are of water surface. In 1920 the population was 449,446, an increase of 20% since 1910. Of this, 48% was urban; 52% was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 5.5, as against 4.5 in 1910. Part of Wasatch County was organized as Duchesne County in 1915. Daggett County was also organized during the last decade from part of Uintah County and changes were made in the boundaries of Rich and Summit Counties. Besides the civil divisions (429 primary and 137 secondary), the State contains 3 Indian reservations, and part of another. The largest cities are Salt Lake City (118,110), Ogden (32,804), Provo (16,303). There are 441,901 whites, 1446 negroes, 2711 Indians, 342 Chinese, and 2936 Japanese. The foreign-born whites numbered 56,455, and came mostly from England, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Greece, and Italy. Of the total population of ten years of age and over (331,530), there were 6264 illiterates (1.9%). The males outnumbered the females (232,051 males; 217,345 females).

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Agriculture is on the increase in Utah, the number of farms increasing from 21,667 in 1910 to 25,662, in 1920. The area of farm land was 5,050,410 acres, of which 1,715,380 was improved land. Of these farms, 22,218 (86.6%) were irrigated. The new irrigation enterprises include 2,359,244 acres, with an invested capital of about $83,000,000. A large part of the irrigated land lies in the Great Salt Lake drainage basin, the water supply coming principally from streams draining the Wasatch and Uintah Mountains and flowing into Utah Lake and Great Salt Lake.

In 1919 the production and value of the leading crops were: corn 265,361 bushels, valued at $517,456; wheat 4,100,979 bushels, $9,022,154; oats 1,742,392 bushels, $2,069,269; barley 365,186 bushels, $620,814; potatoes 1,648,400 bushels, $3,494,607; hay 1,031,609 bales, $24,759,397. In 1917 the State produced gold valued at $3,355,156; the production of silver amounted to 13,479,133 ounces; the lead production in 1917 was 89,261 short tons, valued at $15,352,888; in the same year the copper production was 246,674,153 pounds, valued at $67,342,044; the zinc product was 10,643 short tons, valued at $2,171,261; the coal production of the State has steadily increased, amounting in 1918 to 5,136,825 tons, valued at $5,405,715. In 1917 about 60,000 tons of salt were produced. The State contained 7,430,084 acres of State forest in 1917. The latest census of manufactures (1919) gives 1160 manufacturing establishments, 23,107 persons engaged, earning a total of $27,135,482 for their services and turning out products worth $156,933,071. The capital invested was $140,785,034. The principal industries ranked by the value of products were: lead smelting, beet sugar, slaughtering and meat packing. There are no navigable streams, but good facilities for transportation. The railway mileage is 2447; the electric railway mileage 448.

The ten savings banks had deposits amounting to $16,648,228 and 61,000 depositors. The State debt in 1920 was $3,435,000; the assessed valuation of property $675,000,000.

EDUCATION.—In 1920 the population of school age numbered 159,339, of whom 116,385 (73%) attended school. School attendance for 20 weeks annually (10 consecutive), and in large cities for 30 weeks (10 consecutive), is compulsory on children from eight to sixteen years of age. In 1918 only six States exceeded Utah in the percentage of population enrolled in public schools, Utah's percentage being 24.3 in comparison with Nevada's 12.7%. In this year the 642 public elementary schools had 3449 teachers and 110,193 enrolled pupils; 43 public high schools with 471 teachers and 10,097 pupils. According to a late report of the United States Bureau of Education, there are just 21 States which expend more per capita of the school population than Utah. The expenditure for educational purposes was $5,536,554; the value of the school property, $12,865,451. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded. The law governing private or parochial schools is as follows: No public appropriation shall be made in support of any school, seminary, academy, college, or university, not controlled by the State (X—13). In 1917 all public school houses were declared to be public centers where citizens could meet and discuss any subjects or questions relating to educational, economic, artistic and other interests of citizens. In 1919 it was voted that upon a majority vote of taxpayers of any voting precinct having a school population of not less than 1200, the county school board can establish a standard high school, but junior and senior years may not be established until the need is determined by the State Board of Education. Such a school may not be established within twelve miles of an existing high school. Returned soldiers and sailors were given instruction in the Agricultural College and University without charge of entrance fees.

RELIGION.—The Mormons are still the most numerous of all religious denominations, having in 1916, 257,719 members out of all the church members in the State. The Catholics at that time numbered 10,000. The value of the Mormon church property was then $4,313,908. Divorce seems to be on the increase in the State as is seen in the following statistics: 225 divorces in 1896; 387 in 1906; 661 in 1916. For further religious and educational statistics, see SALT LAKE CITY, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—In 1911 laws were passed to prevent the employment of children under fourteen in such establishments as breweries and mines; restrictions were also placed on the employment of women. The selling or giving away of tobacco in any form to minors was forbidden. Provision was made for the employment of convict labor for the construction of roads. In 1913 the indeterminate sentence was granted to persons convicted of crime, and a measure provided for mothers' pensions. A general prohibition law was passed in 1917 and strengthened by amendments forbidding the introduction of liquor into the State. In the same year an industrial board was created and put in charge of the Workmen's Compensation law, also passed by the same legislature. In 1915 a threatened uprising among the Piute Indians was averted by the prompt action of the United States government in sending General Hugh L. Scott, chief of staff, to adjust the difficulty.

The Federal prohibition amendment was ratified on 15 January, 1919, the suffrage amendment, 30 September, 1919. There are now 64 members in the State Legislature, 18 in the Senate and 46 in the House.

During the European War, Utah contributed 17,362 soldiers (.46% of the United States Army). The members of the national guard joined the 40th Division at Camp Kearny, California; those of the national army, the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Washington. The summary of the casualties of Utah men in the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 7 officers, 295 men; prisoners, 7 men; wounded, 17 officers, 680 men.

UTRECHT, ARCHDIOCESE OF (ULTRAJECTENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—245d), situated in the Netherlands. The see is filled by Most Rev. Henri Van der Wetering, born in Hoogland, in this diocese, in 1850, ordained in 1874, appointed titular Bishop of Gaza and coadjutor to the archbishop 8 February, 1895, succeeding to the see on 25 July following. On 1 May, 1900, he was made an assistant at the pontifical throne, and on 26 August, 1920, he was named a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Order of Orange-Nassau. The most important developments in the archdiocese recently have been the erection of new parishes, and its division into 22 deaconates. During the World War the clergy and laity carried on many charitable works among the fugitives who came here from the warring countries, and also gave assistance to sick and wounded Germans and Austrians, who, in many cases were received by Dutch families. The archdiocese comprises 318 parishes, 420 churches, 1 monastery for men and 3 for women, 10 convents of women with 33 Sisters, 600 secular and 250 regular clergy, 299 lay brothers, 6 major and 2 minor seminaries, having 79 professors and 266 seminarians, 2 universities, Utrecht and Groningen, where there is a certain proportion of Catholics among both professors and students, 5 colleges for boys with 55 teachers and 655 students, 11 colleges for girls with 86 teachers and 1765 students, 2 high schools with 18 teachers and 81 pupils, 5 normal schools with 94 teachers and 275 pupils, 3 disciplinarian schools with 9 teachers and 204 pupils, a number of academies, 278 elementary schools with 1587 teachers and 49,520 pupils and 11 industrial schools with 40 teachers and 576 pupils. The elementary and normal schools are salaried by the government and their buildings are supported by the municipal authorities; all other schools are partly supported by the government. The various charitable institutions include: 2 diocesan missionary organizations, 25 homes for the aged and destitute, 40 nursing homes, 5 hospitals, 20 orphanages, 10 refuges, 5 day nurseries, 150 charitable centers. Four associations are formed among the clergy, 10 among the laity, and 50 Catholic periodicals are published. In recent years the archdiocese has lost three prominent clergy by the deaths of Mgr. Theodore Roes, canon capitular and dean, Mgr. Andreas Jansen, and Mgr. Brouwer, vicar general.

V

VACZ, DIOCESE OF (WAITZEN; VACIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV, 525), in Hungary, suffragan of Eastergom (Gran), was founded by King Stephen in the year 1001. The name of the first bishop is unknown but Clement II or III held the see in 1055. The cathedral chapter, which was suppressed when the Turks conquered Vacz, in 1542, was revived in 1700. The present bishop, Msgr. Stephen Arpad Hanauer, succeeded Msgr. Count Charles Emmanuel Csaky, who held office from 1900 until his death on 16 February, 1919. Msgr. Hanauer is the first bishop in Hungary who has been nominated directly by the Holy See without the intervention of the civil authorities. He was born at Papa, in the Diocese of Veszprem, on 26 December, 1866, ordained on 26 July, 1892, being subsequently spiritual director of the Seminary of Budapest, and chancellor of the See of Veszprem. As Bishop of Vacz he has the privilege of the pallium. He has as his coadjutor Msgr. Charles Gossman, b. on 1 January, 1870, at Soroksar, in the Diocese of Vacz, ordained in 1894, and consecrated titular Bishop of Castoria and auxiliary of Vacz on 5 October, 1913.

The late bishop Count Csaky displayed great energy in the government of his diocese. He erected 15 new parishes and founded a diocesan Altar Society which provides the churches with altar linens and equipment almost gratis. His life was characterized by his devotion to the Blessed Sacrament and his benefactions to the poor and at his death he left everything to the Church.

The boundaries of the diocese have not been changed in the recent upheaval, but it has been divided by the diocesan synod of 1921 into 5 archdeaneries, and 25 vicariates or deaneries. There are 149 parishes, 14 missions; 187 churches; 7 religious houses for men, 17 for Sisters; 349 priests, of whom 300 are seculars and 49 regulars; 15 Brothers; 1 seminary, 5 professors, 76 students; 1 boys' college, 3 girls' colleges, 6 high schools, 60 teachers, 960 pupils, of whom 360 are girls; 1 boys' academy, 7 teachers, 34 pupils; many secondary and primary schools with 757 teachers and 72,560 pupils; 1 home for the aged; 5 orphanages; 2 day nurseries; 3 hospitals. The Catholic population is 920,000.

The principal events of importance in the diocese since 1912 have been the erection of 15 new churches and the ordination of 54 priests. At the beginning of November, 1918, a great revolution broke out in Hungary and on 16 November the Socialists proclaimed a Hungarian Republic, which on 20 March, 1919, turned into a Bolshevik state; on 1 August, 1919, the Socialist republic was restored, and three days later the more conservative element of the citizens got control. Subsequently the governing body has declared that Hungary is by law a limited monarchy, but owing to political conditions the sovereign has not yet been able to assume power. During the European War the faithful founded a number of hospitals and established many charitable centres. Following the example of Mgr. Count Peter Vay, prothonotary Apostolic, the Catholics throughout Hungary combined to erect at Gyor an orphanage for the children of soldiers who lost their lives in defense of their country. At present it is supporting 100 of their orphans.

Valleyfield, DIOCESE OF (CAMPIVALLENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—261a), in Canada, suffragan of Montreal. The present bishop is Rt. Rev. Joseph Médard Emard, who has administered the diocese since 1892. On 23 May, 1917, he was made assistant at the pontifical throne and 1 August, 1918, he was appointed Bishop Ordinary of the Canadian Army. He took an active part in the Eucharistic Congresses of London, Montreal and Malta. The Chapter of the Cathedral of Valleyfield was erected by a Pontifical Bull of 12 December, 1919. In 1921 the diocese contained 57,045 Catholics of Canadian and Irish nationality, 41 parishes, 43 churches, 7 missions, 1 monastery for men (Clerics of St. Viator), 1 for women (Poor Clares), 96 secular priests, 12 regulars, 30 Brothers, 280 Sisters, 1 seminary with 15 seminarians. The educational institutions are 2 colleges for boys (70 teachers, 700 students), 20 convent schools for girls (280 teachers, all Sisters), 5 academies (17 teachers), 1 normal school (10 professors, 90 students), 215 elementary schools (300 teachers), 1 industrial school (2 teachers, 35 inmates). The following charitable institutions exist in the diocese: 3 orphanages and homes for the aged, 1 hospital.

Vallombrosan Order (cf. C. E., XV—262b).—This order is an ancient Benedictine Congregation with the mother-house at Vallombrosa near Florence, Italy. The 8 monasteries for men are S. Maria at Vallambrosa, S. Trinità at Florence, S. Michele at Fassignano, S. Maria di Montenero at Leghorn, S. Giuseppe di Pescia at Lucca, La Badia Fiorentina at Florence, S. Prassede at Rome, and S. Maria de Galloro at Rome. The monasteries for women are Spirito Santo a Varlungo at Florence, S. Girolamo a S. Gimignano at Siena and S. Umilta di Faenza to which is attached a boarding place for Florentine ladies. The complete number of persons in the order is 173. After the promulgation of the Code of Canon Law, the order published its new constitution, which was approved by Pope Benedict XV, 28 May, 1921. The present abbot general of the order is Dom Fedele Tarani, elected in May, 1920. The order publishes a monthly periodical "Il Faggio Vallombrosano."

Valva and Sulmona, DIOCESE OF (VALVENSIS et SULMONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—264c), in Italy, directly under the jurisdiction of the Holy See. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Nicola Iezsoni, b. 1 May, 1860, elected 6 December, 1906. According to the statistics of 1920 the diocese contained 150,000 Catholics, 58 parishes, 244 churches and chapels, 142 secular priests, 48 regulars, 50 seminarians, 20 Brothers and 30 Sisters. In February, 1913, occurred the death of the celebrated archaeologist and writer, Rev. Giuseppe Celidonio. During the war many of the priests of the diocese enlisted in the army.

Vannes, DIOCESE OF (VENETENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—271b), in France, suffragan of Rennes. The bishop, Rt. Rev. Alcime-Armand Gouraud, b. at Vieilleveigne, France, 13 April, 1856, ordained 29 June, 1880, elected 21 February, 1906, consecrated 25 February following. In 1921 the diocese numbered 500,000 French Catholics, 285 parishes, 300 churches, 2 monasteries for men, 3 for women, 2 abbeys for men, 2 for women, 220 convents for women with more than 3000 Sisters, 888 secular and 130 regular priests, 5 seminaries with 400 seminarians including some students at the preparatory seminary. The educational institutions are: 3 high schools for boys (100 teachers and 1200 pupils) 3 for girls, 1 normal school (6 teachers 40 students), 3 training schools, (100 teachers and 42,600 pupils). The schools are not supported by the government. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 1 house of retreats, 35 asylums, 12 hospitals, 6 day nurseries. Four Catholic periodicals are published in the diocese. Numerous organizations and societies exist among the clergy and laity. During the war many priests joined the army, ten of whom received the medal of the Legion of Honor.

Vannutelli, SERAFINO, Cardinal, Bishop of Ostia and Porto, Dean of the Sacred College, b. at Genazzano, Italy, 26 November, 1834; d. at Rome, 19 August, 1915. He belonged to a noble family most conspicuous at Genazzano in the Diocese of Palestrina. He studied at the Capranica, and was ordained priest at Rome on 23 December, 1860, by Cardinal Patrizi; he taught canon law at the Roman Seminary and theology at the Seminary of the Vatican. He was auditor at the Pontifical Nunciature in Mexico and Munich, and subsequently was delegate Apostolic to Ecuador, Colombia, Peru and Central America. He became archbishop of Nicea in 1869 at the age of thirty-five. In 1865, he was papal nuncio at Brussels and remained there until the break with the Vatican in 1879. He then went to Vienna in the same capacity in spite of the apparent failure at Brussels, and remained there seven years. In 1887 was raised to the cardinalate and in 1893 was named Archbishop of Bologna, but by a system of rotation elected to be Bishop of Frascati, afterwards becoming Secretary of Briefs and Prefect of the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars and in spite of his advanced age Grand Penitentiary in 1899. When he offered his resignation, as he was suffering from cataract, Pope Leo XIII refused to accept it. Again the system of official option brought him from the See of Frascati to that of Porto. Notwithstanding the honors lavished on him, he was remarkable for his great modesty; his unflinching toil in every one of the posts to which he was assigned and his tender piety. He was one of the great figures of the Sacred College.

Vedruna de Mas, JOAQUINA DE, religious foundress, b. at Santa María del Pino, Spain, 16 April, 1783; d. at Barcelona on 28 August, 1854; daughter of Lawrence and Teresa (Vidal) de Vedruna. At an early age she desired to enter the Carmelites, but by the advice of her parents and her confessor, she remained in the world, marrying Teodoro de Mas. Their union was blessed with many children; two of their daughters became nuns. Her husband died in 1816, and Joaquina devoted herself to the education and training of her children, and to the care of the sick in a nearby hospital. Her old desire of consecrating herself to God grew strong again and on 6 January, 1826, when her children no longer required her attention, she made the three vows of religion with her bishop's approval. Some weeks later she founded the congregation of the Carmelite Sisters of Charity, whose mission was to protect poor girls, provide for those who had not a sufficient dowry to enter religion, and to nurse the sick poor. During the Spanish civil war, she and her companions were forced to take refuge at Perpignan in France; they returned subsequently and the congregation developed rapidly. It was confirmed by the Holy See in 1890, and today it counts over 200 houses with more than 1700 sisters. In 1881, the remains of the holy foundress were translated from Barcelona to Vich, where they were interred in the chapel of St. Raphael in the garden of the mother-house of the institute. The renown of her sanctity as a maiden, as a mother, and as a religious has continued to grow and on 14 January, 1920, the cause of her canonization was introduced at Rome.

Veglia, DIOCESE OF. See KRK

Venosa, DIOCESE OF (VENUSINENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—342d), in Southern Italy, suffragan of Acerenza. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Angelo Petrelli, b. at Arnesano, Italy, 13 June, 1863, elected 20 May, 1913, consecrated 24 August, following, published 25 May, 1914. In 1921 the diocese contained: 40 secular priests, 5 regulars, 1 convent for men, 26 sisters, 1 seminary with 20 seminarians. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 2 homes for destitute children, 4 industrial schools for girls, 2 hospitals. Many priests served in the army during the War, two as chaplains, one of whom was formally praised for his services by the Chaplain-in-Chief. One priest who was an officer was killed fighting.

Ventimiglia, DIOCESE OF (VENTIMILIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—343a), in Northern Italy, suffragan of Genoa. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Ambrogio Daffra, b. at Canneto, Italy, 11 January, 1841, ordained 7 December, 1864, elected 11 July, 1892, made assistant to the pontifical throne, 27 February, 1904. In 1921 the diocese contained 104,000 inhabitants, 75 parishes, 210 secular and regular priests, 12 houses of various religious orders for men, 60 convents for women, 4 educational institutions for boys, 15 for girls. Eleven religious periodicals are published in the diocese.

Vera Cruz, DIOCESE OF (VERE CRUCIS OF JALAPENSIS; cf. C. E., VI—344d), in the Mexican Republic, suffragan of the Archbishopric of Mexico. The present incumbent is the Rt. Rev. Raphael Guizar Valencia, b. at Zamora, Spain, elected 1 August, 1919. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Joachim Arcade Pagaza, who died in August, 1919. In 1821 the diocese contained 62 parishes, 320 churches, 3 convents for women with 47 sisters, 95 secular priests, 1 seminary and 27 seminarians. The educational institutions are: 8 colleges for men (29 teachers, 800 students), 7 colleges for women (2000 students), 2 normal schools and 4 training schools.

Verapoly, ARCHDIOCESE OF (VERAPOLITANA; cf. C. E., XV—345b), on the Malabar coast, India, includes now only Christians of the Latin Rite. These latter form a Catholic population of 98,467 having 50 parishes, 68 churches and chapels, 18 missions, 18 stations, 1 monastery for men, 2 convents for men, 11 regular priests and 5 novices, 37 secular priests, 9 lay brothers, 33 Carmelite nuns and 9 novices in 5 convents, 2 native Brothers of St. Teresa and 24 catechists, 2 seminaries (upper and lower), 2 high schools with 62 teachers and an attendance of 1130 boys and 447 girls, 115 elementary schools with an attendance of 6359 boys and 4336 girls, 5 convent schools with 1072 girls, 4 orphanages with 10 boys and 156 girls, 1 hospital with 139 in-patients and 13,001 out-patients. All schools receive government aid except the seminaries. The Priests' Mutual Help Association exists among the clergy, and among the laity there are reading-rooms, literary associations, and the Catholic Association of the Archdiocese of Verapoly. Several Catholic periodicals are published.

The archdiocese is confided to the Discalced Carmelites. The present administrator is the Most Rev. Angel María Pérez y Cecilia, O. C. D., at Burgos, Spain, 10 February, 1872, ordained 10 June, 1895, elected titular Archbishop of Aelrida and coadjutor of Verapoly 18 June, 1915, consecrated 28 October following. He succeeded Rt. Rev. Bernard Arguinzonis, who resigned. In 1920 there were 824 conversions.

Verdun, DIOCESE OF (VIRODUNENSIS), in France, suffragan of Besançon. From September, 1914; to November, 1918, more than 200 parishes were occupied by the enemy and communication with the bishop of Verdun was practically cut off. The Holy See confided the administration to the bishop of Namur. At the beginning of the battle of Verdun the bishop and the diocesan administration left the episcopal city which was being bombarded and burned by the Germans and took refuge at Bar-le-Duc in the southern part of the diocese. They did not return to Verdun until 1921. The seminary was successively moved to Nancy, to Paris and then to Bar-le-Duc, and has not yet been re-established at Verdun. The preparatory seminary, established at Bar-le-Duc was burned in 1917. During the war about 186 priests joined the army; of these 13 were killed, 20 more or less seriously wounded, and 50 prisoners in Germany. One hundred and sixty citations and diplomas of honor and 120 decorations were awarded to the priests of the diocese. Owing to the war the number of priests in the diocese has decreased from 550 in 1914 to 443 in 1921 and the population which, with the exception of a small number of Protestants and Jews, is entirely Catholic, has decreased from 242,557 inhabitants in 1911 to 190,001 in 1921. Out of 572 churches, 253 remained intact, 153 were destroyed and 166 were damaged. Only a small portion of the much damaged cathedral has been restored. Nineteen of the 28 deaneries have been destroyed, 131 of the rectories have been completely ruined and 86 are capable of repair. The war also destroyed several boarding schools and 3 hospitals. It hastened the dispersion of the religious communities, only one of which still remains in Verdun. According to the statistics of 1921 the diocese contains: 30 first class parishes, 444 succursal parishes, 74 parochial chapels, 443 secular priests, 2 seminaries, 83 seminarians, 1 college for boys (15 teachers, 145 students), 8 elementary schools for boys, 1 agricultural school (2 teachers, 20 pupils), 7 boarding schools and schools for girls, 13 hospitals in charge of sisters, 3 houses of nursing sisters and 1 orphanage. The following public institutions admit the ministry of priests: 1 lyceum, 2 colleges, 1 lunatic asylum and 4 prisons. Two periodicals, several parochial bulletins and pious pamphlets are published in the diocese. Organizations among the priests are: Associations des Prêtres Adorateurs, Aid Association for aged and infirm priests, Association for the Defense of the Clergy, Association of prayer for living and deceased priests. Numerous religious and social organizations exist among the laity.

Verena, SAINT, virgin of the third and fourth centuries, left by her parents at their death, in the care of the Theban bishop, Chæremôn. Upon his martyrdom, she accompanied her kinsman, Victor, of the Theban Legion, to Milan, where she lived in the home of one Maximus and attended the persecuted and imprisoned Christians. On learning of the martyrdom of Victor at Agaunum with Saint Maurice and the whole Theban Legion about A.D. 286, Verena set out to pray at his grave on the Rhone, and finally settled in solitary residence among the Alemanni to the north, near what is now the city of Solothurn in Switzerland, doing good and instructing the heathen women of the mountains in the Christian Faith. The Roman governor imprisoned her because of her refusal to sacrifice to the gods, but on being taken sick and learning that Verena prayed for his recovery, he released her. The Roman Martyrology gives her feast on 1 September and she is especially venerated in the territory of the ancient Diocese of Constance, which included the whole Alemanni people, and for centuries was the largest and most important Diocese of Germany. An ancient tiny mountain chapel covers the rugged spot where Verena lived. In recent years, interest in St. Verena has developed in America on account of the increasing use of her name for girls, especially in the Middle West, and because of the more frequent use of the name in religious orders of women.

VINCENT HENRY HUCK.

Vermont (cf. C. E., XV—354b).—The area of the State of Vermont is 9564 square miles. In 1920 the total population was 352,428, a decrease of 1 per cent, since 1910. Of this, 31.2% was urban; 68.8 was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 38.6, as against 39 in 1910. Vermont has seven cities only three of which exceed 10,000, Burlington 22,779; Rutland 14,954; Barre 10,008. Of the whites in Vermont, the natives numbered 307,291, of whom 228,326 were of native parentage, 42,100 of foreign parentage, 36,866 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born whites (44,526) came chiefly from Canada (French 14,181; others 10,687); Italy 4067; Ireland 2884; England 2197. There are 572 negroes. The population of ten years of age and over included 8488 illiterates (3%).

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Manufacturing.—The summary of manufactures issued by the United States Census Bureau for 1919 reveals 1790 establishments, employing 38,845 persons, earning a total wage of $41,429,114, and turning out products worth $168,108,072. The capital invested was $134,314,391. The principal industries ranked by the value of their products were marble and stone work, woolen and worsted goods, paper and wood pulp, butter, machine tools, lumber and timber products.

AGRICULTURE.—In 1919 the value of the agricultural output of the State, comprising corn, wheat, rye, oats, buckwheat, potatoes, and tobacco, aggregated $47,999,600, an increase of 102% since 1909. Vermont leads all the other States of the Union in the number of pounds of butter per capita, pounds of butter per farm, pounds of butter per cow, and in ratio of dairy cows to population. In 1920 Vermont had 435,480 cattle on farms, or nearly one third of all the cattle in New England. The value of the live stock was $42,385,331; of the dairy products, $27,207,813. The State had in the same year 29,075 farms (a decrease of 3634 since 1910), valued at $222,736,620. The marble quarries yield half of the marble produced in the United States. Tale and granite are also mined. The railway mileage in 1919 was 1080; the electric railways in the State covered a total of 102 miles. In 1920 the assessed value of real property was $187,364,577, of personal property, $74,736,570. One of the most important industrial developments of 1911 was the building of a railroad to the asbestos region in the northern part of the State, which contains one of the most extensive asbestos deposits in the United States. At the same time, there was a movement for the development of an international water route by the construction of canals between Lake Champlain and the Hudson River on one hand, and the St. Lawrence River on the other, surveys being taken for the deepening of the shallows in the north end of Lake Champlain.

RELIGION.—The latest United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916) gives the following statistics: Congregationalists 22,912 members, 212 churches, 144 ministers; Baptists 9797 members, 112 churches, 88 ministers; Episcopalians 600 members, 64 churches, 36 ministers; Free Baptists 213 members, 6 churches; Adventists 1439 members, 9 churches, 21 ministers. For Catholic statistics see BURLINGTON, DIOCESE OF.

EDUCATION.—In 1920 the population of school age numbered 100,842, of whom 67,746 (67.2 per cent.) attended school. There were 16 academies with a total attendance of 1771 students and 78 high schools, which in 1918 had 9237 students, 2403 public schools with 2975 teachers. In 1920 Middlebury College had 33 professors and instructors and 447 students; Norwich University, 29 instructors and 250 students; St. Michael's College, 14 professors and 137 students; the State Agricultural College (est. 1911) 105 students (1918). In 1918 the University of Vermont had 599 students, 50 on the collegiate department teaching staff, 43 in the professional department, 64 in the engineering department. In 1920 it had 118 instructors and 930 enrolled students. There are 21 Catholic parochial schools with 229 teachers and 7743 pupils. The summary of school expenditures given by the United States Bureau of Education for 1917-18 is as follows: teachers' salaries, $1,390,647; total current expenses, $2,365,097; expended for outlays, state, $171,682; city, $411,680. The value of the school property in the same year is given as $5,123,186. State supervision of education is exercised through a Commissioner elected by the Board of Education. In 1919 a teachers' retirement system was established. Bible reading in the public schools is neither permitted nor excluded.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1911 the office of Commissioner of Weights and Measures was created; provision was also made for the punishment of murder in the first degree, giving the jury the right to fix the penalty either at death or imprisonment for life. Child labor was regulated, and the prevention of the white slave traffic provided for. In 1913 a Board of Conciliation and Arbitration for the adjustment of local disputes was created. Electrocution was substituted for hanging as a form of capital punishment. In the same year the State constitution was amended as follows: Every Bill passed by the Vermont Legislature must be submitted to the governor for his approval. In case of its veto, if two-thirds of each house approve of it again, it becomes law. No person was to be declared guilty of felony or treason by the legislature. No charter of incorporation shall be granted by special law except for municipal, charitable, educational, penal or reformatory corporations, but the General Assembly must provide general laws for the organization of corporations. The time of meeting of the General Assembly is changed from October to January; the time of their election from September to November. In 1915 an Act was passed providing for eugenic marriages. A workmen's compensation law was also passed. The establishment of county tuberculosis hospitals has been authorized. There was an attempt in 1917 to nullify the effects of the local option liquor law passed in 1903, but the people rejected the Prohibition Act submitted to them and the local option law stood. The Federal prohibition amendment was ratified on 29 January, 1919. In the same year provision was made for the commitment of women between the ages of 21 and 45 to the State School of Feeble-Minded, and the commitment of dependent children to the Vermont Industrial School was prohibited.

When trouble with Mexico broke out in 1916, the First Regiment of the Vermont National Guard immediately mobilized and was one of the first to reach the border. It was officially reported as "the best National Guard Regiment in equipment and general efficiency" on the border. In 1917 the same regiment, though with a somewhat changed personnel, was drafted into Federal service, and thereby ceased to be the National Guard. At this time the regiment mustered 55 officers and over 2000 men and soon became the 157th Pioneer Infantry in the famous 26th or "Yankee" Division. The regiment won the highest commendation for its fighting qualities and general morale. Other Vermonters were also on active duty abroad with the United States, English, and French regiments. The summary of casualties among the Vermont members of the Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 13 officers, 287 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 21 men; wounded, 17 officers, 690 men.

Viaticum (cf. C. E., XV—397b).—If a person has received Holy Communion and later, on the same day, falls into danger of death he is to be urged strongly to receive the Holy Eucharist again, as Viaticum; it is both lawful and fitting for him while he remains in danger of death to receive the Holy Viaticum several times on different days with his confessor's approval. It should be given to the faithful according to their own Rite, but in case of necessity any Rite is permissible.

Viatorians. See SAINT VIATOR, CLERICS OF

Vicar (cf. C. E., XV—401a).—There are five classes of parochial vicars or priests who act for a parish priest in the cure of souls, namely, the perpetual vicar, the vicar oeconomicus, the vicar substitute, the vicar assistant and the vicar co-operator. When a parish has been fully (pleno jure) united to a religious house, a capitular church or other moral person, a perpetual vicar should be appointed for the actual cure of souls, and should receive suitable compensation. Except when there is a legitimate privilege or custom to the contrary, he should be presented by the religious superior, the chapter, or the moral person as the case calls for, and be instituted by the local ordinary if found fitted by him. Whether he is a secular or religious his rights and duties while holding office are the same as those of a parish priest, and he can be removed only under like conditions.

As soon as a parish becomes vacant, a vicar oeconomicus should be appointed by the local ordinary with a suitable salary. Before his appointment, the government of the parish, if no other provision has been made, is to be taken over by the vicar co-operator, or if there are several, by the one who has held office longest; if there is no vicar, one of the neighboring parish priests takes charge, the ordinary having decided beforehand which of them should do so; if the parish is under the care of a religious, his local superior should act. Those who are thus empowered to take charge must notify the local ordinary as soon as the vacancy occurs. A vicar oeconomicus has the same rights and duties as a parish priest in the cure of souls, but he may not act to the detriment of the rights of the parish priest or of the parochial benefice. On the termination of his office an oeconomicus must, in presence of the vicar-forane or other priest named by the ordinary, hand over to the new parish priest or to a succeeding oeconomicus the key of the archives and an inventory of the books, documents and other things belonging to the parish, and must give an accounting of the receipts and expenses during his administration.

A vicar substitute is to be appointed by a parish priest with the consent of the local ordinary or, if necessary, of the religious superior, when the parish priest is to be away from his parish for more than a week, or by the ordinary or superior, in case the parish priest is appealing to the Holy See against being deprived of his benefice. He has all the rights and duties of a parish priest in the cure of souls, unless the local ordinary or the parish priest has curtailed them. A vicar substitute elected in case of urgent necessity without the ordinary's approbation can validly and licitly assist at marriages (Now. Revue théol. 1921, p. 200).

A vicar assistant is to be given by the local ordinary to a parish priest who through old age, lack of skill, blindness, or other permanent cause, is unable to fulfil his duties properly. He should be granted a suitable salary. If he fills the parish priest's place in everything, he has all his rights and duties, save the obligation of applying Mass for the people; otherwise his rights and duties are as laid down in his letter of appointment. If the parish priest is mentally competent, the assistant is to work under his directions in accordance with the instructions contained in the ordinary's letter.

Vicar co-operators are usually known in English-speaking countries as curates (q. v.). Vicars oeconomicus, substitute, or assistant can be removed at will by the bishop, or vicar capitular, but not by the vicar general without special authorization. If they are religious they may be similarly removed but notice should be given to their superior, who is also empowered to remove them.

Vicar Apostolic. See PREFECT APOSTOLIC

Vicar Capitular, (cf. C. E., XV—401d).—When an episcopal vacancy occurs, only one vicar capitular can be chosen by the chapter, otherwise the election would be invalid, any custom to the contrary being reprobated; this had long been a disputed point among canonists. The candidate must be chosen by an absolute majority of the valid votes cast; he must be a priest, at least thirty years old, and must not have been elected, nominated or presented to the vacant see, otherwise his selection would be invalid, and the metropolitan, or, if he is dead, the senior suffragan bishop on learning the facts would have to appoint the vicar for that occasion. His election requires no confirmation; he obtains ordinary episcopal jurisdiction in spiritual and temporal matters from the moment he makes his profession of faith, and is bound by the law of residence. He must apply Mass for the people, like a bishop; and receives a salary the amount of which is fixed by a provincial council or custom. If he is a bishop he enjoys the honorary privileges of a titular bishop, otherwise he has only those of a titular apostolic prothonotary. If he is elected or nominated to the bishopric he can retain his office until he takes canonical possession of his see as bishop.

VERMEERSCH-CREUSEN, Epit. jur. can., 383-391.

Vicar General (cf. C. E., XV—402c).—A vicar general must be a secular priest less than thirty years old; formerly the minimum age was twenty-five; neither is it requisite that he should be of legitimate birth. If a diocese is confided to the care of regulars, the vicar general may be selected from among the members of the same order. A vicar general may be appointed by a residential bishop or an abbot or prelate nullius, but not by a vicar or prefect apostolic. The latter, however, in virtue of a concession of Benedict XV (6 Nov., 1919) may, if it is necessary, appoint vicars delegate, who have practically the same powers and duties as a vicar general (Acta Apos. Sedis, 1920, p. 120). The office of vicar general is not to be conferred on the canon penitentiary or a relative of the bishop, especially in the first degree or the second combined with the first, or except in case of necessity, on a parish priest or other cleric having the cure of souls. Vicars general now rank as local ordinaries; they possess ordinary episcopal jurisdiction throughout the diocese in virtue of their office, except in matters which the bishop has reserved to himself or for which the law requires a special episcopal mandate.

Under the Code this mandate is needed to excommunicate or incardinate clerics, provide for ecclesiastical offices, convoke diocesan synods, nominate or institute parish priests, remove parochial vicars, erect pious associations, reserve sins, grant dismissorial letters, authorize marriages of conscience, consecrate places, authorize the erection of a church, declare relics authentic or permit the sale of sacred relics when the proof of their authenticity has perished, fix the honorarium to be paid to poor churches by those celebrating Mass there, erect, unite or collate benefices, grant canonical institution or authorize a change of benefice, inflict ecclesiastical penalties or remit a penalty imposed by a vicar general as judge, or absolve excommunicated apostates, heretics, or schismatics, after their offence has been brought to the external forum of the local ordinary. Authorities differ as to the nature of the power a vicar general receives with a special mandate; Stuts and Maroto call it ordinary; Nicolas considers it delegated; Vermeersch-Creusen consider it ordinary when the mandate is granted in collating the vicarship or in the general formula of institution, but delegated when granted separately. Kinane says the power is not merely delegated, but is of the same nature as that acquired by the general mandate, and consequently follows the same rules in regard to delegation.

A vicar general has the right of precedence, both in public and private, over all the other diocesan clergy, not excluding the cathedral dignitaries and canons, even in choir and in capitular sessions, unless where a cleric has received episcopal consecration and the vicar general has not; the vicar during his term of office has a right to the privileges and insignia of a titular prothonotary apostolic, and, if he is a bishop, to the honorary privileges of a titular bishop.

Vich, DIOCESE OF (VICENSIS, AUSONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—406d), in Spain, suffragan of Tarragona. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Francisco Muñoz y Izquierdo, b. at Burjasot, 28 April, 1868, ordained in 1862, elected 5 May, 1916, consecrated 15 Oct., published 4 Dec. following. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. José Torras y Bagès who died 7 Feb., 1916. A congress of the Marian Congregations of Cataluña and the Balearic Islands was held at Vich, 1 May, 1921. The following distinguished clergymen have died since 1912: Rt. Rev. José Torras y Bagès, Bishop of Vich, a learned and cultured scholar who was honored by Pius X and Benedict XV, died 7 Feb., 1916; Very Rev. Juan Collé y Cuatrecasas, founder of the Congregation of the Little Servants of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, died Oct., 1921. In 1921 the diocese contained: 280 parishes, 580 churches, 21 convents for men, 97 for women with 573 Sisters, 823 secular priests, 151 regulars, 1 seminary with 370 seminarians. The educational institutions are: 200 schools for boys (220 teachers); 250 schools for girls (270 teachers); 4 high schools (18 teachers); 1 training school (6 teachers, 25 students). There are also in the diocese 6 asylums, 10 hospitals, 4 settlement houses. Numerous periodicals are published in the diocese.

Victoria, DIOCESE OF (VICTORIENSIS IN INS. VANCOUVER; cf. C. E., XV—412c), in British Columbia. The present administrator is the Rt.

Rev. Alexander MacDonald, b. at Malbou, Canada, 18 February, 1858, ordained 8 March, 1884, elected 1 October, 1908, consecrated 3 January, 1909. In 1921 the diocese contained 12 parishes, 27 churches, 21 stations, 4 convents for men, 8 for women with 109 sisters, 13 secular priests, 9 regulars, 2 seminarians, 2 industrial schools, 2 hospitals. One Catholic periodical is published in the diocese.

Victoria Nyanza, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XV—413), in Africa. In 1911 Kwanda was separated from the vicariate of Southern Nyanza and in August, 1915, its name was changed to Victoria Nyanza. The present vicar is Rt. Rev. Joseph Sweeny of the White Fathers, who succeeded Rt. Rev. John Joseph Hirth 12 December, 1912. In July, 1921 the vicariate apostolic contained 19,000 Catholics, 27,000 catechumens, 25 churches, 14 stations, 4 convents for women with 23 Sisters, 6 native secular priests, 36 regulars, 6 Brothers, 2 seminaries, 85 seminarians, 270 elementary schools (300 teachers, 18,000 pupils), 14 industrial schools (14 teachers, 80 inmates) and 14 hospitals. Owing to the hardships of the climate the following zealous missionaries have died since 1914: Revs. Joseph Fimbel, Leon Ulrich, Herman Tongerius; also, Sisters Ludwina, Roberta, and G. van der Sanden.

Victoria Nyanza, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. See UGANDA

Vienna, ARCHDIOCESE OF (VINDOBON; cf. C. E., XV—409b), in Austria. The present administrator is His Eminence Cardinal Frederick Gustave Piffi. He was b. at Königsgratz, 15 October, 1864, entered the Order of the Canons Regular of St. Augustine, elected Archbishop of Vienna, 2 May, 1913, consecrated 1 June, created cardinal priest 25 May, 1914. In 1921 the archdiocese contained 2,596,212 Catholics, all German except a small number of Czechoslovakians, 533 parishes, 1089 churches, 68 monasteries for men, 266 convents for women, 3 abbeys for men, 982 secular and 700 regular priests, 4 seminaries, 1 university, 11 professors, 137 students, 1 college for men with 8 teachers and 220 students; a large number of secondary schools, academies, normal and industrial schools and charitable institutions exist throughout the archdiocese. The schools and institutions receive some support from the government. The following distinguished clergymen have died since 1912: His Eminence Francis Cardinal Nagl (q. v.), Very Rev. Hermanns Tschokke, professor of Biblical Studies at the University of Vienna, and for twenty years a staunch defender of the ecclesiastical matters under the Austrian Monarchy. During the war 33 priests joined the army and many others cared for the spiritual needs of the soldiers in the hospitals. Both clergy and laity contributed generously to the war loans.

Vigouroux, FULCRIN, Biblical scholar, b. at Nant-d'Aveyron in the Diocese of Rodez, France, on 13 February, 1837; d. at Saint Sulpice, Issy, on 21 February, 1915. Probably no one in the last half of the nineteenth century did more to spread a true and scientific knowledge of the Holy Scripture than Fulcran Vigouroux. He studied at Rodez and Paris and after his ordination on 23 December, 1861, he became a Sulpician. He subsequently taught philosophy at Autun and Issy, and lectured on Biblical exegesis with great success in the seminary at Paris, and after 1890 in the Institute Catholique (Paris). While holding this position he undertook the compilation and publication of a biblical dictionary, and with the assistance and collaboration of a corps of scholars like Pierre Battifol, Corluy, Delattre, Hyvernât, Jacquier, Mangenot, Many, Turmel and Vacant he produced his "Dictionnaire de la Bible" (Letousey et Ané; Paris, 1895-1913). This monumental work fills five quarto volumes numbered in 10,926 columns. It is not controversial, though it refutes error by exposition; it treats in separate articles of each book of scripture, each name of person or place, and the entire field of biblical archaeology, the exegesis being based on the Fathers, the standard Catholic Scripturists, and the ascertained results of modern sciences. In addition to this work, Vigouroux is the author of "Le Manuel des sciences bibliques" (in collaboration with his brother-Sulpician Bacues), which has run through over a dozen editions and has been translated into Italian, Spanish, and Russian; "La Bible et les découvertes modernes en Palestine, en Egypte, et en Assyrie" has been reprinted six times; "Les livres saints et la critique rationaliste," a refutation of the objections of unbelievers against the Bible, in five volumes, ran through five editions; his "Bible polyglotte" in 8 volumes, with the Hebrew, Greek, Vulgate Latin and French (Glaire) versions is a popular rather than an erudite compilation. In 1903 Leo XIII, who held him in high esteem, appointed Vigouroux consultant of the newly-established Biblical Commission, a guarantee of the orthodoxy of his exegetical opinions. In addition to his reputation as a scholar, it may be noted that Vigouroux was highly esteemed at both Rome and Paris as a director of souls.

Virgin Islands. See AMERICA

Virginia.—The area of the State is 42,627 square miles. In 1920 the population was 2,309,187, an increase of 12 per cent. since 1910. Of this, 29.2% was urban, 70.8% was rural. The average number of inhabitants per square miles was 57.4 as against 51.2 in 1919. Virginia has 22 cities, of which the largest with their respective populations are: Richmond 171,667; Norfolk 115,777; Roanoke 50,842; Portsmouth 54,387; Lynchburg 29,956; Petersburg 31,002; Newport News 35,596; Danville 21,539; Alexandria 18,060; Staunton 10,623; Charlottesville 10,688; Bristol 6,729; Fredericksburg 5,882; Winchester 6,883; Clifton Forge 6,164; Hampton 6,138; Radford 4,627; Buena Vista 3,911; Williamsburg 2,462.

The composition of the population in 1920 was as follows: whites 1,617,909; negroes 690,017; Indians 824; Chinese 278. The native whites numbered 1,587,124, of whom 1,534,494 were of native parentage; 30,514 of foreign parentage; 22,116 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born, numbering 30,785 came chiefly from England (3752), Russia (5421), Italy (2435), and Germany (2802). Of the population ten years of age and over, 195,159 or 11.2 per cent were illiterate. Of these, 122,322 were negroes (23.5 per cent.). The negroes who in 1910 formed 32.6 per cent. of the population formed 29.9 per cent in 1920.

ECONOMIC STATUS: The total value of the farmlands with buildings, implements, machinery, and live stock in 1920 was $1,196,555,772, an increase of 91.4 per cent in a decade. The farms embrace more than 70 per cent of the total land area or 18,561,112 acres; over one-half representing improved acreage. The number of farms was 186,242, of which 54 per cent are free from debt, the average value of each farm, including equipment, being $6,425, and of farm land per acre $40.75. The trucking has increased 550 per cent in forty years. The State stands first in peanuts (output 4,416,000 bushels, value $6,006,000); third in tobacco (output 177,390 pounds, value $42,574,000). In 1920 the yield of other crops was: corn 42,302,978 bushels, value $78,260,514; wheat 11,446,027 bushels, value $26,- 783,702; Irish potatoes 12,263,374 bushels, value $26,979,423; sweet potatoes and yams 5,981,848 bushels, value $9,570,164; oats 1,958,609 bushels, value $2,154,475; rye 456,689 bushels, value $822,039; buckwheat 232,667 bushels, value $360,390; barley 229,301 bushels, value $332,490; and in tons of hay and forage 1,989,282, value $41,847,594. The cultivation of alfalfa is increasing and covers 24,348 acres. The value of crops in 1920 was $262,252,283 from 4,579,367 acres. The number of dairy cows in the same year was 509,305, valued at $28,596,179. Since 1910 the number of sheep has decreased from 438,719 to 342,367. The value of live stock in 1920 was $121,969,281.

Manufactures.—According to the latest census of manufactures (1919) there were in the State 5,603 manufacturing establishments, with an aggregate capital of $464,517,000, employing 119,400 people; the cost of raw material used $372,041,000 and the value of the product to $641,810,000.

Mining.—The mineral output of Virginia in 1918 was worth $37,639,368. About 10,087,000 tons of coal and 1,304,000 tons of coke was mined, also 472,337 tons of iron ore and 562,299 tons of pig iron. Norfolk alone exported 17,500,000 tons of coal. There are 50 accredited mineral springs.

About 855,000,000 feet of lumber were cut in 1918. In September, 1919, there were 147 banks (national) with total resources of $430,241,000. The resources of the State banks (June 30, 1919) amounted to $177,814,000. The bank clearings in Richmond alone equalled $4,875,418,760; deposits $94,669,440; loans and discounts $102,049,839. The total valuation of real estate was $645,144,646, divided as follows: counties, $329,873,554; cities, $315,271,112. Of the total the whites owned $612,699,391; negroes, $32,475,255. The building operations of the city of Richmond were $4,118,688. The gross insurance risks written in Virginia in 1919 were as follows: fire insurance $633,887,306; marine insurance $75,442,221; life insurance $435,668,431.

The bonded debt of the State amounts (1919) $22,912,216; the assessed value of property for the same year was: real estate, $797,414,198; personal $535,859,124; total $1,333,273,322. The total mileage of the State is 4677. There are 12 electric companies with 433 miles of track extending between cities.

RELIGION.—The church membership (1916) was 949,136, of which the Baptists numbered 406,387; Methodists 258,785; Presbyterian 52,564; Protestant Episcopal 33,593; Disciples 34,220; Lutherans 16,040. The Catholics are given as 36,671. The value of all church property is $29,480,547; the debt $2,081,152.

For Catholic statistics see the articles on the dioceses of RICHMOND, WHEELING, and WILMINGTON.

EDUCATION.—The compulsory education law applies to children between the ages of eight and twelve years and requires attendance for 16 weeks each year. Two weeks' attendance at half-time or night school equal one week at day school. The receipts from the permanent funds in 1918 were $106,749, the receipts from appropriations and taxation were State $2,486,456; county, $1,200,197; local, $3,747,086; making the total revenue receipts $8,788,842. There was a balance on hand in the school year 1916-17 of $1,034,496. The total expenditure in the State for instruction in 1918-19 was $9,155,363. There are a total of 210,278 colored pupils enrolled in the public schools. Statistics of public schools (1918) show a school population of 658,926; total enrollment, 480,139; in high schools 29,157; average daily attendance 326,296 teachers 13,904; number of school houses 6,743; school revenue $8,788,842; salaries of teachers $5,162,470; annual cost of building $1,085,690; libraries and class equipment $1,676,918; total value of school property $18,862,254, an increase in six years of over 100 per cent.

In 1920 the University of Virginia had 88 professors, 18 officials, 931 students, and including the summer school, 2737.

In 1919 women were admitted to the College of William and Mary and Laurel Industrial School was transferred to the State. The laws governing private and parochial schools include the following: the State Board of Health shall have the power to enforce rules and regulations from time to time, requiring and providing for the thorough sanitation of all schools. No appropriations shall be made to any sectarian institutions.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—Several important Acts were passed in 1912, to provide for a new State institution for the feeble-minded, also surgical aid for the indigent, crippled, and deformed, the establishment of the first juvenile court in the State, primary elections for all except presidential electors, segregation districts for the residence of white and colored people. On 1 November, 1916, state-wide prohibition went into effect. In the same year, in order to extend the usefulness of agricultural high schools the Legislature voted to offer liberal terms to school districts which wished to borrow from the State's Literary Fund for the erection of schools. Provision was also made for a public defender in cities of 50,000 people, for two years. Judges were authorized to substitute jail sentences in misdemeanor cases. It was decided at that time that the father and mother were entitled to the custody, services, and earnings of legitimate children. Mothers' pensions were adopted in 1918. In 1918 the legislature decided that marriage, when either party is a habitual criminal, idiot, or insane, or is affected with specific diseases, is under the circumstance prohibited. In 1896 there were 525 divorces; in 1906, 1074; in 1916, 1886. The Federal Suffrage amendment was defeated by the Virginia Legislature on 12 February, 1920, but the Prohibition Amendment was ratified on 10 January, 1918. During the European War, an artillery camp was established at Lee Hall (Camp Eustis), Camp Humphreys for the engineers at Acotink; and two embarkation camps at Newport News (Hill and Stuart). Virginia furnished to the United States Army 73,062 men (1.94 per cent). The Virginia members of the national guard were for the most part incorporated into the 29th Division at Camp McClellan, Alabama; those of the National Army with the 80th Division at Camp Lee, Virginia. The summary of casualties among the Virginia members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 71 officers, 1564 men; prisoners, 3 officers, 40 men; wounded, 196 officers, 4256 men.

Visit ad Limina. (cf. C. E., XV—478a).—If the year appointed for the visit of a bishop to the Holy See falls wholly or partially within the first two years of the episcopacy, he may omit the visit and the diocesan report for that occasion. Bishops residing outside of Europe may limit their visits to every tenth year. Vicars apostolic, but not prefects apostolic, are bound to visit Rome; however, if it is very inconvenient for them to do so personally they may fulfil their obligation by a procurator, even one residing in Rome. However, both vicars and prefects apostolic must send in quinquennial reports, giving a full account of their pastoral work, the condition of their missions, and whatever relates to the welfare of their people; the account must be signed by the vicar or prefect and by at least one member of their council. In addition they have to forward to the Congregation of Propaganda at the end of each year, a statement showing the number of conversions, baptisms, and receptions of the sacraments during the year together with anything else worthy of notice.

On 4 November, 1918, the Sacred Consistorial Congregation published a Decree setting forth a list of questions to be answered by local ordinaries in the quinquennial diocesan reports to the Holy See. An earlier series of queries for the same purpose had been drawn up in 1909, but owing to changes made by the Code it was necessary to modify them. The new formula did not, however, come into effect until 1921. The report is to be written in Latin, dated and subscribed to by the ordinary; the first report is to contain full careful answers to all the questions; later reports may omit referring to the material conditions of the diocese if it is unchanged. The formula is divided into ten chapters comprising a hundred questions, many of them being multiple. The first chapter asks for data concerning the ordinary personally, the residential see, the civil statistics of the diocese, the number of Catholics and non-Catholics, the diversity of Rites, the number of priests, clerics, seminary students, whether there is a cathedral chapter or a body of diocesan consultors; the number of deaneries, and parishes, whether any parishes are based on language or nationality, and not on territory, and if so by what authority; the number of churches, oratories, celebrated shrines; the statistics of religious institutes. The second chapter has twelve main questions concerning the observance of specific canons governing the administration of temporalities, inventories, and the archives. The third chapter concerns the Faith and Divine worship; heresy, modernism, superstition, theosophy, spiritism, freedom of worship, cemeteries, observance of the liturgical rubrics, pictures, statues, number and condition of the churches, works of art therein, whether entrance into the churches during services is, as commanded, always and absolutely free, custody of and reverence to the Blessed Sacrament. The fourth chapter concerns the ordinary himself; his income, residence, administration of temporalities, administration of confirmation, ordinations, confessions, observation of regulations on preaching, mixed marriages, canonical visitation, diocesan synods, relations of the civil authorities towards them and the Church. The fifth chapter treats of the diocesan curia in three queries; the sixth deals with the spiritual and temporal aspects of the seminary in five questions. The seventh chapter has nine questions treating in detail of the observance of clerical obligations as laid down in the canons; the eighth has nine questions dealing with the cathedral and other chapters; the ninth chapter in fourteen questions is concerned with the deans and parish priests, especially in regard to their homilies, sermons and catechisms and to the administration of the sacraments; the tenth chapter in seven questions deals with religious, their reputation, usefulness, observance of the canons governing admission, enclosure, confessions, canonical visitation; the eleventh chapter has sixteen queries treating of the faithful, public morality, Christian lives, reverence of the clergy and the Pope, attendance at Mass, fast and abstinence, infant baptism, Easter communions, frequent communion, the last sacraments, Catholic burials, religious marriages, proportion of mixed marriages; religious education, especially of pupils attending public schools; spiritual care of those just out from school, confraternities; Catholic social service centers, refuges, workshops; character of the press; forbidden societies; Socialism; attitude of Catholics towards anti-religious education: the twelfth chapter directs the ordinary particularly, in his first report to state summarily what he thinks of the material and moral condition of his diocese, his hopes and his anxieties; while in later reports he will tell how and with what result he has carried out any advice or orders he may receive from the Holy See in reply to his earlier report and whether in the matter of faith and morals the diocese has improved or falling away, or whether it is practically unchanged, and to what he attributes this condition of affairs.

Visitation. CANONICAL (cf. C. E., XV—479d).—Bishops are bound to visit their diocese each year either wholly or in part, but so that the entire diocese shall be visited at least once every five years. This is a personal obligation, but for just reasons the bishop may depute the vicar general or other priest to carry it out. The bishop may select any two priests he desires to assist him in this work, all privileges or customs to the contrary being now reprobated. If a bishop neglects to make his visitation, his metropolitan notifies the Holy See and on obtaining its approval carries out the visitation. Exemption from the bishop's jurisdiction does not imply exemption from episcopal visitation; for the latter a special apostolic rescript is required. However exempt religious are subject to visitation only in the cases laid down in the Code. Thus the bishop must visit every fifth year monasteries of nuns subject to regulars, but only to enquire about the observance of the enclosure; however, if the regular superior has omitted the canonical visitation for five years, the bishop is to make it for him. So, too, is he to visit pontifical clerical congregations, even exempt to examine the church, the sacristy, and the confessionals; or if the institute is lay, to enquire into its internal discipline also. Parish priests or vicars, who are religious, are subject to his visitation, except in the matter of regular observance; moreover, he can visit the churches of exempt orders to see if the regulations concerning unlawful or incongruous devotions are being carried out. If a charitable foundation is by prescription or apostolic privilege exempt from episcopal jurisdiction or visitation the bishop may nevertheless supervise its moral condition, its exercise of piety, and the administration of the sacraments therein.

An archbishop may not make a canonical visitation of one of his suffragan dioceses, except when the bishop has neglected this duty, and even then he must first obtain permission from the Holy See. The visitation need not be authorized by a provincial council as was formerly the case.

Vitoria, DIOCESE OF (VICTORIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—489c), in Spain, suffragan of Burgos. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Leopold Eijo y Garay, b. at Vigo, 14 April, 1878, ordained 27 December, 1900, elected bishop of Tuy, 28 May, 1914, transferred to Vitoria 22 March, 1917; took possession 16 July following. He succeeded the Rt. Rev. Melo y Alcáde who was transferred. In 1921 the diocese contained 712 parishes, 967 churches, 1 abbey for men, 89 convents for men, 203 for women, 4138 professed sisters, 380 novices, 5 seminaries with 407 seminarians. The educational institutions are: 1 free university, 50 professors, 350 students; 3 normal schools; 1070 elementary schools, 1184 teachers, 67,408 pupils. The following institutions exist in the diocese: 14 homes for the aged and infirm, 30 asylums, 59 hospitals, 8 refuges, 12 settlement houses, 10 day nurseries. All the public institutions admit the ministry of priests. Five Catholic papers are published in the diocese.

Vives y Tuto, JOSÉ CALASANZIO, Cardinal, theologian, b. at San Andrés de Llevaneras, in the Diocese of Barcelona, Spain, on 15 February, 1854; d. at Monte Porzio Catone, Rome, on 7 September, 1913.

After studying at Mataro he entered the Guatemalan province of the Capuchins on 11 July, 1860, but three years later he was driven into exile during the revolution, and took refuge first with the Jesuits in California and later with the Capuchins at Toulouse, France. He was sent to Ecuador, but ill-health compelled him to return in 1876 to Toulouse, where he was ordained. He was then named guardian of the convent in Perpignan, but when the French government began its anti-Catholic persecution in 1880, he with the other Spanish Capuchins withdrew to Spain. He took an active part in arranging the union of the Spanish Capuchins with the body of the order from which they had been separated for nearly a century, and displayed such ability in the negotiations at Rome that his superiors called him there permanently in 1887. Subsequently he was appointed Consultor of the Holy Office and other congregations, examiner of the Roman clergy, and a member of the Commission on Anglican Orders, and general definitor of the Capuchins. He took a prominent part in the Plenary Council of Latin-America, held at Rome in 1899, and was raised to the cardinalate in the same year. When the Roman Curia was reorganized in 1908, he was named Prefect of the Congregation of Religious by Pius X, whose confessor and confidential adviser he was. To him are due most of the legislative reforms in religious life introduced during the reign of Pius X; and the Modernists attributed to his inspiration the vigorous unmasking and condemnation of their heretical theories. Cardinal Vives was universally esteemed as a man of exemplary piety, mortified life, kind to the poor and filled with zeal for religion. In spite of his executive labors he found time to write a course of dogmatic theology, which enjoys considerable popularity in Spain, and a number of ascetical works.

Viviers, DIOCESE OF (VIVARIUM; cf. C. E., XV—493c), in France, suffragan of Avignon. The present administrator is the Rt. Rev. Joseph Michel Bonnet, b. at Langogne, France, 29 September, 1835, ordained December, 1859, elected 26 June, 1876, consecrated 24 August, made assistant at the pontifical throne 28 March, 1879. The auxiliary is the Rt. Rev. Paul Nègre, titular bishop of Cybistra. In 1921 the diocese contained 365 parishes, 328 succursal parishes, 37 vicariates actually existing, 1 monastery for men (Trappists), 2 monasteries for women (Carmelites and Poor Clares), about 500 secular priests, 1 seminary (67 seminarians), 1 preparatory seminary (160 students), several teaching orders of Brothers. The educational institutions are: 2 secondary colleges for boys (25 teachers, 300 students), 373 parish schools entirely supported by the Catholics (20,000 pupils). During the war 280 priests were mobilized. Of these 10 were killed, 2 injured, 1 received the medal of the Legion of Honor, 1 the médaille militaire, 60 the croix de guerre. Of the seminarians, 85 joined the army, 19 were killed, 3 injured, 1 received the médaille militaire and 10 the croix de guerre. The Union Diocésaine for cooperative buying has been established among the clergy and an association called the Jeunesse Catholique is flourishing among the laity. Six Catholic periodicals are published in the diocese. In 1921 the diocese contained 254,308 Catholics, mostly French, with a few Spaniards and Italians and 40,000 Protestants.

Vizeu, DIOCESE OF (VISENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—496c), in the north central part of Portugal, suffragan of Braga. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Antonio Álvares Ferreira, born in Sardoal in the diocese of Portalegre in 1864; he studied at Portalegre and Coimbra, was ordained in 1886, served as rector of the seminary of Santarem, was made a canon, then vicar general and later, a canon of Lisbon, was named an honorary chamberlain in 1899, prelate of the Holy See in 1902, and prothonotary apostolic in 1906, and appointed titular Bishop of Martyropolis 19 December, 1907, and coadjutor to the bishop of Vizeu, whom he succeeded 2 July, 1911. The diocese comprises 209 parishes, 1218 churches, 312 secular priests, 1 seminary with 10 professors and 48 seminarians, 1 college for boys with 12 teachers and 120 students, 1 college for girls with 8 teachers and 58 pupils, 1 home for the aged, 1 asylum for boys and girls and 1 asylum for boys only, with a training school connected with it, 2 civil and 1 military hospitals, and 1 settlement house. A number of societies are organized among the laity and 6 Catholic periodicals are published. During the World War four priests from this diocese served as chaplains and one of these died in Africa.

Vogüé, CHARLES-JEAN-MELCHIOR, MARQUIS DE, distinguished Oriental scholar and archaeologist, b. at Paris on 18 October, 1829; d. there on 9 November, 1916. At an early age he entered the French Department of Foreign Affairs and was sent to Russia, where in 1851 he wrote a notable study on Russian goldwork. He left the diplomatic service the following year and travelled in Greece, Syria, Palestine and the Orient, returning again in 1861 to Syria. In 1871 he was ambassador at Constantinople and in 1875 at Vienna. Among the honors conferred on him were: the cross of Commander of the Legion of Honor, membership in the Society of Antiquarians of France (1860), in the Academy of Inscriptions (1868), and in the French Academy (1891). Among de Vogüé's great works are "Les églises de la Terre Sainte"; "La Syrie Centrale" (3 volumes, Paris, 1865-77), a veritable monument of Oriental science, vols. I and II dealing with architecture, and vol. III with the Semitic inscriptions of Palmyra and Sufa; "Le Temple de Jérusalem"; and "Mélanges d'archéologie orientale." But his interests were not confined to Oriental antiquities; he was a prominent cultivator and president of the Agricultural Society of France; edited the "Mémoires de Villars" in a masterly way; wrote "Une famille vivaroise," a charming account of his family; and was prominent in the Red Cross work in France during the War. An outstanding feature in his career was his zeal for the Christians in the Orient. In 1856 with Augustin Cauchy and Charles Lenormant he founded L'Œuvre des Ecoles d'Orient, of which he became president in 1900; in 1860 he cooperated with Abbé (later Cardinal) Lavigerie in succouring the Maronites when the Christians were being martyred in Syria; while ambassador at Constantinople he was an active protector of the Catholic missions in Turkey in Asia; and during the European War he inspired the Holy See to intercede with the Sultan to spare the Syrians who were being deliberately starved to death.

Vows (cf. C. E., XV—511a).—The only private vows now reserved to the Holy See are a vow of perfect and perpetual chastity, and a vow to enter a religious institute having solemn vows, provided these vows have been made unconditionally and after the completion of the party's eighteenth year. Formerly a vow to visit the Holy Land, Compostella, or the Tombs of the Apostles in Rome was likewise reserved to the pope. While solemn religious profession still dissolves an unconsummated marriage it is to be noted that a religious profession is invalid unless it has been preceded by a valid novitiate, as, that unless a dispensation has been granted by the Holy See no married person can make a valid novitiate while his or her marriage remains undissolved.

Clerics in sacred orders, and regulars or nuns with solemn vows incur excommunication reserved simply to the Holy See, if they attempt marriage, even civil marriage; the penalty is likewise incurred by their partners; formerly the censure was reserved only to the ordinary.

W

Wagga-Wagga, DIOCESE OF (CORVOPOLITANIENSIS), separated from the dioceses of Goulburn and Wilcannia and erected into the new diocese 28 July, 1917. It is bounded on the south by the Murray River to a point ten miles west of Tocumwal; on the west by a line extending from that point on the Murray, to the western boundary of County Cooper; on the north by a line about 25 miles north of the South-West Railway, including the irrigation area, 4 miles north of Yenda and 7 miles east of it to Ullabo; thence in a southeasterly line to Khancoban and the Murray. The first bishop, Rt. Rev. Joseph Wilfred Dwyer, was born in Maitland, N. S. W., 12 October, 1869, and was consecrated 13 October, 1918, by the Apostolic Delegate, Mgr. Cattaneo, assisted by 12 archbishops and bishops, and thirty priests. The episcopal residence is at Wagga-Wagga. During the past year (1921) the diocese was greatly stirred by the Ligouri case, in which Bridget Mary Partridge, otherwise known as Sister Ligouri, brought suit against Bishop Dwyer for slander. Having run away from her convent and taken refuge with a Protestant family, she later brought suit for £5000 damages. The court, however, wholly exonerated the bishop after a long trial lasting several days. The Catholic population of this territory comprises 20,000 Irish, 200 English and 1000 of German descent. Latest statistics credit the diocese with 18 parishes, 53 churches, 100 mission stations, 2 convents for men, 15 for women, 24 secular clergy, 8 teaching Brothers, 132 nuns, 2 colleges for girls with 12 teachers and 158 students, 4 high schools with 24 teachers and 230 pupils, 18 elementary schools with 70 teachers and 2600 pupils, and 1 orphanage for girls with 73 orphans, conducted by the Sisters of Mercy. The priests minister in 7 public hospitals and 1 jail. The only aid any of the Catholic institutions receive from the government is an occasional gift of £50. The Hibernian-Australian Catholic Benefit Society, the Australian Catholic Guild and the St. Vincent de Paul Society are established among the laity.

Waghadugu, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE OUAGADOUGOU), erected by a decree of 2 July, 1921, through a division of the Vicariate Apostolic of Sahara. It includes all the territory east of a line drawn from 5° west to a lake south of the River Niger in the city of Timbuctu, from here to the boundary line of the three civil provinces of Bandiagara, Dedugu and Babodulasso, included in this Vicariate. It is entrusted to the White Fathers, the first vicar Apostolic being Rt. Rev. Joanny Therenoud, appointed titular Bishop of Sitiffs 18 July, 1921, having been named vicar on 5 July previous.

Walsh, WILLIAM J., Archbishop of Dublin; b. there on 30 January, 1841; d. there on 9 April, 1921. He was educated at St. Lawrence O'Toole Seminary and at the Catholic University, when it was directed by Doctor (Cardinal) Newman. He then went to Maynooth, and after his regular course spent three years in higher studies in the Dunboyne Establishment. In 1867 at the age of twenty-six he taught dogmatic and moral theology. He became vice-president of the Maynooth College in 1878, and at the death of Dr. Russell succeeded him as president. He was an authority on the social, economic and educational questions of the day and a strong advocate of the claims of the Irish tenantry, and in 1881 gave his support to Gladstone's Land Bill. His "Plain Exposition" of the Bill was published at the time; in 1883 his book entitled "The Queen's Colleges and the Royal University of Ireland" challenged public attention. On the death of Archbishop McCabe of Dublin in 1885, Dr. Walsh was named his successor, in spite of the opposition of the Government, which sent Sir George Errington to Rome to protest against the appointment. From the beginning, he identified himself with the cause of the people, in public meetings, the pulpit and the press. He was present as a witness in the Parnell trial and gave evidence of the utmost importance; and was many times mediator in trade disputes and strikes. In recognition of his services, he was given the Freedom of the City of Cork in 1890. With all these multiplied activities he was also a writer even on such subjects as "Gregorian Music" and "Bimetallism." During his entire episcopal career he was deeply interested in the cause of education, especially in the matter of university training, in which the Catholics labored under grave disabilities. As early as 1883 his treatise, "The Queen's Colleges and the Royal University of Ireland" on this question had challenged public attention. At a later date his "Trinity College and the University of Dublin" and "Trinity College and Its Medical School" proved very effective. When the new National University of Ireland was chartered he was appointed its first Chancellor. In regard to recent history in Ireland he pointed out in 1917 that the National Party had in effect agreed to partition Ireland, and he openly supported the Republican candidate at the general election in 1918; subscribed to the forbidden Dáil Éireann loan in 1919; and was vigorous in his denunciation of the excesses of the British forces in Ireland.

Wang, ERIK A., pioneer missionary, b. at Kongsvinger, Norway, on 29 August, 1859; d. at Bergen in 1913. He was of Lutheran parentage, but in his childhood became a Catholic. After studying in Denmark, Norway, the Faroe Islands, Belgium (at Thielt), and at the College of Propaganda, Rome, he was ordained in 1882, and returning to his native land, founded numerous Catholic stations and churches there. He was stationed at Christiania as curate (1882-83) and as rector (1886-99), and at Tromsø as rector (1883-84); in the latter year he accompanied the Prefect-Apostolic of Norway on his visitation to Hammerfest and Alten. Subsequently he was secretary to Mgr. Fellize, the prefect Apostolic, and was named a member of the Council of the prefecture. In 1899 he was nominated as rector at Bergen, and acted as dean of Western Norway. He was editor of "St. Olav," a Christiania Catholic magazine, and contributed several articles to "THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA."

Ward, BERNARD, ecclesiastical historian, b. on 4 February, 1857, at Old Hall, Herts, England; d. at Brentwood, on 21 January, 1920; son of Dr. W. G. Ward of the Oxford movement. He studied at Old Hall and Oscott and was ordained in 1882 by Cardinal Manning. The greater part of his life was spent in St. Edmund's College, Old Hall, of which he became vice president in 1890 and two years later president, a post he held till 1916. Shortly afterwards he was preconized titular Bishop of Lydda and Administrator Apostolic of the new diocese of Brentwood, to which see he was translated as its first bishop on 20 July, 1917. The development of the college at Old Hall is largely due to his initiative and energy. He wrote a "History of St. Edmund's College" and "A Life of St. Edmund of Canterbury," these, however, were but as a prelude to "The Dawn of the Catholic Revival in England," "The Eve of Catholic Emancipation," and "The Sequel to Catholic Emancipation," which form a history of the Church in England from 1780 to 1850, and a permanent contribution to English ecclesiastical literature. "The Priestly Vocation" is a volume of "The Library for Catholic Priests and Students," of which he was a joint editor. Mgr. Ward also wrote a "Commentary on St. Luke's Gospel" and contributed articles to THE CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Ward, WILFRID, biographer and essayist, b. at Old Hall, Herts, England, in 1856; d. at Hempstead on 9 April, 1916; son of William G. Ward, of the Oxford Movement and brother of Bishop Ward. He studied at Old Hall, Ushaw, the Gregorian University, Rome and graduated later in the London University. In 1890 he was called to the chair of philosophy at Ushaw, and in 1906 became editor of "The Dublin Review." Beginning with a study on the philosophy of religious thought, "Witnesses to the Unseen," and inspired by Newman's theory of development, Ward devoted most of his life to bringing Catholic scholars to recognize the legitimate claims of modern science and to inducing the modern world to consider without prejudice the Catholic viewpoint. He was one of the founders of the Synthetic Society (1896-1908), for the discussion of the philosophic basis of religious belief; among its members being Balfour, Haldane, Bryce, Sidgwick, and Bishop Gore. "Men and Matters," "Problems and Persons," "The Wish to Believe," and "The Clothes of Religion" contain most of his best philosophic and apologetic writings. Ward was also a biographer of high standing, his best efforts in this field being the "Life of Cardinal Newman," and the biography of his father, which appeared as "William George Ward and the Oxford Movement" and "William George Ward and the Catholic Revival," together with the "Life and Times of Cardinal Wiseman" and his "Mémorial of Aubrey de Vere."

Warsaw, ARCHDIOCESE OF (VARSAVIENSIS; of C. E., XV—555b), in the Republic of Poland. On 14 November, 1918, the city of Warsaw again became the real capital of a free and independent Poland, the seat of Naesebrik Panstwa, Chief of State, the seat of the Diet, of Central Civil and Military Government, and the see of the Polish archbishop and cardinal, His Eminence Alexander Kakowski. Born in Dembina in 1863, he was ordained in 1886, served as a professor and then rector of the upper seminary, became a canon in 1901, rector of the ecclesiastical academy of Petrograd in 1910, a prelate of the Holy See in 1911, and was made archbishop 2 May, 1913. On 15 December, 1919, he was created a cardinal priest. The archbishop is assisted by two auxiliaries, Most Rev. Casimir Ruskiewicz, titular Archbishop of Nicolia, and Rt. Rev. Stanislas Gall, titular Bishop of Halicarnassus; the latter is also chaplain in chief of the Polish army. The cardinal's predecessor, Most Rev. Vincent Choserat Popiel, the eighth archbishop of Warsaw under the Russian government, died 7 December, 1912, after an illness of two years. His wise and watchful administration of twenty-nine years was the longest of any incumbent of this see.

On the very day of the outbreak of the Russian Revolution, 11 March, 1917, all the Polish bishops were gathered together to celebrate the centenary of the foundation of the Archdiocese of Warsaw. Since the Russian high officials and most of the members of the orthodox Russian church have now left the city, it has taken on a truly Catholic appearance. The magnificent Russian Cathedral, erected in 1912 out of public funds, has, after some necessary alterations, been turned over to Catholic worship, and some of the churches which had been seized by the Russians have been restored to the Catholics. There now remain only three churches for the Russians, one at Praga being used as the cathedral. A well-known apostle of Catholicism in Poland, Rev. Father Honorat, a Capuchin, and founder of the Sisters of St. Felix of Cantalice, died 16 December, 1916. He was the founder of several other religious organizations, a well-known spiritual director and writer, and an ardent advocate of frequent communion for forty years before the decree of Pius X.

The Archdiocese of Warsaw at present comprises the metropolitan chapter of Warsaw with twelve canons, and the collegiate chapter of Lowicz with its twelve canons. The diocese is divided into nineteen deaneries: (1) Warsaw (inside the city), comprising 16 parishes with 27 non-parochial churches and many private chapels, among the many humanitarian institutions. Total souls 569,934; (2) Warsaw (outside the city), 18 parishes with 97,421 souls; (3) Praga, 17 parishes with 146,040 souls; (4) Biala (Biala), 9 parishes with 30,407 souls; (5) Gostynin, 16 parishes with 62,935 souls; (6) Goscyn (Goshchi), 9 parishes with 32,667 souls; (7) Gora Kalwarja, 8 parishes with 26,460 souls; (8) Grodzisk, 11 parishes with 46,995 souls; (9) Grojec, 12 parishes with 43,630 souls; (10) Jadow, 8 parishes with 43,850 souls; (11) Kaluszyn, 8 parishes with 22,953 souls; (12) Kutno, 22 parishes with 80,274 souls; (13) Lowicz, 21 parishes with 90,730 souls; (14) Minsk, 10 parishes with 51,592 souls; (15) Maszconow (Maschonov) 10 parishes with 59,563 souls; (16) Radzymin (Rad-simin), 8 parishes with 44,310 souls; (17) Rawa, 13 parishes with 45,418 souls; (18) Skierniewice (Skernewice), 10 parishes with 41,902 souls; (19) Sochaczew (Sohatshev), 18 parishes with 51,670 souls. Total of 244 parishes, with 1,472,751 souls. Non-parochial churches, 68; churches with monasteries, 12; public and semi-public chapels, 171; private chapels, 25; number of secular clergy, 501; regular clergy, 56; alumni of seminary, 104; students of university, 15; nuns, 30; houses of religious orders, female, 28; faithful in Warsaw, 569,934; in archdiocese of Warsaw, but outside of city proper, 902,817; total for archdiocese, 1,472,751.

Washington, (cf. C. E., XV—560b).—The area of the State is 69,127 square miles. In 1920 the population was 1,356,621, an increase of 18.8 per cent since 1910. Between 1900 and 1910 the population jumped from 518,103 to 1,141,990 (120.4%). The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 20.3, as against 17.1 in 1910 and 7.8 in 1900. In 1920, 5.2% of the population was urban; 44.8% was rural. There are 15 Indian reservations, 1 navy yard, 1 national park, and a tract of unsurveyed land. Pend Oreille County was organized from a part of Stevens County in 1911. There are 69 cities, of which the largest with their respective populations are: Seattle 315,312; Spokane 104,437; Tacoma 96,965; Bellingham 25,585; Everett 27,644; The composition of the population is as follows: whites 1,319,777; negroes 6883; Indians 9061; Chinese 2363; Japanese 17,387. There are 1,069,722 native whites, of whom 711,706 were of native parentage; 214,618 of foreign parentage; 143,998 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born whites, numbering 149,686, came chiefly from Sweden (34,793), Norway (30,304), Germany (22,315); Canada (42,988). Of the population ten years of age and over, 1.7 per cent or 18,526 were illiterate.

ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—The number of farms in 1920 was 66,288; an increase of 10,096 since 1910. The value of the farm property was $1,057,429,848; of the live stock $82,316,130; and of all crops (1920) $227,212,008. The chief crops were: wheat 41,837,090 bushels, $91,206,642; oats 8,073,481 bushels, $8,073,481; barley 2,249,856 bushels, $3,374,792; corn 901,905 bushels, $1,623,433; potatoes 5,866,710 bushels, $12,320,093; hay 2,013,913 tons, $47,717,065; hops 1,615,761 pounds, $727,092.

The total number of farm animals for the assessment of 1919 was given at 1,787,871 at a total value of $77,572,066, while the dairy industry shows for the same year the following result: butter 5,899,678 pounds, $3,296,726; cheese 84,868 pounds, $28,006; total value of dairy products $27,620,231.

According to the Census of Manufactures in 1919, there were 4,919 establishments, employing 150,482 persons earning for their services, $225,757,000, and producing goods worth $809,635,000. The capital invested was $553,125,000. The assessed valuation of real property in 1919 amounted to 722,761,254; of personal property, $179,764,087. The outstanding bonded debt was paid off in 1911.

The whole fisheries output during normal times amounts to between $10,000,000 and $20,000,000 annually, the wide difference being caused chiefly by the fluctuation of prices and difference in the size of the salmon run from year to year. In 1917 an exceptional year for prices—the total value was $22,654,688. During the past 30 years the value of salmon taken from the waters of the State of Washington has amounted to between $200,000,000 and $300,000,000. In order to encourage the fishing industry both the Federal and State governments maintain hatcheries in the rivers and lakes and plant millions of fry annually.

The total land area of the state is 42,775,040 acres. Of this approximately 11,983,340 acres are included in the forest reserves and closed to entry and over two million acres are untaxed in Indian reservations, and over four million are private timber lands. The lumber, lath, and shingles manufactured in 1918 reached 4,603,123,000 feet. The coal mines produced in 1918 4,082,212 tons of coal. The foreign trade of the State was as follows: (1918) imports, $326,981,279; exports, $258,006,441; (1919) imports, $196,918,797; exports, $292,374,345.

The fourteenth census gives the number of farms in Washington as 66,288 (an increase of 10,096 since 1910), with a total area of 13,244,720 acres, exactly 31 per cent of the land area in Washington. The area of improved land in these farms was 5,520,308 and the value of all farm property was $496,439,617. The area of drained land was 94,924 acres.

The railroad mileage of the State is 8046; the total mileage of navigable rivers is approximately 1200. In 1911 Seattle took advantage of the new port-districting law and created the port of Seattle as a separate municipality. The opening of the Panama Canal resulted in negotiations by six leading Atlantic steamship companies for docking facilities at Tacoma and Seattle. The Federal Government has large dry docks and a naval depot at Bremerton, on Puget Sound. Garrisons of the regular army are maintained at Spokane, Seattle, Vancouver, and three coast defence points at the entrance to Puget Sound and one at Bremerton Navy Yard.

RELIGION.—In 1916 there were in the State 97,418 Catholics; 43,293 Methodists; 30,559 Presbyterians; 18,248 Baptists; 20,435 Lutherans; 17,521 Disciples of Christ; 16,137 Congregationalists; 10,881 Episcopalians. Details of the condition of the Catholic Church in the State are given in the articles on the dioceses of Seattle and Spokane.

EDUCATION.—The laws that govern private and parochial schools are as follows: All schools publicly supported shall be free from sectarian control or influence (IX-4). Private schools must be approved by county superintendents. American history and government must be taught in all high schools. In 1920 there were 373,108 children between the ages of five and twenty; of these, 257,332 (69 per cent) attended school. In the public schools formal religious teaching or regular reading from the Bible is not permitted, but moral training is given and moral principles are inculcated. Provisions were made in 1919 for the establishment of continuation schools or part-time classes for all children under eighteen, state aid being provided; also for the establishment of a division of agriculture at the State College at Washington, and a new Normal school at Centralia. Education is compulsory for all children between eight and sixteen years old. In 1920 the 2150 schools had 7113 teachers and were attended by 247,688 children, elementary schools and the 281 high schools had 1795 teachers and 1000 students. The total expenditures for the year was $22,414,510. The average monthly salary paid to male teachers in 1918 was $97.38; to women teachers, $69.33. The annual expenditure for each child has been conservatively estimated for that year as $67. Beside the State institutions, there were in 1918, 135 schools under private and sectarian management. The 12 Catholic academies for girls show an attendance of 933 pupils, and the 46 parochial schools with 7773 pupils save the State an annual expense of $520,000. The Catholic charitable institutions housed and supported 56 orphans and 50 aged and infirm persons. The State University had in 1919, 52 professors, 28 associated and 60 assistant professors, 55 instructors, 32 assistants, 16 graduate assistants, together with a music staff of 12 members, and 2,547 students.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—In 1911 the public service commission was created, and the nomination and election of judges of courts of record, original and appellate, on a non-partisan judiciary ticket were provided for. The initiative, referendum, and recall amendment to the constitution was adopted in 1912. In 1913 an industrial welfare commission was created with power to fix the minimum wage for women. In the same year, mothers' pensions were provided for, juvenile courts created, a State Humane Bureau established to provide for incompetents, children, and minors, hospitals for tuberculosis cases provided for, the death penalty for murder was abolished, teachers' pensions and retirement funds were created, and a department of agriculture established. The Federal Prohibition Act was ratified on 13 January, 1920; the suffrage amendment on 22 March, 1920. Divorce is granted now when the parties are estranged and have lived separated and apart for eight years or more and the court is satisfied that the parties can no longer live together, and in case of chronic mania or dementia of either party, having existed ten years or more. The war with Germany caused a sudden expansion in the state's industrial activities, especially in ship-building. An immense cantonment for the United States soldiers was established at Camp Lewis, outside of Tacoma. Washington furnished during the war 45,154 soldiers (1.20 per cent of the United States Army). The Washington members of the newly drafted National Army were incorporated into the 91st Division at Camp Lewis. Especially active was the government cut-up plant at Vancouver, Washington, in the spruce production for war airplanes. The summary of casualties of Washington members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 42 officers, 835 men; prisoners, 2 officers, 20 men; wounded, 94 officers, 1077 men. After the war considerable labor disturbances marked the State's industrial life. Radical agitators attempted to favor the flame of discontent caused by high prices and inflated currency and the climax came at Centralia on 11 November, 1919, when a crowd of I. W. W. fired several shots into a parade of members of the American Legion. One of the leading agitators was lynched.

Waterford and Lismore, DIOCESE OF (WATERFORDENSIS ET LISMORENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—564d), suffragan of Cashel, Ireland. Bishop Sheehan died in 1916 after a strenuous career as bishop. He re-established the ancient diocesan chapter and renewed the diocesan synod which had not been held for nearly two centuries. Amongst his other notable works were the introduction of a system of religious school examinations, the compilation of a catechism for diocesan use, the provision of clergy houses and the promotion and improvement of ecclesiastical music and ceremonial. He was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Bernard Hackett, C.S.S.R., b. at Dungavan, 1863, ordained 1888, superior of the Redemptorist convent in Limerick when he was elected 29 January, 1916, consecrated 19 March, 1917.

Rev. Dr. Hennebery died in 1917. He had been professor of Old and Modern Irish in the National University of Ireland and had much reputation as a scholar. He left no permanent work except a still unpublished treatise of a highly technical character on Irish music. The year 1917 also witnessed the death of Rev. M. P. O'Hickey, late professor of Irish at Maynooth, whose energy and enthusiasm did much to foster a taste for their native language amongst the clergy of Ireland, to his exertions being largely due the provision of essential Irish in the curriculum of the National University of Ireland. The Diocese contains 39 parishes, 77 churches, 10 monasteries, 1 abbey, and 6 convents for men, 29 convents for women, 120 secular priests, 46 regulars, 602 Sisters, 3 seminaries, 2 colleges for men and 1 for women, 6 high schools, 2 training schools, 3 industrial schools with an attendance of 381; the students in St. John's College and Mount Melleray seminary are organized for the relief of foreign missions. There are 10 homes, 3 asylums for the insane, 7 hospitals, 1 refuge. Various religious societies and an ecclesiastical benevolent society are organized among the clergy and among the laity there are various religious and young men's societies.

Weale, WILLIAM HENRY JAMES, antiquarian, b. at Marylebone, London, on 8 March, 1832; d. at Clapham Common, London, on 26 April, 1917; son of J. and Susan (Vesien) Weale. He was educated at King's College, London, and from his youth had a fascination for art and archaeology, being especially interested in the antiquities of Belgium. In 1849 he became a Catholic, and after marrying Miss Helena Walton settled at Bruges in 1855. Four years later he published "Belgium, Aix-la-Chapelle and Cologne, an Archaeological Guide-Book" the fruit of his travels and studies. He continued his studies in medieval Flemish art and was soon acknowledged the leading living authority on the subject; he threw valuable light especially on the work of David, Memlinc, the Van Eycks and other artists of the early Flemish school. He had an expert knowledge also of early book-binding, illuminated manuscripts and monumental brasses. In 1872 he was invited back to England to classify and describe the specimens of Flemish art in the South Kensington Museum, and in 1890 was appointed keeper of the National Art Library. He was an honorary member of the Royal Flemish Academy, and of the Academy of Fine Arts of Antwerp, and an Associate of the Royal Academy of Belgium; in addition he was decorated as an officer of the Order of Leopold. Among his writings in addition to memoirs on the artists mentioned above: may be mentioned "Bruges et ses environs" (1862); "Memoire sur la Restauration de Monuments Publics en Belgique" (1862); "Le Beffroi: arts, heraldique, archéologie" (1863-76); "La Flandre: revue des monuments d'histoire et d'antiquité" (1867-76); "Bibliographia Liturgica" (1886); and "Peintres Brugeois" (1907-12). He also contributed an article on David Gheeraert to the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Weber, ANSELM, apostle of the Navajo Indians, b. at New Salem, Michigan, on 10 November, 1862; d. at Rochester, Minnesota, on 7 March, 1921. He was educated at St. Francis College, Cincinnati, and entered the Friars Minor in 1882. After his ordination seven years later, he taught at Cincinnati, and in 1898 was sent as a missionary to the Navajos in Arizona. Two years later he became superior of the mission, and established a school at St. Michael's, which proved very successful and has had great influence among the Indians. He was instrumental in having the reservations of the Navajos extended and obtained much helpful legislation for them. In the course of his missionary labors among the Indians in Arizona and New Mexico, Father Weber became expert in their language, and assisted his brother Franciscans in compiling their "Ethnologic Dictionary of the Navajo Language" (1910). He wrote a Navajo-English "Catechism of Christian Doctrine," and was engaged in writing a Navajo grammar when his health finally broke down. He was a contributor to the "Indian Sentinel" and "Sendbote des Goettlichen Herzens Jesu," and wrote the article "Navajo Indians" for the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA.

Wellington, ARCHDIOCESE OF (WELLINGTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—580a), in New Zealand. This see has been filled for thirty-eight years by Most Rev. Francis-Marie Redwood, who was appointed bishop in 1874, and promoted upon the erection of the see into a metropolitan see in 1887. In 1913 he was given a coadjutor, with right of succession, in the person of Most Rev. Thomas O'Shea of the Congregation of Marists. He was born in San Francisco in 1870, studied at St. Mary's Seminary, Meane, New Zealand, and was ordained in 1893, returning to the seminary as a professor. He later served as rector of St. Joseph's, Wellington, was made vicar general in 1907, and was appointed titular Bishop of Gortyna, 9 May, 1913. In 1915 Archbishop Redwood celebrated the golden jubilee of his priesthood, and in 1918 Rev. Dean Binsfeld celebrated the diamond jubilee or sixtieth anniversary of his ordination. A beautiful Gothic church dedicated to St. Mary of the Angels was erected in Wellington City in 1920-21. During the World War this diocese gave about 500 of its young men to serve with the forces, and large numbers fell in action or died from wounds: General F. E. Johnston was killed in France in 1917, and Colonel W. J. Malone was killed in Gallipoli in 1915. From the ranks of the clergy 14 went to the front as chaplains, and one, Father McMenamin, was killed in action, and another, Father Patrick Dore, died from wounds received. Rev. M. J. Lewis, who served as a military chaplain at home, died at his post during the epidemic of 1918. The diocese has also suffered the loss of one of its oldest missionaries, Rev. Patrick J. Smyth, active in missionary work for thirty years, who died 7 September, 1916, and three prominent laymen, generous benefactors of the Church; Martin Kennedy, K. S. G., d. 1916; Sydney Johnston] d. 1917, and Maurice O'Connor d. 1920. The archdiocese comprises 58,000 whites and 2000 Madri Catholics. Latest statistics credit it with 45 parishes, 127 churches, 3 Madri Missions, 38 mission stations, 2 monasteries of men, 4 convents of men and 50 of women, 48 secular and 53 regular clergy, 30 lay brothers, 520 nuns, 1 seminary, 30 seminarians, 2 colleges for men with 16 teachers and 200 students, 4 colleges for girls with 25 teachers and 390 students, 14 high schools with 56 teachers and a total attendance (boys and girls) of 1100, 57 elementary schools with 210 teachers and 6910 pupils, besides 2 elementary schools for Madri children with 4 teachers and 45 pupils, 3 industrial schools with 14 teachers and 450 pupils and 1 boarding school for Madri girls with 3 teachers and 50 pupils. The charitable institutions include 3 homes, 1 Catholic women's hostel and 1 day nursery; 23 public institutions permit the priests to minister in them and two of the Catholic homes receive government grants. Two societies are formed among the clergy and ten among the laity.

WERNZ, FRANZ XAVER, General of the Society of Jesus, and distinguished canonist, b. on 4 December, 1842, at Rottweill, Württemberg; d. at Rome on 20 August, 1914. He entered the Jesuit novitiate on 5 December, 1852, and was professed on 2 February, 1876. He was professor of canon law at the Gregorian University in 1883, and its rector in 1904, and was elected to the office of general on 8 September, 1906. He died in August, 1914. Since 1908, he had been consultor of the Congregations of the Holy Office, of the Consistorial, of the Index, and of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, and from 25 April, 1904, he was a member of the Commission for the codification of canon law. His obsequies were held at the Gesù six days after his death.

West Virginia (cf. C. E., XV—605a).—The area of the State is 24,170 square miles, of which 24,022 square miles are land and 148 square miles are water. In 1920 the population was 1,463,701, an increase of 19.9 since 1910. Of this 74.8 per cent was rural, 25.2 per cent urban. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile was 60.9 as against 50.8 in 1910. There are 34 cities, of which the largest with their respective populations are: Wheeling 56,206; Huntington 50,177; Charleston 39,608; Clarksburg 27,869. The composition of the population is as follows: whites 1,377,235; negroes 86,345; the native whites numbered 1,315,329, of which 1,232,857 were of native parentage, 56,625 of foreign parentage, and 25,847 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born, 61,906 in all, came chiefly from Italy (14,147), Austria (5115), Poland (5799), England (3433), Russia (3911). Of the population ten years of age and over (1,083,395) 6.4 per cent, or 69,413, were illiterate.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Although the number of farms in 1920 shows a decrease of farming land, the 87,289 farms in the State were valued at 57.7 per cent more than in 1910. The land in farms is $9,569,790; the value of all farm property, $496,439,617; of live stock, $67,261,153. The production and value of the leading crops in 1920 were as follows: hay 1,099,679 bushels, $23,746,574; corn 17,010,357 bushels, $29,768,131; wheat 3,747,812 bushels, $8,395,097; oats 3,054,668 bushels, $3,054,668; rye 186,709 bushels, $326,749; buckwheat 537,883 bushels, $860,616; potatoes 2,809,398 bushels, $6,461,619; tobacco 7,587,052 pounds, $2,731,338; fruit $9,962,747. The railroad mileage in the State is 3892, exclusive of the electric railways covering 660 miles of track. The assessed value of real property in 1919 was $767,653,310; and of personal property, $372,631,062. The total bonded indebtedness of the State was $13,500,000 on 1 January, 1920.

Mining.—In 1918 there were 89,933,839 tons of coal mined; 3,349,761 tons of coke. The production of mineral gas was worth $57,389,161; of clay products $9,608,065. The petroleum wells yielded 8,117,300 barrels, valued at $49,078,000. The State ranks second in the production of coal.

Manufacturing.—A preliminary statement of the 1919 census of manufactures in the State reveals 2784 establishments, with 93,812 persons engaged in manufacture, earning a total of $120,047,000, producing goods valued at $471,982,000. The capital invested was $340,119,000.

EDUCATION.—In 1919 the Barnes Educational Code of 1916 was amended and re-enacted. It provides for a State Board of Education, to consist of a State superintendent, ex-officio, and six members appointed for six years by the Governor. An advisory council is created to assist in policies for the education of colored youth. The State Board has general control over the State University, normal and agricultural schools, the vocational school, collegiate institute, colored institute and the schools for the deaf, blind, and all State educational institutions. The State superintendent is elected for four years by the qualified voters, also a county superintendent for each county. The district Board of Education consists of three members and as a corporation can hold school property, provide school sites, buildings, equipment, and can appoint one school trustee for each sub-district. The minimum school term is now 130 days, but will be increased ten days each year until 1924, when it will be 160 days. Children not less than seven nor more than fourteen years of age must attend school, also those between fourteen and sixteen years of age who are not lawfully employed. Those who are employed are expected to attend evening or part time school at least 5 hours a week for 20 weeks, if such school is in session within two miles from a child's residence. Any district may issue bonds for sites, buildings, etc., by three-fifths of the votes cast. The laws governing private and parochial schools are as follows: The basic language of instruction in the common school branches in public and private schools shall be the English language only. Private schools, to be lawfully attended by children of compulsory education age, must be approved. They must furnish to district boards reports relative to attendance and instruction. The term of the approved private school must be equal to that of the public school. The property used for educational, literary, scientific, religious or charitable purposes may be exempted from taxation (X.—1).

In 1920 the 6978 public elementary schools had 341,977 enrolled pupils and 10,978 teachers, and the 172 public high schools had 1129 teachers and 18,512 pupils. The six public normal schools had 123 teachers and 2282 students in 1917. The expenditure on education in 1920 was $11,291,536. In 1920 the number of children of school age was 515,423, of whom 321,191 attended school. The value of all property used for school purposes was $20,245,822; while $5,836,335 was spent for maintenance. Included in the State institutions are: 6 State hospitals, an Industrial School for Boys at Pruntytown, a Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Terra Alta, a Colored Tuberculosis Sanitarium at Denmar, a Children's Home at Elkins, and a Colored Orphan's Home at Huntington.

RELIGION.—The latest (1916) Census of Religious Denominations gives the following statistics: all denominations, 427,865 members; Methodist Episcopalians 82,551; Baptists, Northern Convention, 62,459; Catholics 60,337; Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 53,020; United Brethren in Christ 29,426; Disciples of Christ 10,227; Methodist-Protestant Church 18,948; Baptists, National Convention, 16,238; Presbyterians 27,349. The value of church property was $15,472,996. For Catholic statistics see the articles on the dioceses of WHEELING and RICHMOND.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—The question of the Virginia debt rose with the formation of West Virginia and has been an important issue in recent politics. At the time of its separation from Virginia, the new State agreed to assume a just portion of the public debt of Virginia prior to 1861. Various negotiations failed to adjust it, as there were divers judgments, some in favor of West Virginia and some against. Virginia instituted suit in the Supreme Court, which tentatively fixed West Virginia's share of the debt at $7,182,507.48, leaving the question of interest for later adjustment. West Virginia then created a West Virginia Debt Commission to reduce if possible the amount of the debt, preparatory to contingent arrangements for payment. On 14 June, 1915, the Court issued a judgment against West Virginia for $12,393,929.50, including accrued interest and for 5 per cent thereafter until paid. In June, 1916, Virginia asked the Supreme Court for a writ of execution by levy on public property in West Virginia. This the court denied in order to give West Virginia a reasonable opportunity to pay the judgment. In February, 1917, Virginia filed application for a writ of mandamus against the Legislature of West Virginia to compel a levy of a tax to pay the judgment. On 1 January, 1919, the debt was $14,562,867.16. In March West Virginia agreed to pay $1,062,867 in cash and arranged to pay the rest by an issue of bonds.

West Virginia has been the scene of several strikes, those of 1911 at Cabin Creek and Paint Creek and the collieries of Kanawha Valley were serious enough to call out the militia and to cause martial law to be declared. On this occasion the miners won the strike, nearly every one of their demands being granted. Recent legislation includes a state wide prohibition amendment to the constitution (1912), an inheritance tax (1913), the creation of a Public Utilities Commission, a workmen's Compensation Act (1913), the establishment of a State Roads Commission (1915), of a Board of Children's Guardians (1919), to receive and place neglected boys under sixteen and girls under eighteen, a Child Welfare Commission (1921), also a Bureau of Negro Welfare and Statistics (1921), the establishment of a State industrial school for colored boys from ten to eighteen years of age. The age of consent was raised to sixteen in 1921. The marking of the West Virginia-Maryland Boundary was finished in 1912. Ratification of the Federal suffrage Amendment was defeated on 12 February, 1920; but the prohibition amendment was ratified on 10 January, 1918. During the European War the United States Government completed at an expense of $60,000,000 two great war industries, a projectile plant at Charleston and a high explosives plant at Nitro, sixteen miles down the Kanawha.

At the time of the trouble with Mexico in 1916 the Second infantry regiment of the West Virginia Militia was called into the United States service for duty on the Mexican border and after remaining in the State mobilization camp at Kanawha City, Charleston, West Virginia, until the middle of October, when it was sent to San Antonio (Fort Sam Houston). Here the regiment remained until it was returned to the State and mustered out. When the war with Germany broke out the entire militia was drafted into service, received their training at Camp Shelby, Mississippi, and joined the American Expeditionary Forces. The West Virginia members of the national army were incorporated into the 80th Division at Camp Lee, Virginia. In all, West Virginia contributed 55,777 soldiers (1.48 per cent) to the United States Army.

Westminster, ARCHDIOCESE OF (WESTMONASTERIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—592d), erected and made metropolitan in 1850 when it comprised the counties of Middlesex, Hertfordshire, Essex and London north of the Thames. In 1917 the county of Essex was formed into the separate diocese of Brentwood. The suffragan sees of Westminster are Brentwood, Northampton, Nottingham, Portsmouth and Southwark.

During the World War Cardinal Bourne in his capacity of Archbishop of Westminster stood forth as the representative and spokesman of the Catholics of the British Empire, and his patriotic services and statesmanlike utterances commanded universal respect. Besides taking the lead in providing the very large number of military and naval chaplains required, he paid personal visits repeatedly to the front and to the fleet. Finally he undertook a journey through the East in which he did much to allay apprehensions and remove misunderstandings. The public position he won himself before the non-Catholic public was shown in the confidence placed in him by the ministers of state, by his election to the Athenaeum Club under special circumstances of honor, and notably on the occasion of his episcopal silver jubilee in 1921, when he received messages of congratulation testifying to the esteem in which he was held by the rulers and representatives of foreign powers as well as those of his own country, men of all classes and creeds joining in this manifestation of good will. Since the war he has carried out extensive works at the diocesan seminary, St. Edmund's College, Old Hall, where he has spent many thousands of pounds in thoroughly repairing and largely remodelling the college buildings, some of which date back to the Eighteenth Century. As his own personal act of thanksgiving to God for the victory won by the Allies he has added to the college church, at his private expense, a spacious and beautiful jubilee chapel. In 1918 he issued a notable pastoral on the Social Question which continues to influence recent Catholic thought and writings on this momentous subject. The same year on 27 August, one of the Archbishop's Auxiliaries died and his successor as provost was Rt. Rev. Joseph Butt, who was consecrated titular Bishop of Cambrsopolis 24 February, 1911. The second auxiliary, Rt. Rev. Manuel Bidwell, was consecrated titular Bishop of Miletopolis 8 December, 1917.

Besides the diocesan seminary, St. Edmund's College Hall, and the foreign missionary college at Mill Hill, there are in the diocese: a training college for men teachers in elementary schools, and eight other institutions engaged in secondary education. For girls there are 60 secondary schools and 1 training college for teachers. Public elementary schools number 88, of which 84 (including 151 departments) receive government grants. In 1920-21 there were 27,904 children on the books of these schools, the figures in previous editions of the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA for 1890 and 1900 include schools now in the diocese of Brentwood. Amongst residential charitable institutions for children are schools certified by the government, which are under the administration of the Westminster Diocesan Education Fund, and are used Jointly by the two dioceses of Westminster and Brentwood; 1 reformatory, 2 industrial schools, 9 for Poor Law children and 8 schools for opthalmic, mentally deficient, crippled and epileptic children; 4 orphanages under the Rescue Society. Other charitable institutions include many other homes and orphanages for poor children, 5 refuges for penitents, a night refuge, 4 asylums for aged poor, 2 almshouses and 4 hospitals.

Much work is done amongst the poor by the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, the Ladies of Charity and other organizations of the laity. Other societies watch over the interests of certain classes. Such are: the Converts' Aid Society (for converted clergymen), the Catholic Soldiers' and Seamen's Associations, the Prisoners' Aid Society and the International Catholic Society for befriending girls. The Catholic periodicals published include "The Tablet," the "Dublin Review" and the "Catholic Directory."

Among the religious communities of men established in the archdiocese are: Augustinians, Augustinians of the Assumption, Benedictines, Canons Regular of the Lateran, Discalced Carmelites, Catholic Missionary Society, Congregation of the Mission, Dominicans, Fathers of Charity, Jesuits, Marist Fathers, Missionaries of the Sacred Heart, Oblates of Mary Immaculate, Oblates of St. Charles, Oratorians, Passionists, Pious Society of Missions, Redemptorists, Fathers of St. Edmund (Pontigny), St. Joseph's Society for Foreign Missions, Salesians, Salvatorians, Servites, Scheut Fathers, Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, Alexian Brothers, Brothers of Mercy and Marist Brothers. Women: Adoration of the Sacred Heart, Adoration Reparatrice, Assumption, Bon Secours, Bon Secours (of Troyes), Canonesses of St. Augustine, Carmelites, Daughters of the Cross, Dominicans, English Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Faithful Companions, Filles de Jésus, Franciscans, Good Shepherd, Handmaids of the Sacred Heart, Helpers of the Holy Souls, Holy Child, Immaculate Conception, Our Lady of the Retreat, Jesus and Mary, Little Company of Mary, Little Sisters of the Assumption, Little Sisters of the Poor, Marie Auxiliatrice, Marie Reparatrice, Marist Sisters, Most Holy Cross and Passion, Most Holy Sacrament, Notre Dame, Notre Dame de Sion, Poor Clares, Poor Handmaids of Jesus, Poor Servants of the Mother of God, Poor Sisters of Nazareth, Filles de la Sagesse, Sainte Union, Servants of the Sacred Heart, Sisters of Charity (4 congregations with 17 convents), Sisters of Hope, of Mary and Joseph, of Mercy, of Providence, of St. Joseph, of St. Martha, of St. Martin, of St. Mary, of the Christian Retreat, of the Holy Family, of the Poor Child Jesus, of the Sacred Heart, of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary, Society of the Sacred Heart, Sisters Misericorde, Ursulines, Ursulines of Jesus, Visitation, Augustinian Sisters of Meaux, Daughters of Providence, Franciscan Missionaries of Mary, Sisters of Our Lady of the Missions, of St. Gildas and of Loreto. According to latest statistics there are in the archdiocese: 487 priests (190 regulars), 150 churches, 41 communities of men, 141 communities of women. The Catholic population numbers 260,000 out of a total population of 4,115,461.

Wettingen-Mehrerau, ABBACY NULLIUS OF; cf. C. E., XV—607b).—In the general chapter of 7 Sept., 1920, the abbot of Wettingen, Mgr. Cassian Hald (elected abbot August 1919), was elected abbot general of the entire Cistercian Order. During the world war 15 clerics and 34 lay brothers served in the army, and 6 priests attended the wounded. Among the recently deceased are: Dominic Willi, professed Prior of Wettingen-Mehrerau, Abbot of the restored monastery of Marienstatt, elected Bishop of Limburg in 1898, died 6 Jan., 1913. Abbot Eugene Rotz of Wettingen-Mehrerau, died 7 Aug., 1917. Abbot Conrad Kolb, professed, elected Abbot of Marienstatt 25 Aug., 1898, died 21 May, 1918. The abbey has 93 priests, and 70 lay brothers; 2 parishes; 3 churches; 1 mission in Birnan in Baden; 2 stations; 3 abbeys for men, and 6 for women; 3 theological seminaries with 10 professors and 20 alumni; 6 colleges for boys with 40 teachers and 360 students; 2 colleges for girls with 20 teachers and 90 students. The 6 colleges include 1 gymnasium, 2 schools for oblates, 1 commercial school and 1 agricultural school. A Catholic periodical is published called "Cistercienser-Chronik."

Wheeling, DIOCESE OF (WHEELINGENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—608a), comprises 21,355 square miles in the state of West Virginia, and 7817 square miles in the state of Virginia. It is under the administration of its third bishop, Rt. Rev. Patrick James Donahue, born in Great Malvern, England, in 1849 and appointed bishop 22 January, 1894. In 1913 the vicar general of the diocese, Very Rev. Monsignor Joseph Mullen died, on 24 November, and he has been succeeded by Very Rev. O. H. Moye. Another influential member of the clergy was lost to the diocese by the death of Rev. John W. Werninger, first president of St. Edward's College at Huntington, West Virginia, 28 November, 1919. In the West Virginia section of the diocese the progress has been especially marked in recent years; a large new church and parochial school have been built in Weston, a new parochial school at Clarksburg has been placed in charge of the Xaverian Brothers, at Moundsville a new parochial school and church have also been built, and a Polish school and church, as well as a church for English speaking people, have been erected at Weirton. A new hospital known as St. Francis Hospital, at Charlestown, is in charge of the Sisters of St. Joseph, and extensive additions have been made to the Wheeling and St. Mary's Hospitals. The Catholic population of this territory, which totals approximately 63,000, is composed of about ten prominent nationalities, the largest proportion being Italians, Germans, Poles and Hungarians. The diocese comprises 71 parishes, 113 churches, 86 missions, 4 monasteries for women, 2 convents of men and 6 of women, 86 secular and 27 regular clergy, 25 lay brothers, 332 nuns, 30 seminarians, 1 college for men with 50 teachers and 40 students, 11 high schools with 54 teachers and 125 pupils, 5 academies with 30 teachers and 720 pupils (girls), 1 training school with 4 teachers and 35 pupils, 81 elementary schools with 125 teachers and 4500 pupils, 1 missionary work, 5 homes and 6 hospitals. Three societies are formed among the clergy, and 17 associations are organized among the laity; one Catholic periodical is published. During the World War four of the clergy of the diocese served as chaplains, and from the large number of the laity who served, about fifty gave their lives in the service.

White, EDWARD DOUGLASS, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, b. at Lafourche, Louisiana, on 3 November, 1825; d. at Washington on 19 May, 1921; son of Edward and Catherine S. (Ringgold) White, his father being well known as the seventh governor of Louisiana. He studied at Mount St. Mary's, Emmitsburg, the Jesuit College in New Orleans, and Georgetown University; but before graduating he enlisted in the Confederate Army during the Civil War. In 1868, he was admitted to the Louisiana Bar, thus following in the footsteps of his father and grandfather, both lawyers of distinction, and six years later he was elected a State Senator. In 1897, he was appointed to the bench of the Supreme Court, of Louisiana, a position he filled with distinction for thirteen years, when he was elected to the United States Senate. In 1894, he was appointed associate justice of the United States Supreme Court by President Cleveland, and on 12 December, 1910, was named Chief Justice by President Taft, the first instance in which a president named a chief justice of a different political affiliation. Coming from Louisiana where the civil, not the common, law is the basis of jurisprudence, White is considered to have been the greatest authority on the civil law who has graced the United States Supreme Court bench. In cases involving the Government he was a federalist in his decisions, for instance in the insular cases, though he delivered a minority decision against it in the famous Northern Securities case. He received the Lætare Medal from the University of Notre Dame in 1914, and at the time of his death he was chancellor of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

White Fathers, (MISSIONARIES OF OUR LADY OF AFRICA OF ALGIERS; cf. C. E., XV—613d).—A society of secular priests living in community, and laboring for the conversion of Africa. At present the missionaries have under their care the Prefecture Apostolic of Ghardaia and the vicariates apostolic of Uganda, Victoria-Nyanza, Kivu, Unyanyembe, Tanganyika, Nyassa, Banguelo, Upper Congo, Bamoko, and Waghadugu. The two last were erected in 1921 by division of the Prefecture Apostolic of Sahara. Recruiting houses for the society are in Quebec (Canada), Belgium, Holland, Germany, Italy, Luxemburg, Switzerland, and France, in which are received those not yet ready for the novitiate. Those desiring to become priests are admitted to the novitiate after their philosophical studies and one year of general theology. They complete their studies and are ordained at the scholasticate of Carthage in Tunis. The superior general, Mgr. Livinhac, titular Archbishop of Oxrychnus, resides at Maison Carrée near Algiers. In July, 1921, the society numbered: 15 bishops, 1 prefect apostolic, 645 priests, 225 brothers, 75 novices, with 100 pupils in the theological classes. In the houses of postulants for the novitiate were 90 pupils. The number of neophytes in all the vicariates (June, 1920), was 305,154, and the number preparing for baptism was 120,560. There were 1400 Christians in the mission established by the White Fathers among the Berbers of Jurjura (Algeria), in June, 1921; the regions bordering on the great lakes and the Sudan show the best results. The number of boys and girls in the schools under instruction of the White Fathers in June, 1920, was 64,096 and 38,758 respectively. In 1921 the French Government named Fr. Van der Vliet, missionary in Jerusalem, Knight of the Legion of Honor, in recognition of his services during the World War. Being of Dutch origin, he was permitted to remain in Jerusalem, where he was able to aid the French religious expelled from the Holy Land and to guard from profanation the Basilica and Seminary of St. Anne.

White Sisters (MISSIONARY SISTERS OF OUR LADY OF AFRICA).—A religious congregation established by Cardinal Archbishop Lavigerie of Algiers to aid the White Fathers in their evangelization of Africa. The first eight aspirants from Brittany, France, were trained in the religious life by the Sisters of the Congregation of St. Charles of Nancy, one of whom had brought them safely to Algiers. The rules of their institutes were drawn up by Archbishop Lavigerie, and after a strict novitiate the candidates received the habit from him. Other postulants from France joined them, but some found the life too severe and returned to their native land. The first mission party was formed in 1873 and sent to the village of St. Cyprien des Attafs, where the archbishop had purchased an allotment, intending that the first Arab Christians would settle there under the immediate control of the White Fathers. The Sisters were to teach the women to take care of their new homes and to bring up their children in a Christian manner. In 1876 St. Elizabeth's Hospital was established and there the Sisters still nurse their numerous Arab patients. A year later the station of Ste. Monique was founded nearby; then came the mission of Les Oud Thias in Kabylia, Beni-Ismaïl and Djemaa-Saharidj in the same province. In 1882 the Sisters were installed at La Marsa, near Carthage, where they opened a school, an asylum for bereaved women, and an orphanage for European girls. The Sisters were insufficient in number to respond to the many calls for new mission stations, and recruiting houses were opened in Lyons and Paris, at Maestricht in Holland, and Herent in Belgium. At the death of Cardinal Lavigerie in 1892, the congregation was confided to the care of its superior general, Mother Marie Salomé. The mistress of novices had received a special blessing from the cardinal for her little flock.

In 1893 the Sisters were at work in 11 stations. They are under the spiritual guidance of the White Fathers, and have established their works in the following vicariates confided to the care of these missionaries: Upper Congo, Tanganyika, Victoria-Nyanza, Unyanyembe, Nyassa, Uganda, Kivu, Banguelo, Bamoko, and Waghadugu; and in the prefecture apostolic of Ghardaia. They have established schools, workrooms, dispensaries, hospitals, leper-hospitals, and asylums. In the villages of the Kabyles they have infant-schools and workrooms where women and girls learn plain sewing and carpet weaving and the sick are nursed in the Hospital of Ste. Eugénie. In 1910 the the French Red Cross inaugurated an important dispensary in Tunis and several White Sisters act as nurses. The Sisters also have orphanages, workrooms, and dispensaries in the protectorate.

The congregation has grown and prospered. At present there are 550 professed nuns staffed in 64 posts, the greater number being situated in British East and Central Africa. An aspirant to the order must have completed her sixteenth year and not be over thirty-five. Widows are not admitted. Abnegation of self is the most valuable virtue for a missionary Sister. After a postulate of several months the aspirant is admitted to the novitiate at Algiers, and makes her first vows at the end of eighteen months. These vows are renewed annually for five years, when the Sisters are admitted to perpetual profession. There are no lay Sisters in the community; each and all are employed in manual or apostolic labor according to their strength and aptitudes or the will of the superiors. Common life is a rule, the constitutions prescribing that a community must never reckon less than three members. In distant mission posts there are usually four or five Sisters so as to fill the vacant place in case of sickness or other unforeseen necessity. Though superfluity is obviously banished from the Sisters' livelihood, the necessary has never failed them, and since the inauguration of the railway in British East Africa and elsewhere the means of existence have been greatly facilitated. A simple habitation, and plain, nutritious and sufficient food are provided. The religious costume is composed of a white robe and scapular; a wimple and a white veil indoors and on the mission; in European centres the Sisters wear a black veil and mantle over their white robe whenever they go abroad. They also wear a silver crucifix attached to a red silk cord on the breast, and the rosary beads, black and white, are suspended at the belt. The Sisters undertake deeds of mercy and charity of every kind in behalf of the African natives, and follow daily spiritual exercises.

The mother general, aided by several assistants, rules the congregation and is under the direct authority of the Holy See, though each community, including the mother-house, is under the jurisdiction of the ordinaries in their respective dioceses. A postulate has been opened in Levis, P. Q., Canada, to receive aspirants from North and South America. The congregation received a laudatory Brief in 1887, was conditionally approved for five years in 1888, this approbation being received in 1897 and 1901, and was definitively approved 14 Dec., 1909.

Wichita, DIOCESE OF (WICHITENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—616h), in Kansas, suffragan of St. Louis. Bishop Hennessy died 13 July, 1920, and was succeeded by Rt. Rev. Aug. J. Schwertner, installed 22 June, 1921. The city of Wichita now has a population of 78,000, about 5000 of whom are Catholics. There are in the diocese 85 secular and 25 regular priests, 81 churches with resident pastors, 60 missions with churches, 8 hospitals, 49 parish schools (4 in Wichita), with 4862 pupils, 1 high school with 13 pupils, 3 academies with 470 pupils, and a Catholic population of 37,000. The Redemptorists are now included among the religious orders of men and the Loretto Sisters and Franciscan Sisters among the women. A weekly called the "Catholic Advance" is the diocesan organ. Three of the diocesan priests served as chaplains during the war.

Wilhelm, JOSEPH, theologian; b. at Montzen, Belgium in 1845; d. at Aachen, Germany on 4 February, 1920. He studied at the University of Liège and in the German College and Gregorian University, Rome, and was ordained in 1870. He subsequently taught philosophy for nine years, and was engaged in parish work in the diocese of Southwark, England, for thirty years, being rector at Shoreham from 1886 till 1899, and later at Battle (1900-11). He returned to Aachen in 1911 where he died. He is the author of "The Family of Grace: Pedigrees and historical Records from 1000; to 1911"; "Manual of Dogmatic Theology" (2 vols., in collaboration with T. B. Scannell); "The Catholic's Manual," a translation of Pesch's "Das religiöse Leben"; he collaborated on "The Catholic Dictionary"; the CATHOLIC ENCYCLOPEDIA, and contributed to various Catholic reviews like the "Linzer theologische Quartalschrift," and "Catholic Fortnightly Review" (St. Louis); in addition he assisted in producing the English version of Janssen's "Geschichte des deutschen Volkes," and was editor of the "International Catholic Library."

Will and Testament of Clerics (cf. C. E., XV—626d).—Among the privileges now granted to cardinals is the right to dispose as they list, even by will, of the fruits of their benefices, with the following limitations: If any cardinal domiciled in Rome dies his sacred equipment—excepting his rings and pectoral crosses whether or not containing relics—and whatever is intended permanently for divine worship, no matter by what source of income it was obtained, are to go to the pontifical treasury, unless the cardinal has donated or bequeathed them to a church, a public oratory, a pious place, or to an ecclesiastic or religious. The Holy See, however, expresses the hope that he will make his titular church the beneficiary. If a residential bishop, even though he be a cardinal, dies, his sacred equipment must go to his cathedral; however, this regulation does not apply to his rings or pectoral cross, even if they have relics, though if there are relics of the Holy Cross in his pectoral cross, the relics are to be delivered to his successor—nor does it apply to objects not got with ecclesiastical funds or already turned over as church property. If the bishop governed two dioceses in succession or united dioceses, these objects should be returned to the various cathedrals according to the source of the origin of the money with which they were acquired, or if the united dioceses have a common revenue, they should be divided equally between them. Bishops, therefore, should leave a statement showing what property was obtained through their private funds or by donations, otherwise it will be presumed by the canon law that the property was acquired with revenues derived from the Church. What is said about residential bishops applies also to any cleric who holds a secular or religious benefice.

Novices in religious congregations, before making their temporary vows, must make a will disposing freely of whatever property they have then or may acquire later. After their simple profession they cannot lawfully change this will (validity is not in question) without leave of the Holy See or, in case of urgency, of a higher or even of a local superior; but a change giving the religious institute a notable part of the property, say about 20 to 25 per cent, is forbidden. As the Code does not refer to wills made in religious orders by those having only simple vows, the matter must be decided by the Constitutions of the various bodies which ordinarily allow such religious to dispose freely of their property by will.

Wilmington, DIOCESE OF (WILMINGTONIENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—646d), including the State of Delaware, nine counties of Maryland and two of Virginia east of Chesapeake Bay. Bishop Monaghan, who succeeded in 1897, still governs the diocese, which now has 31 parishes, 20 missions, 40 stations, 31 parish churches, 1 monastery for women, 19 convents for women, 38 secular priests, 21 regulars, 1 lay brother, 213 nuns, 15 seminarians, 3 high schools, 3 academies, 14 elementary schools with 127 teachers and an attendance of 4988, 1 colored industrial school with 5 teachers and an attendance of 664. There are three asylums and one home for the aged. A diocesan benevolent association and the Priests' Eucharistic League are organized among the clergy and among the laity the Knights of Columbus, the Daughters of America, the Society for the Propagation of the Faith and parish sodalities. The Catholic population of 34,300 includes Americans, Irish, German, English, English-Scots, Italians, Poles, Greeks, Spaniards, Portuguese, Bohemians and Ruthenians. During the war eight priests of the diocese were in the service: One was chaplain at the naval base at Lewes, Del., where he died of the influenza in the service of his men. Four served at the front in France, one of whom, while acting as a chaplain, was wounded; the other three served as regular soldiers in the French army. The remaining three acted as chaplains in the different camps in the United States. Rt. Rev. John Lyons, V. G., died 3 April, 1916.

Winnipeg, ARCHDIOCESE OF (WINNIPEGENSIS), erected 4 December, 1915, comprises that portion of the province of Manitoba, Canada, situated to the south of the line which divides townships 44 and 45, and to the west of Lake Winnipeg and the Red River, except that territory lying south of the line which divides townships 9 and 10, and east of the meridian between the 12th and 13th ranges west of the principal meridian. The first archbishop is Most Rev. Alfred Arthur Sinnott, born in Morell, diocese of Charlotte, town, 22 February, 1877; he made his studies in Charlottetown and in Rome and was ordained in Montreal in 1900. Named private chamberlain in 1907 he became secretary to the apostolic delegation of Canada, and was appointed archbishop 9 December, 1915. The Jesuits, Oblate Fathers of Mary Immaculate and Redemptorists are established in the archdiocese as well as the Gray Sisters, Sisters of St. Joseph, of the Holy Names of Jesus and Mary, of Mercy, Franciscan Sisters Missionaries of Mary, Benedictine Sisters, and Sisters of Our Lady of the Missions. The territory has a Catholic population of 40,000, and counts 46 secular and 18 regular clergy, 10 seminarians, 38 churches with resident priests, 55 mission chapels, 12 parochial schools, 11 convents, 2 orphanages, 1 hospital, 2 asylums and 2 boarding schools for Indians.

Winona, DIOCESE OF (WINONENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—658b), in Minnesota, suffragan of St. Paul. The present bishop is the Rt. Rev. Patrick R. Heffron, who has administered the diocese since 1910. According to the statistics of 1922 the diocese contained: 86 churches with resident priests, 38 missions, 117 secular priests, 7 regulars, 35 seminarians who are being educated in seminaries of other dioceses, 1 orphan asylum, and 4 hospitals. The educational institutions are: 1 college for boys (205 students), 1 college for women (453 students), 3 academies for young ladies, 28 high schools (1278 students), 40 parish schools (7210 pupils), 1 school for small boys (45 pupils). The Catholics number 68,800.

Wisconsin (cf. C. E., XV—66b).—The area of the State is 56,066 square miles. In 1920 the population was 2,632,067, an increase of 12.8% since the census of 1910. Between 1900 and 1910 the increase was also 12.8%. Of this, 47.3% was urban; 52.7% was rural. The average number of persons to the square mile is 47.6 as against 42.2 in 1910. There are 132 cities, of which the largest are: Milwaukee, with a population of 457,147; Racine 58,593; Kenosha 40,472; Superior 39,671; Madison 38,378. There are four Indian reservations. The native whites number 2,156,810, of whom 1,054,691 are of native parentage, 736,051 of foreign parentage, 366,065 of mixed parentage. The foreign born whites, 460,128 in all, came chiefly from Germany (151,250), Norway (45,433), Sweden (22,866), Russia (21,447), Austria, (19,641), Italy (11,187). There are 5201 negroes and 9611 Indians. Of the population of ten years and over (2,069,567), there were 50,397 illiterates (2.4%).

ECONOMIC STATUS.—According to the Agricultural Census of 1920, there were in the State 189,295 farms, an increase of 12,163 since 1910. The land area in farms is 22,148,223 acres; the value of all farm property, $2,677,282,997; of live stock $322,312,115; of the crops $445,387,868. The chief crops of the State are: oats 68,296,223 bushels, valued at $58,051,788; corn 44,547,398 bushels, valued at $64,593,729; hay $105,006,816; tobacco 52,454,246 pounds, $11,539,932. In 1920 there were in the State 3,050,829 cattle, including 2,763,483 milch cows, 683,364 horses, 479,991 sheep, and 1,596,419 swine. The wool cut was 3,191,940 pounds, worth $1,691,728. The dairy products brought $180,306,599 to the State. The summary of manufactures for the State in 1919 reveals the following statistics: establishments 10,394; wage earners 265,200; capital $1,372,723,000; cost of materials $1,130,835,000; value of products $1,883,608,000. Zinc is the chief mineral product. Iron, granite, limestone, sandstone, and graphite are also mined. The railway mileage is 7632. Milwaukee is a port of entry, its imports in 1919 being $4,367,381; its exports $999,934. The bonded debt of the State in 1920 was $1,935,000; the assessed value of property in 1919, $298,538,152.

RELIGION.—The Federal Census of Religious Denominations in 1916 gave the following figures: Catholics 594,836; Lutherans 233,685; Methodists 65,364; Congregationalists 30,534; Baptists 21,464.

For details of Catholic information see the articles on MILWAUKEE; GREEN BAY; LA CROSSE; SUPERIOR.

EDUCATION.—In 1913 the county educational system was reorganized under a county board of education, which had extensive control over rural, elementary, and high schools. Two additional institutions were provided at the same time, an Industrial Home for Women in Fond-du-Lac County, and a Home for Feeble-minded and Epileptic in Racine County. The laws governing private and parochial schools include the following: All teachers of private and parochial schools shall keep a record embodying all the data enumerated in this subsection [regarding attendance] and such record shall be open to the inspection of all truant officers at any and all reasonable times. School attendance is compulsory for all children between the ages of seven and fourteen years, in cities for the entire year; in towns and villages for 6 months a year. Children between fourteen and seventeen, who are regularly employed, must attend industrial or continuation schools, 8 hours a week. In 1919-20 there were in the elementary schools, 14,122 teachers and 405,467 students; in the high schools, 3179 teachers and 59,776 students. The total expenditure of the State for educational purposes in 1919-20 was $21,385,791; of which upwards of $17,000,000 was spent on the common schools, high schools, and graded schools. There are 26 day schools for the deaf and in 1918 out of 377 high schools, there were 65 union and 3 consolidated high schools. A State Library Commission maintains circulating free school libraries comprising more than 1,900,000 volumes. There are 8222 school houses. The University of Wisconsin, with a student enrollment of 6872, received from the State in the year ending 30 June, 1918, a total of $1,108,390; this, with the students' tuition fees ($550,000), and other sources of income brought the grand total of university receipts up to $2,901,453. Marquette University has 3000 students. It is estimated that there are over 73,000 children in the Catholic parochial schools in the State. The orphan asylums harbor nearly 1300 children.

RECENT HISTORY AND LEGISLATION.—In 1913 a minimum wage law was passed to be administered by the State Industrial Commission. In the same year all male persons were required to pass a medical examination before marriage. This was declared unconstitutional by the Circuit Courts, but the Supreme Court upheld it, saying that it was a valid exercise of police power. Mothers' pensions were provided for, but are not extended to children of divorced parents. A bonus was given in 1919 to war veterans, $10 a month, also free education in the institutions of the State by means of $30 a month. A law was also passed exempting labor, agricultural, and horticultural organizations instituted for the purpose of mutual help and not having a capital or conducted for profit, from the anti-trust laws. This gave labor unions the right to organize. A State Board of Conciliation was established. The Federal Suffrage Amendment was ratified on 10 June, 1919; the Prohibition Act, 17 January, 1919.

During the European War Wisconsin's draft returns were reported first of all the States. She originated the State and County Councils of Defence and the observation of meatless and wheatless days. The entire Wisconsin National Guard saw service at the border of Mexico in 1916, being stationed at a camp near Fort Houston, San Antonio, Texas. As a result, they were seasoned soldiers when they were called into Federal Service. The National Guard mobilized at Fort Douglas. Some companies of the infantry were transferred to the 42d Division, Rainbow Division, and as the 150th Gun Battalion, was sent to Camp Mills, Long Island, for preliminary training before being sent to France. The other troops were incorporated into the 32d Division and sent to Camp McArthur. On the way to France some were lost by the torpedoing of the transport steamer "Tuscania," near the coast of Ireland. The others moved to the front line in Alsace, taking over the entrenchments facing Altkirch and Muhlbhausen, then near Chateau Thierry, to relieve the Third Division. They were also at Fismes and Verdun. The Wisconsin members of the National Army were incorporated into the 85th Division and entrained at Camp Custer, Michigan. On the whole the State contributed 98,211 soldiers or 2.61% of the U. S. Army. The summary of casualties among the Wisconsin members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 111 officers, 2,538 men; prisoners, 6 officers, 72 men; wounded, 285 officers, 6,801 men.

Wonsan, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (DE WONSAN), in Corea. This vicariate was erected by a decree of 5 August, 1920, which divided the Vicariate of Seoul and took the northeastern provinces to constitute the new vicariate, which became the third vicariate apostolic of Corea. It comprises the provinces of South Hamyong and North Hamyong which have a population of 1,760,000. It is entrusted to the Benedictine Fathers who found only 550 Catholics there when they began their work at the outset of 1921. This small flock is served from two mission stations, one at Wonsan, the other at Naipiong; at the former there is one priest assisted by three lay brothers, while at Naipiong there is only one priest. The vicar, Rt. Rev. Boniface Sauer, appointed titular Bishop of Appiaria 25 August, 1920, returned to Corea in 1921 with six more priests, and they, with 14 lay brothers (5 of them Corean postulants) are still in Seoul, where the Europeans are studying the difficult language, but as soon as possible they will be transferred to Wonsan. The Father at Wonsan has opened an elementary school which is attended by 80 boys and 35 girls, mostly pagans.

Würzburg, DIOCESE OF (HERBIPOLENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—718c), in Bavaria, suffragan of Bamberg. The present incumbent is Rt. Rev. Ferdinand de Schloer, b. at Richelback, 2 March, 1839, ordained 10 August, 1862, named 5 March, 1898, consecrated and enthroned 22 May following, assistant at the pontifical throne 1 July, 1918. In 1917 in presence of the Archbishop of Bamberg and the Bishop of Eichstätt the people solemnly celebrated the three hundredth anniversary of Julius Echter von Meselbrunn, the greatest Bishop of Bamberg. The following distinguished clergymen have died since 1909: Dr. Karl Guido Braun, rector, and canon of the cathedral, distinguished for his activity in the field of social science and for the energetic and spirited stand which he took in combating religious errors; Dr. Adam Gopfert, well known for his work on moral theology; Dr. Henry Kihn, dean of the cathedral, at one time professor at the university and author of several well known works on patrology and canon law. During the war the clergy and laity who were not actively engaged at the front, rendered valuable assistance in all fields of war-work. They nursed the sick in the field hospitals, looked after the soldiers at the railroad stations, assisted widows and cared for young children. Many of the pastors supplied their soldier parishioners with literature and were in constant communication with them. Several homes for children were established and an institution for crippled soldiers. Count Karl zu Lowenstein (q. v.), leader of the German Catholic party and for many years chairman of the central committees of the Catholic Congresses, joined the Dominicans in his declining years and received Holy Orders. He died in 1921. In 1921 the diocese contained 456 parishes, 725 churches (about one in every town), 7 mission stations, 25 monasteries for men, 1 Benedictine abbey for men at Munsterschwarzach, 300 convents and foundations for women, with 2725 Sisters, 886 secular priests, 150 regulars, 190 Brothers, 1 diocesan seminary with 70 seminarians, 6 houses of studies. There is 1 university with a Catholic theological faculty, 8 professors, 14 gymnasia. All the schools are under the supervision of the State, but courses are given in religious instruction by regularly appointed professors. In the primary schools the pupils are instructed by the parish priests. There are also 8 higher educational institutions (Höhere schulen), for girls under the supervision of Sisters, several private schools, 1 normal school for teachers, 900 elementary schools, 1750 teachers, 98,000 pupils, 1200 continuation schools, 1397 teachers, 37,500 pupils.

The following institutions exist in the diocese: 1 institution for the deaf and dumb, 1 for the blind, 7 homes for the aged and for apprentices, 1 for cripples, 2 asylums, 2 educational institutions, 3 hospitals (1 at Aschaffenburg, 2 at Würzburg) and aside from these each district has its own hospital, 3 reformatories (1 for boys, 2 for girls), 1 settlement house. Day nurseries under the care of the Sisters have been established in nearly every town. The ministry of priests is permitted in all these institutions. Owing to the hard times, private institutions and schools receive some support from the state. The following associations have been formed among the clergy: Diocesan Association of Priests, Marian Congregation for priests, Apostolic Union, Association for the support of sick and retired priests, Association of the Eucharistic League, Association for Priestly Perseverance, Missionary Association of the World War. The laity have the following associations: Workmen's Association, Associations for journeymen, apprentices, merchants, men and youths, associations for servants, associations for young women, workingwomen, servants, business women, League for Catholic Women. These last do not include the Bonifacius and mission associations or any society or fraternity connected with the church.

UNIVERSITY OF WÜRZBURG.—The following is a summary of the attendance at the University during the winter and summer term of 1919-1920: 104 theological students, 897 law students (11 of whom were women), 1041 medical students (91 women), 481 students of dentistry (27 women), 635 students of philosophy (65 women), 58 students of pharmacy (5 women). In all 3214 matriculated students. To these may be added 47 male auditors (Hörer) and 33 female auditors (Hörerinnen).

Wyoming (cf. C. E., XV—724c).—The area of the State of Wyoming is 97,914 square miles. In 1920 the population was 194,402, an increase of 33.2% since 1910. Of this number 29.5% was urban; 70.5 was rural. The average number of inhabitants to the square mile is 2, as against 1.5 in 1910. There are 21 counties, 7 of which have been organized since 1910. Yellowstone Park is independent of any county organization. There is one Indian reservation. The largest cities are: Cheyenne, with a population of 13,829; Casper, 11,447; Sheridan, 9,175; Rock Springs, 6,456; Laramie, 8,207. Of the whites (190,146), there were 164,891 natives and 25,255 foreign-born. The native whites included 122,884 of native parentage, 25,234 of foreign parentage, 16,255 of mixed parentage. The foreign-born came chiefly from England (2,505), Germany (2,292), and Switzerland (2,042). The population of ten years of age or more numbered 150,993, of whom 3149 (2.1%) were illiterate.

ECONOMIC STATUS.—Manufacturing.—The latest census of manufactures (1919) reveals 576 establishments in Wyoming, 8095 persons employed, earning a total of $12,391,267, and turning out products worth $81,445,394. The capital invested was $82,287,667 and the cost of the materials $42,250,528.

Mining.—The coal output for 1918 was 9,438,688 tons; the iron ore output 543,846 tons. In 1917 2,027,857 pounds of copper, worth $553,606; 8,978,680 barrels of petroleum, worth $11,047,876; and 182 ounces of gold, worth $3,762, were produced.

Agriculture.—Live-stock raising is carried on extensively in the State, the statistics of 1920 being as follows: cattle 869,000 head, valuation $32,640,000; sheep 3,200,000, valuation, $32,640,000; horses 225,000; swine 63,000, worth $1,159,000; mules and asses 4,000, worth $360,000; total value, $87,884,516. The wool product for 1919 was 18,411,773 pounds, valued at $8,064,838. In 1920 there were 15,611 farms (an increase of 43.3% since 1910), having a value of $334,410,590. The crop value in that year was $30,270,630. The railroad mileage is 1924. There are 172 telephone systems, covering 3000 miles of wire.

EDUCATION.—The general supervision of public schools is entrusted to the superintendent of public instruction; county educational matters are under the care of the district board of school trustees; district educational matters under the district board of school trustees. The state Board of Education, created in 1917, is composed of seven members, at least two of whom are actually engaged in educational work. The state superintendent is a member ex-officio, and with the approval of the governor appoints the other members of the board for six years. The State Commissioner of Education is secretary of the board. The law governing private and parochial schools is: No money shall ever be appropriated to any sectarian or religious institution or society. In accordance with recognized interpretation of constitutional law, Bible reading in the public schools is not practised. School attendance for children between the ages of seven and fourteen is compulsory. In October, 1920, the 1477 public schools had 150 male and 1800 female teachers, and 43,077 enrolled pupils (21,376 boys and 21,701 girls). The expenditure on education in 1919-20 was $4,173,828. In 1918 the district tax revenues were $799,992.71; and the earnings and income from practically all the school lands was $485,252.06. In 1919 the State University had 56 professors and 913 students. In 1917 the State accepted the terms of the Act of Congress providing for Federal aid in vocational education.

RELIGION.—The United States Census of Religious Denominations (1916), gives the following statistics: Catholics 12,801; Latter Day Saints, Church of Jesus Christ, 9447; Methodist Episcopal 4293; Protestant Episcopal 3890; Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., 2514; Congregationalists 1951; Baptists, N. C., 1841; Disciples of Christ 763; Lutheran, Synodical Conference, 704; all other denominations 301. For further religious and educational statistics see CHEYENNE, DIOCESE OF.

RECENT LEGISLATION AND HISTORY.—The initiative and referendum was adopted in 1911 and the nomination of candidates for public office by means of the direct primary provided for at the same time. In 1913 the marriage of white persons with negroes, mulattoes, Mongolians, and Malays was forbidden. The sale of cocaine was regulated, an eight-hour day for workmen on public works provided for, railroads were made liable for injuries to and death of employees. In 1915 were passed the following: a measure placing the husband and wife on equal footing in regard to ownership of property, also an eight-hour law for women, a Workmen's Compensation Bill, and a mothers' Pension law. In 1917 the law authorized cities and towns to purchase land not over 80 acres in extent for cemetery purposes. Full power is granted to improve the land and to sell the plots to private owners in exactly the same manner as private cemetery companies. Any town establishing such a cemetery must be allowed to do so only by a referendum vote. The Federal Suffrage Act was ratified on 28 January, 1920, the Prohibition Act on 16 January, 1919. During the European War Wyoming's contribution to the United States Army was 11,393 men (.30%). The Wyoming members of the national army formed a part of the 91st Division at Camp Lewis, Washington. The summary of casualties among the Wyoming members of the American Expeditionary Force is as follows: deceased, 2 officers, 231 men; prisoners, 3 men; wounded, 14 officers, 426 men.

Xaverian Brothers (cf. C. E., XV—728b).—Since 1912 the Xaverians have become prominent in educational matters. Annually several members are sent to the Catholic Educational Conventions; at which some take active part in reading papers, disputations, etc. In 1915 the third superior general, Brother Chrysostom, died in Mayfield, England. As no general chapter could be held during the war, Brother Théophile acted as superior general till 1919, when the general chapter elected Brother Bernard (Gryson) an Englishman by birth and a Belgian by long residence, he having taught classes in the English department at Bruges, Belgium, for twenty-eight years. The same general chapter appointed a committee of the provincials of America (Br. Isidore), England, (Br. Cyril), and Belgium (Br. Adolph), to revise the constitutions and rules in conformity with the new Code of Canon Law. Steps have been taken to obtain the full approval of the Congregation of Religious. According to the revised constitutions the time of postulancy is changed to six months. To the canonical novitiate of one full year, another year's noviceship is added by the rule of the order, and temporary vows of three years precede final vows.

The tenure of office of minor superiors is three years, and limited to six. The election for delegates to the general and provincial chapters is also according to the Code. In the United States the Xaverians have opened six new foundations. Catholic high school, Clarksburg, W. Va. (1914); Catholic high schools at Wichita, Kans. (1916); Utica, N. Y. (1917); Richmond, Va. (1917); parochial school, Alexandria, Va. (1918); Holy Cross School, Brooklyn, N. Y. (1920). In 1921 the novitiate was transferred to Old Point Comfort, Va., where all the rules and regulations prescribed by canon law are strictly followed. The Brothers have (1921) a total of 32 establishments in the United States, of which 6 are preparatory schools for colleges, 5 of them accepting boarders, 7 high schools connected with parishes, with a teaching staff of 108 Brothers, 17 parochial schools taught by 92 Brothers. There are also 6 industrial schools and homes in charge of 51 Brothers. The number of Brothers otherwise employed is 13, and there are 6 superannuated and infirm, making a total of 270 professed members, with 29 scholastics and novices. The Brothers are in charge of 6540 boys.

Yii-kiang, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (FUCHOW OF EASTERN KIANG-SI; cf. C. E., VIII—634d), in China, was formerly erected under the name of Eastern Kiang-si on 25 April, 1885, it was changed into Fuchow on 25 April, 1920; finally, by a decree of 1 June, 1921, at the demand of Mgr. Clero-Renaud, Fuchow, which is a common name in China, was changed to Yii-kiang. It comprises 4 districts, namely, Fuchowfu, Kienchungfu, Kwangsinfu and Iaochowfu, covering an area of about 21,621 square miles, has a total population of 8,000,000 and is entrusted to the Lazarists. The vicar is Rt. Rev. Jean-Louis Clero-Renaud, Lazarist, titular Bishop of Elis, b. 18 June, 1866, appointed vicar Apostolic of Kiang-si, 10 August, 1912, consecrated 3 November, vicar Apostolic of Fuchow in October, 1920 (Yii-Kiang in 1921). He resides at Yii-kiang. There are in the vicariate (1920 census): 29,642 Catholics, 2868 catechumens, 15 European and 4 Chinese Lazarist priests, 13 native priests, 393 Christian settlements where a mission is preached every year, 24 residences, 24 churches, 117 public chapels, 12 oratories, 141 schools of prayer with 2509 pupils, 3 primary schools with 72 pupils, 30 catechists with 1702 students. The Sisters of Charity have a house with 262 teachers.

Young Men's Christian Association.—An international, interdenominational, Protestant, lay organization, founded for a predominantly religious purpose, but aiming now at the spiritual, intellectual, physical and social improvement (a) of its members; (b) of young men in general, and (c) of boys, the young men of tomorrow.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: GOVERNMENT, CHARACTER.—Due to the exclusively religious character of its foundation its members were at first Protestants only, but with the expansion of its activities it later admitted persons not belonging to any Protestant denomination, as well as members of those Protestant denominations (e. g. Unitarians) not at first included. Accordingly two classes of members were thereafter recognized: active and associate. Only active members have the right to vote and to hold office in the Association. To be eligible to active membership one must be a member in regular standing of an "evangelical" Church. Any young man of good moral character is eligible for associate membership. While the "evangelical test" for active membership has varied according to country and time the "Portland test" of the United States organization is the clearest definition of what is meant by "evangelical" (Christian in the title being practically synonymously used). This test, so-called because passed at the Portland convention in 1869, states: "That, as these organizations bear the name of Christian and profess to be engaged directly in the Savior's service, so it is clearly their duty to maintain the control and management of all their affairs in the hands of those who profess to love and publicly avow their faith in Jesus, the Redeemer, as divine, and who testify their faith by becoming and remaining members of churches held to be evangelical; and that such persons, and none others, should be allowed to vote or hold office."

"And we hold those churches to be evangelical which, maintaining the Holy Scriptures to be the only infallible rule of faith and practise, do believe in the Lord Jesus Christ (the only begotten Son of the Father, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, in whom dwelleth the fullness of the Godhead bodily, and who was made sin for us, though knowing no sin, bearing our sins in his own body on the tree), as the only name under heaven, given among men, whereby we must be saved from everlasting punishment."

Outside of America the membership qualification varies, the British organization admitting to full membership "any person who gives decided evidence of his conversion to God," while in Holland no restriction is made. A red triangle is used as the insignia of the Association, the color signifying sacrifice, and the three sides, the body, mind, and spirit to be consecrated to God.

The Association is a combination of civic units, each independent, which combine to form state and national organizations. Salaried officers (usually a general secretary and an executive secretary, and other minor officials), conduct the affairs of each unit under the supervision of the Board of Directors, who are elected by the active members. There are also committees of members, composed of volunteers, to whom is assigned supervision over various activities. There are in the United States three training schools for secretaries, one at Chicago, one at Springfield, Mass., and one at Nashville, and four summer schools for the same purpose. National conventions of delegates from the units are held every three years, no unit not observing the laws of the Association, especially that defining the status of active and associate membership, being allowed representation. The National Convention in turn elects the members of the International Committee. There are in addition state organizations meeting annually or biennially, similar in form to the national body, the chief purpose of these two general organizations being the establishment of new civic units.

Each civic unit usually has a home or club-house, as a rule providing a gymnasium, auditorium, and offices for the organization and very often rooming accommodations for a limited number of individual members. While each civic unit naturally does not participate in all the activities, the work of the organization as a whole includes Railroad (railroad workers), Industrial, Student, Army and Navy, Colored Men's, Educational, Physical, Boys', Foreign Work, and Religious Departments. Considerable attention is paid in many centers to immigrants. In the educational department are included general (usually night) schools, vocational and industrial training, while co-ordinated with it are the Bible classes which are a feature of nearly every unit, being conducted almost always by laymen. The expenses of the organizations are met by the membership dues and by contributions from the public, the latter amounting usually to about 25% of the whole, a custom intentionally adopted as a means of sustaining interest in the Association and its work.

HISTORY.—The Y. M. C. A. received its name and definite organization 6 June, 1844, in London, when George Williams, its founder, met with eleven associates to enlarge, and crystallize the work and purposes of an association for Bible reading and prayer which he had organized seven years before. Several societies of a similar nature had existed previous to this time, some as early as the seventeenth century, and some of the pre-existing societies joined the Association in a body. In 1845 the first paid secretary was appointed; in 1847 organized Bible work was started. By 1851 the Association had spread to many places in England, to Germany, Switzerland, France, and had been established in Montreal, Boston and New York in America. The first international meeting (United States and Canada) occurred in 1854, and the first intercontinental at Paris in 1855. The Central International Committee was formed in 1878 with headquarters in Geneva. In 1894 on the occasion of the jubilee of the Association, George Williams, its founder, was knighted by Queen Victoria. The British branch took up educational work in 1864 and in the World War 1914-18 performed welfare work among the soldiers and sailors, while since the war it has been active among the ex-service men.

In the United States the Association had attained a membership of 25,000 by 1860. The Civil War forced many of the units to disband and the life of the entire organization was threatened. However, the leaders turned their attention to the army, and welfare work consisting of devotional meetings, Bible and hymn-book distribution, sermons, and the like, and material aid of various kinds occupied the Association almost exclusively. As a result of their general introduction to the public through these activities the Association took on a new lease of life after the cessation of hostilities. More attention was now paid to the auxiliary works, such as physical and mental education and the organization recorded a rapid yearly increase.

In the meanwhile the question of the membership test was causing considerable discussion. The American organization at first followed the "Paris basis" of 1855 which reads as follows: "The Young Men's Christian Associations seek to unite those young men who, regarding Jesus Christ as their God and Saviour, according to the Holy Scriptures, desire to be his disciples in their doctrine and in their life, and to associate their efforts for the extension of his kingdom among young men." This was reaffirmed at Albany in 1866 but in 1868 at Detroit the "Evangelical Church test" was adopted. To define more clearly the term "evangelical" the "Portland test," as given above, was adopted in 1869. Gradually the individual units, which had at no time been unanimous in their test, adopted that of 1869, and by 1885 this test uniformly prevailed in the United States, the penalty for its infraction by a unit being exclusion from the conventions. Since 1885 the growth of the United States organization has been rapid, and the scope of its activities has gradually enlarged, till today it includes the various branches enumerated above. In the World War the Association in co-operation with the Government undertook welfare work among the soldiers and sailors, in cities, in camps and overseas. Its conduct of this work, particularly among the overseas troops, brought down upon the Association severe adverse criticism, chiefly because of its methods. Although many have claimed that these charges were unjustified it remains true that the Association was the only one of the various organizations thus engaged to be generally criticized by the soldiers. In distinctively religious lines, apart from its work of conducting Bible classes and devotional meetings and directing drifters back to their church, the Association has in recent years taken an active interest in Protestant proselytizing movements.

In 1916 the Pan-Protestant Congress at Panama inaugurated a movement to make Latin America Protestant (see PROTESTANTISM). The Y. M. C. A. gave the fourth largest proportionate donation for this work, while a further active interest is also being taken in the work. In the reconstruction work in Europe after the war both the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. have played a prominent part, the religious side of the work being strongly featured as one of the leading aims behind the material aid which is being given. In 1920 the Association reported 3789 centers; 6250 in Europe, 32 in Africa, 386 in Asia, 23 in Australasia, and 2098 in America. Its total membership in the United States in 1921 was 739,438, of whom 304,399 were active members. The total property and funds in the United States in 1921 was $121,000,000 and its total income $29,000,000.

CATHOLICS AND THE Y. M. C. A.—Attracted by the facilities for physical training and recreation which the Association afforded, and not fully understanding its religious character, Catholic young men in large numbers joined the organization as associate members. In 1914, according to reliable estimates based on statistics furnished by the Association officials (see Garesché infra), out of a total membership of 625,598 in the United States there were about 146,000 Catholics, approximately 23.5%. The total associate membership was 254,830, the Catholics constituting 57.34%. Exact figures are today unobtainable, but if the Catholics still constitute the same proportion (probably they are less numerous now, owing to the increased facilities obtainable in Catholic societies), they number about 240,000 in 1922. In many individual units in 1914 there were more Catholics than members of any other Church and in nearly all units the number of Catholics ranks high in comparison with those from other Churches. The presence of such a large number of Catholics in an association which was founded for a religious purpose under Protestant auspices and which today retains its religious aims and methods, in some points developed far beyond those of its early stages, raises various questions which may be summed up as follows: (a) Is the Association really a Protestant organization? (b) Does it make any difference from the point of view of religion and faith if a Catholic belongs to it?

Before answering these questions it will be well to explain the status of the Catholic in the Y. M. C. A. The fact that he is admitted only as an associate member can only be interpreted to mean that he is not a Christian in the sense in which the word is used in the title of the Association. In point of fact he is equivalently placed by the constitution of the Association in the same religious category as Jews and Unitarians. That this distinction was, as first formulated, intended to bar out Unitarians and that there was no thought of its reference to Catholics has always been asserted by the leaders of the Association and is undoubtedly true. They did not expect that Catholics would apply for admission to such an association. However, the presence of the clause proclaiming the Bible to be the sole rule of faith and practice safeguarded Protestant control when Catholics began to join. In justice to the Association it must be admitted that its leaders repudiate any intention of denying to Catholics the title of Christian: the Portland test, they say, was intended to define evangelical, not Christian. Granting this, it is clear that then the title of the Association should be evangelical or Protestant, not Christian which is a much more inclusive term than as used in the Association title.

The answer to the question as to the Protestant character of the Association is best given in the words of Association leaders. In 1915 the general secretary of the Chicago Y. M. C. A. said to a Catholic priest in reply to questions on the subject of Catholic membership, "The Y. M. C. A. is essentially a Protestant organization. In my judgment it should remain distinctly Protestant. I will be frank and say that in my opinion the Y. M. C. A. should not include loyal Catholic young men in its active membership. They are out of place there. . . . Indeed, taking into consideration the present [1915] attitude of the Catholic Church toward the Y. M. C. A. it is my belief that a Catholic young man shows a want of loyalty when he enters the Y. M. C. A." In 1919 the general secretary of the Y. M. C. A. International Committee in New York, speaking in behalf of the Inter-Church Emergency Campaign said: "When President Wilson wired the Y. M. C. A. that the United States needed it in the war, before I paid any attention to athletics, to educational work, I proceeded to form a committee on evangelical work in the churches. . . . The result was the evolution of a religious program. Prior to this evangelical work, the Y. M. C. A. had a few score of clergymen employed as secretaries. Now we have over 3,000 ordained secretaries. Now we have the direct leadership of such men as Clarence Barbour, President of Rochester Theological Seminary; President J. Ross Stevenson of Princeton [Divinity School]; President Henry Churchill King of Oberlin College; more than 200 clergymen, the leading clergymen of every denomination. We sent these 200 men overseas that the boys might hear the best preachers of the country. We sent 5,000,000 copies of the New Testament to the Allied armies. . . . When the story of the war is written, if the Y. M. C. A., yes, and the Y. W. C. A. are not on record as the identified Evangelical Church of America, then I, and many others, will hand in our resignations, for the 'Y' will have lost its interest." These statements make perfectly clear the fact that the Association is essentially a Protestant organization having for its chief aim the furtherance of Protestant principles and ideas. This aim is especially apparent in the co-operation extended to Protestant missionary work in Latin America, already referred to, and in the after-the-war work in Europe. A further indication of the Protestant character of the Association, is the action of the Central Branch at Philadelphia which has adopted a ruling, taking effect in the beginning of 1922, limiting in the future its respective non-Protestant groups to five per cent of the total enrollment.

The reconstruction work of the Y. M. C. A. is a combination of evangelization and material, educational and recreational aid, extended through centers chiefly in France, Belgium and Italy, including Rome. The interdenominational character of the Association leading them necessarily to adopt the "least common denominator" in religion, the spiritual education that they offer is as a consequence not acceptable to Catholics because of the minimizing of of practice and belief which it entails. Yet the leaders of the work went even further and in a pamphlet issued in Italy ("Che cosa è la Y. M. C. A. : ciò che si propone, etc."), announced that in addition to physical and intellectual training it proposed to give also a "spiritual education" through free conferences on spiritual and religious problems "characterized by greater liberty of thought and a wide tolerance, above and apart from any church or creed." Such a course was in effect a system of proselytizing although the Association in the same pamphlet disavowed any such intention. As a result of such actions on the part of the Y. M. C. A. and other similar organizations, the Sacred Congregation of the Holy Office issued a Letter to the bishops (5 Nov., 1920), warning them against such organizations, their methods, and aims, and their religious indifferentism as constituting a grave danger to Catholics who should accept their ministrations. Although this Letter was directed against several organizations the Y. M. C. A. was the only one to be named specifically. Of the Association the Letter, while acknowledging the material aid which it had rendered "to a large number of unhappy persons in the world war," and while finding no fault with its general material activities says, "this society indeed makes profession of a sincere love for young people, as if it had no dearer aim than to give them facilities for corporal and mental development; but at the same time it destroys their faith and declares that it proposes to purify it and to impart a more perfect knowledge of life 'above any church and beyond any religious creed.'" As to the attitude toward Catholic members in the United States it is only fair to add that with few exceptions there has been no attempt to proselytize among them. At times lukewarm Catholics on entering the Association have been urged to join their Church again, in accordance with the general policy of seeking to have its members affiliated with some church.

The answer to the second question as to the relation between Catholic faith and membership in the Association has in effect been already given. A Catholic member of the Y. M. C. A. cannot blink the fact that he is enrolled in a distinctively Protestant organization. Even though he utilizes only the recreational features he is constantly in an "evangelical" atmosphere of religious indifferentism (the theory that one church is as good as another), which is of itself sufficient to constitute a perpetual, at least remote, danger to his faith, and he is supporting by his membership and by his contributions all the activities which the Association conducts. There may, or may not be, for circumstances alter cases, any direct danger to his faith, but his connection with their work among the Catholics of South America and Europe, slight though this connection may be personally, is a fact which must be weighed in conscience by a Catholic when enrolling himself as a member of the Young Men's Christian Association.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION, although not officially connected with the Y.M.C.A., nor historically sprung from it, is similar in character and scope in its work for young women. This organization is the result of the uniting of several smaller independent societies originating in various countries, chiefly during the latter half of the nineteenth century. In Great Britain in 1855 two prayer unions with purely spiritual aims were founded simultaneously in different places. These two united in 1877 as the Y. W. C. A., with broader activities but with practically the same purpose. Special attention was thereafter paid to social work, the aim being to remedy conditions through hotels, traveler's aid, factory helpers and the like. The Association spread to the English colonies and also became connected with similar organizations in the United States. In the United States various women's societies were founded in the same period. The Y. W. C. A. of Boston was founded in 1866. A conference of twenty-three similar organizations was held at Hartford in 1871, the oldest unit member being the Ladies' Christian Union of New York. In 1875 this conference adopted the name "International Conference of Women's Christian Associations." In 1891 after a union with some Canadian societies the title "International Board of Women's and Young Women's Christian Associations" was adopted. In the meanwhile there were many other independent organizations, especially student societies in the Middle West. In 1886 nine of such state organizations united under the title "The American Committee," the oldest unit in this union being that founded at the State Normal School, Normal, Ill., in 1873. In 1906 the International Board and the American Committee united to form the "Young Women's Christian Associations of the United States of America." The World's Y. W. C. A., of which the American association is a member, was organized in 1894, the first world conference being held in 1898 in London. In the world conference in Switzerland in 1920, twenty-eight countries were represented. The location of the World's Association headquarters is determined by each world conference which meets quadrennially. The government of the Y. W. C. A. is essentially similar to that of the Y. M. C. A., and its activities are of the same general nature, there being specific differences because of the fact that their work is for young women and presents problems not arising in the men's organizations. A blue triangle is the insignia of the Y. W. C. A.

In 1921 the Association in the United States numbered 287 city and town units with a membership of 314,219, county units 27, with a membership of 8853, and 740 student units, with a membership of 61,508, the total being 1054 units and 384,580 members. These figures were incomplete and in 1922 there were said to be 1075 units and 559,000 members. According to the incomplete returns of 1921 the value of the real property of the Association in that year was $11,244,369, its expenses were $6,366,349, and its contribution to national, world's and foreign work was over $2,000,000. In 1914 out of a total membership of 342,305 it was reliably estimated on information furnished by various units that there were about 40,000 Catholic members (nearly 7 per cent of the total) in the organization.

The Young Women's Christian Association presents the same religious aspect as the Y. M. C. A. The "basis" of the British organization is as follows: "Faith in God the Father as Creator, and in Jesus Christ His only Son, as Lord and Saviour, and in the Holy Spirit as Revealer of Truth and source of power for life and service, according to the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

"The aim of the Y. W. C. A. is: To call young women and girls to the allegiance of our Lord Jesus Christ, the fellowship of His Church and the service of His Kingdom.

"To unite them in a fellowship of prayer, Bible study and service through which they may make their contribution to the spiritual, moral and social progress of the world.

"To make available for them all that will minister to character, mental capacity and physical health."

The basis of the World's Y. W. C. A. was at first the foregoing but the Stockholm conference limited it to the first paragraph of the same.

In the United States previous to 1906 the International Board admitted Catholics to full membership, including the right to vote, if a unit so desired. The American Committee granted voting membership to members of the Protestant evangelical Churches only. After the union of 1906 units which were formerly members of the International Board were allowed to retain their basis of membership; but the new body adopted the following specifications which are binding on all units with the aforesaid exception: "After the adoption of this constitution, any Young Women's Christian Association not privileged to become a charter member may be admitted to this organization upon application to the National Board and upon filing with it a copy of its constitution, showing that its active membership—that is, the voting and office-holding membership—is limited to women who are members of Protestant Evangelical Churches."

"By Protestant Evangelical Churches are meant those churches which, because of their essential oneness in Jesus Christ as their Divine Lord and Savior, are entitled to representation in the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ under the action of the Inter-Church Conference held in New York City, November, 1905."

The objective of the American organization is stated as follows: "To advance the physical, social, intellectual, moral and spiritual interests of young women. . . . To bring them to such knowledge of Jesus Christ as shall mean for the individual fullness of life and development of character, and shall make the organization as a whole an effective agency in the bringing in of the Kingdom of God."

The religious and Protestant character is further apparent from the following excerpts from its official Hand Book: "The objective of the Association is the development of Christian character. . . . This is the element which unifies all the work, which makes the cafeteria and the sewing class, the gymnasium and the dormitory, the travel class, and the cross country club, the Hallowe'en party and the warm welcome of the Association building as essentially religious in purpose as the Bible circle or the vesper service. In the profoundest sense of the word all work of the Association is religious work."

On another page the Hand Book, after stating that the Association's definition of Evangelical Churches is that of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, states: "In brief, then, the Association is in a position to render the deepest and most fundamental service to young women in that it is directed by those pledged to the fulfillment of its purpose, and voting power is vested in those who are members of the churches listed in the Federal Council of Churches, or eligible to be so listed."

The direct religious activities of the Y. W. C. A. are also practically the same as those of the Y. M. C. A. so that all things considered the question of Catholic membership in this organization is identical in all aspects with that of membership in the Y. M. C. A., even in the units which allow Catholics to vote.

Yucatan, ARCHDIOCESE OF (YUCATANENSIS; cf. C. E., XV—737c), in Mexico. The present archbishop is Most Rev. Martin Tristschler y Cordova, who has occupied the see since 1900. He was born in the Diocese of Puebla, 26 May, 1868, studied at the South American College at Rome from June, 1883 to August, 1893, doctor of philosophy at nineteen and of theology at twenty-three, ordained 12 December, 1891, elected Bishop of Yucatan, 28 July, 1900, consecrated 18 November following, first Archbishop of Yucatan 11 November, 1906.

The archdiocese has (1922) 27 parishes, 166 churches, 2 mission groups, 47 secular and 7 regular priests, 42 Sisters, 1 seminary with 16 seminarians, 1 college for men with 16 teachers and 231 students, 4 for women with 26 teachers and 724 students, 6 elementary schools with 26 teachers and 527 pupils, 1 orphan asylum for boys with 20 inmates, 1 charitable centre. Ninety per cent of the population is Catholic. Two societies are organized among the clergy and three among the laity.

On 24 September, 1915, Salvador Alvarado, Governor of Yucatan, sent a group of fanatics to invade the cathedral during the night; they destroyed the sacred images, the altars and even the organ, and desecrated the cemeteries. The Spanish clergy and the nuns dedicated to education in the college of St. Teresa of Jesus and Mary were exiled, their property seized and secularized, colleges, hospitals and institutions were confiscated by the fanatics until there was nothing more left. The bishop's house was converted into an official building. But little by little some of the clergy returned and have ventured to open schools. Finally several Yucatan gentry founded the "Universidad Ibero Americana"; but in this and in the private schools the law of religious prohibition is in force.

Yukon and Prince Rupert, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XV—738a), in Canada. The former prefecture apostolic was erected into a vicariate on 20 Nov., 1916. Its area is about 520,000 sq. miles. The present and first vicar is the Rt. Rev. Emile-Marie Bunos, b. at Sales, France, 24 February, 1864, ordained 28 March, 1891, elected titular bishop of Tentyra and made vicar apostolic of Yukon 13 June, 1917, consecrated at Vancouver 18 Oct. following, published 10 March, 1919. In 1921 the vicariate had 8000 Catholics, 5 quasi-parishes, 37 churches, 32 missions, 10 stations, 3 convents for women with 28 Sisters, 2 secular priests, 12 regulars (Oblates of Mary Immaculate), 2 seminarians, who are being educated in other dioceses, and 1 hospital. The secondary educational institutions are: 2 parochial schools, 1 academy, 1 Indian industrial school, 2 Catholic Indian schools conducted by laymen under the supervision of priests.

Yun-nan, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (cf. C. E., XV—738b), in China, has 37 parishes, 132 churches, 201 stations, 26 European missionaries, 16 Chinese priests, 1 convent for women "Chinese Maidens," 17,500 Catholics, 1 seminary with 40 seminarians, 1 college for women with 3 students, 1 normal school with 3 teachers and 23 pupils, 1 home for the aged poor, 19 orphanages, 1 hospital, 110 schools with 2100 pupils. There is no aid from the government for any of these institutions, and only one orphanage admits the ministry of priests. In several districts the association of the "Bona Mors" is organized. The vicariate is entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Paris, under the administration (1922) of Rt. Rev. Charles-Marie-Felix de Gorostazu, titular Bishop of Aila, b. at St. Vincent de Fyrosse, France, 6 October, 1860, appointed vicar Apostolic of Yun-nan 10 December, 1907, consecrated 29 March, 1908. He resides at Yun-nan-fu.

Zacatecas, DIOCESE OF (cf. C. E., XV—740b), in the State of Zacatecas, Mexico, is suffragan of Guadalajara. By a decree of 16 January, 1920, the boundaries of Zacatecas and that of St. Louis de Potosi were modified; making an area of about 22,806 square miles. The see is filled by Rt. Rev. Miguel de la Mora, b. 14 August, 1874, ordained 30 November, 1897, doctor of theology, superior and prefect of studies at the seminary of Guadalajara, magistral chancellor in November, 1908, elected 9 February, 1911, consecrated 7 May following to succeed Mgr. José Alva, b. 5 October, 1841; d. July, 1910. There are in the diocese: 26 parishes, 40 succursals, 129 secular and 7 regular priests, 2 congregations of men and 3 of women, and 100 Catholic schools.

Zagrab (AORAM), ARCHDIOCESE OF (ZAGRABIENSIS; cf. C. E., I—225c); in the ancient Kingdom of Croatia, formerly a part of Hungary but now in Jugoslavia. Most Rev. George Posilovic, who filled this see from 1894, died 26 April, 1914, and was succeeded by the present incumbent, Most Rev. Anthony Bauer. Archbishop Bauer, b. in this diocese 1856, the author of numerous works of apologetics and a member of the Southern Slavonic Academy of Sciences was appointed titular Archbishop of Pessinus 20 January, 1911, and made coadjutor to the Archbishop of Agram. His auxiliaries are (1921) Rt. Rev. Joseph Lang, and for the Greek Rite, Rt. Rev. Dominic Premus. In 1916 there were in this diocese 1,572,778 Catholics of the Latin Rite, 3074 Uniat Greeks, 144,932 Orthodox Greeks; 351 parishes, 622 secular and 75 regular clergy.

Zahn, JOHN AUGUSTINE, American author and scientist, b. at Lexington, Ohio, in 1851, d. in Munich, Germany, 1921. He was educated at Notre Dame (University, Indiana, and upon graduation entered the Congregation of the Holy Cross, and was ordained priest in 1875. He filled various positions in the Congregation, at one time being provincial from 1898 to 1906. He was the author (sometimes under the pseudonym of Mozans), of a number of books covering a large variety of subjects; among these were: "Evolution and Dogma," "Scientific Theory and Catholic Doctrine," "Along the Andes and down the Amazon," "The Quest of El Dorado." He was an enthusiastic Dante student and assembled at Notre Dame one of the three largest of the Dante libraries in America. He was a scholarly and brilliant writer. He was a member of the Roosevelt Scientific Expedition to South America and on that and other trips collected maps, photographs, relics, curios, etc., which were added to the valuable collection of fifteen hundred volumes of South American history and research work at Notre Dame University.

Zanzibar, NORTHERN, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF (ZANZIBARENSIS OF ZANGUEBARENSIS SEPTENTRIONALIS; cf. C. E., XV—750c), on the east coast of Africa, comprises the Island of Zanzibar, Pemba, and British East Africa (now Kena Colony), with the exception of the Kena Province, and the provinces north of the Kikuyu Escarpment; it is confided to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost. The population of the vicariate numbers 800,000, of whom 9000 are Catholics with about as many catechumens; the chief languages spoken are Kiswajili, Kikuyu, Kitaita and Kikambu. The present (1922) vicar apostolic is Rt. Rev. John Gerald Neville, C. S. Sp., titular Bishop of Carrhæ, b. in Dublin, Ireland, 29 October, 1859, appointed vicar apostolic 1 September, 1913, consecrated titular Bishop of Carrhæ 28 October 1913.

The mission has 22 priests and 11 lay brothers (members of the Society of the Holy Ghost), 211 catechists, 30 nuns (Sisters of Loreto, of the Precious Blood, and White Sisters), 66 principal and secondary stations, 13 churches, 30 chapels, 72 schools (three of which are high schools), with 3633 pupils; 5 normal schools, with 100 students; 5 professional schools, with 65 pupils; 9 orphanages, with 161 orphans; 2 leper asylums, with 100 inmates; 6 hospitals, 29 pharmacies, 3 asylums for the poor, with 100 inmates, and 1 junior seminary. There is no aid from the State for educational purposes, an annual sum being contributed from the government towards the upkeep of the leper asylum. Nine of the priests were called away during the War; four of the missions were closed, two being within the war zone, and the two others because of the diminished personnel, but at the present (1922), they are in full swing, and new ones have been opened. Three of the priests acted as military chaplains during the African Campaign, one of whom, Father Demaison, was decorated with the Military Cross; two houses were used as hospital by the government.

Zanzibar, SOUTHERN (DAR-ES-SALAAM; cf. C. E., XVI—85c), VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF. Before the year 1888, the Vicariate Apostolic of Dar-es-Salaam and the Prefecture of Lindi were under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Zanzibar, a member of the Society of the Fathers of the Holy Ghost. In the year the Benedictines of St. Odilia in Bavaria, to whom part of the district was committed, came to Dar-es-Salaam, and settled near the coast at a place called Pugu; the little band counted 1 priest, 9 Brothers and 4 Sisters. The following year during an outbreak of the Arabs, the station was destroyed, some of the missionaries were killed, others captured, but later ransomed at a high price. When at length the efforts of the missionaries bore fruit and the number of stations increased the mission was made independent and called the Prefecture Apostolic of Dar-es-Salaam (1894), with Mgr. Maurus Hartmann as superior; in 1902 the prefecture became the Vicariate Apostolic of Southern Zanzibar, under the government of Mgr. Cassianus Spies, and on 10 August, 1906, the name was changed from Southern Zanzibar to Dar-es-Salaam. On 12 November, 1913, the vicariate was divided into two parts, the northern region retaining the old name while the southern became the Prefecture Apostolic of Lindi, under the rule of Mgr. Willebrordus Ley. In 1905, a new persecution known as "Magi-Magi" broke out among the natives; almost all the stations in the prefecture of Lindi were destroyed and seven of the missionaries, among them the Vicar Apostolic, were killed, while the others had to flee the country for a time. In 1917, the missionaries of German nationality were prohibited from carrying on their missionary work and in September, 1920, the Vicar Apostolic, Mgr. Spreiter, O. S. B., and all his fellow-Germans were repatriated by the British Government. In the meantime Father Joseph Laue, with some missionaries, mostly belonging to the White Fathers, have taken over the care of the prefecture and vicariate by order of the Cardinal Prefect of Propaganda. In 1921, the vicariate was entrusted to the Swiss Capuchins and to the Fathers of the Institute of Consolation, and the prefecture to the Swiss Benedictines. In the thirty-three years that have elapsed since the separate mission was founded seventy of the missionaries have laid down their lives there; 1 bishop, 14 priests; 27 brothers and 28 nuns, all belonging to the Benedictine Congregation of St. Ottilien.

The boundaries of the Vicariate together with the Prefecture are: on the north from the Indian Ocean to Mbweni, then the boundary separating the civil provinces of Bagamoyo and Mogoro from Dar-es-Salaam and Rufigi, then the rivers Ruaha and Umerowe as far as the railway from the eastern coast to Lake Tanganyika, then along the railway as far as Kilimatinde; on the west a line from Kilimatinde along the railway as far as Lake Nyasa and 34' longitude, then along Lake Nyssa to the Portuguese territory, but so as to include the entire districts of Uhehe and Ugo and Ubena in the Vicariate of Dar-es-Salaam; on the south the river Rovuma as far as the Indian Ocean, i. e., the boundary between the British and the Portuguese territories; on the east the Indian Ocean, the rivers Mbenkuru and Ruhuyi separating the vicariate and the prefecture. The ecclesiastical boundaries are: on the north the Vicariate Apostolic of Bagamoyo; on the west the Vicariate Apostolic of Tanganyika; on the south the Prelature nullius of Mozambique. The mission is entirely within the Tanganyika territory, over which the British have a mandate since the War.

Almost all the natives use the Kisqahil language, though each tribe has its own language as well, the principal ones being Kihche, Kipogoro, Kigogo, Kingui, and Kinyassa. In the vicariate of Dar-es-Salaam there were according to the census of 1914, approximately 568,800 natives, while the prefecture of Lindi had 485,800. At the end of 1921, the vicariate had 7847 neophytes, 295 catechumens, 69 elementary schools, and 76 catechists; while the prefecture had 14,419 neophytes, 4,802 catechumens, 141 elementary schools and 161 catechists. In the eastern part of the vicariate there are 9 Swiss Capuchin priests, 6 Brothers, and 9 Sisters; while in the western part there are 6 priests of the Institute of Consolation of Turin. In the prefecture of Lindi, there are assigned to the mission 13 Swiss Benedictines (8 priests and 5 Brothers), and 6 White Fathers. While awaiting the separation of the three missions just mentioned, Father Joseph Laue of the White Fathers is administrator general.

Zemaiti, DIOCESE OF (SAMOGITIENSIS; cf. C. E., XIII—421), in Lithuania. The present incumbent of this see is Mgr. Francesco Karewicz, b. at Masiady, in this diocese, on 17 September, 1861; chancellor of the cathedral of Mohileff, and appointed bishop of Zemaiti on 20 February, 1914, in succession to Mgr. Cyrtowt, who died on 20 September, 1913. This diocese was erected in 1417 by the Council of Constance at the request of Witold the Great, with its see at Varna or Medininkai, and was confirmed by Pope Martin V in 1421. In 1849 it comprised the provinces of Kauna (Kovno) and Kiron, with an area of about 23,800 square miles. In 1864 the episcopal see, diocesan seminary, chapter, and consistory were transferred by the civil authorities from Varna to Kauna, and in 1895 the Church of St. Peter and Paul was declared the cathedral church of Leo XIII. On 26 April, 1921, the cathedral church on the five hundredth anniversary of the foundation of the diocese was made a minor basilica, the solemnities of the erection being held at Kauna on 11 September, 1921. The diocesan patron is St. John the Baptist, the external celebration being held on the Sunday before the feast of St. Peter and Paul.

In 1921 there were in the diocese: 360 parishes, 415 churches, 1 monastery of monks, 1 convent of nuns with solemn vows; 649 secular, 6 regular priests, 17 lay brothers; 1,300,000 Catholics; 1 seminary, 14 professors, 109 students; 1 university; 1 boys' college, 7 professors, 98 students; 1 girls' college, 8 professors, 90 students; 10 primary schools, 23 teachers, 500 pupils; 4 industrial schools, 12 teachers, 120 pupils; 12 hospitals and orphanages; 7 day nurseries; priests are permitted to exercise their ministry in all the schools. The Lithuanian Government supports all the Catholic schools in the diocese governed by Catholic associations like the Saulė (Sol) or Ziburys (Fax) or by private persons. Furthermore, in all neutral or mixed schools the doctrines of Catholicism are taught.

SOCIETIES.—The clergy have a mutual assurance society, and a diocesan temperance sodality. The following are the societies, among the laity: (a) Catholic Society of Lithuanian Women or "L. K. Moteru Draugijai," founded in 1908. It has 80 branches, publishes a review called "Motėris," and supports or directs about 30 institutions: schools, libraries, orphanages, etc.; (b) The "Motinė" ("little mother") association, for the support of youths pursuing high studies; (c) Society of St. Casimir, for publishing and distributing good books; (d) temperance societies; (e) the Action catholique; (f) the Christian Democratic Party; (g) the "Lietuvos Darbo Federacija" or Federation of Workmen; (h) St. Zita's Society, for servants; (i) Our Lady's Society, for servants; (j) St. Vincent de Paul conferences; (k) the "Ateitininkai" association of young students; (l) the "Pavasaris" association of Catholic young men.

There are 1,300,000 Catholics in the diocese, almost all Lithuanians. In the cities and some parts of the country there are groups that speak Polish at home, but they do not amount to over 4 per cent. There are 2 Catholic daily papers and 12 periodicals.

Among the clergy and laity who have died since 1912 mention should be made of Petrus Krauciunas, a layman, a master of theology, noted teacher, philologist, and patriot, who died in 1912; Joannes Balvocius, a priest and a popular writer; Gaspar Cirtautas bishop of the diocese, who restored and adorned the cathedral, and died in 1913; Riauba, Dovydaitis, and Juozapavici the first Lithuanian soldiers to die in the struggle to liberate their fatherland in 1918.

Notable diocesan events since 1912: (1) the preconization of the present bishop Mgr. Francisus Karevicius in 1914; (2) letter of Pope Benedict XV to the bishop in which he consoled the oppressed people of Lithuania and appointed 20 May, 1917 as the day on which a collection was to be taken up in all the churches in the world for the war victims in Lithuania (Welkollecte); (3) the nomination of Archbishop Achille Ratti, now Pope Pius XI, as visitor Apostolic to Lithuania; he came the diocese in January, 1920; (4) the 500th anniversary of the erection of the diocese; (5) the granting of the title and privileges of a minor basilica to the cathedral church at Kauna on 26 April, 1921; (6) the Bull "Maxime interest" of 9 June, 1920, transferring part of the civil province of Courland, with about 100,000

Catholics from the Diocese of Zamaiti to that of Riga; (7) the repulse of the Russian Bolshevist forces attempting to enter Lithuania in 1919; (8) the erection of a university with a Catholic faculty in Kaunas on 16 February, 1922.

For more than two years after the outbreak of the war Lithuania, and especially the Diocese of Zemaiti, was the scene of the most sanguinary fighting between the Germans and the Russians in which the country was laid waste. Various societies were established to repair the damages and alleviate the sufferings caused by the war. Chief among these are the "Draugija nukentejusicsms del karo Selpti" or "Society for aiding the war sufferers," "Litauischer Verein für Kriegshilfe" with 40 branches at Wilna, Kauna, and other places in Lithuania, and 100 branches in Russian territory, where 200,000 persons who had been forced into exile by the war were helped by this society. The society also supported 2 colleges or gymnasia, more than 100 intermediate and primary schools and similar institutions in Petrograd, Moscow, Voronez, and other places.
